On Monday morning the memoirs of departed ministers were read, and a profitable and fruitful period was spent in addresses upon the worth and work of the late ministers. Among them were many of the pioneer missionaries of the denomination. Public meetings were held and missionary resolutions submitted for the extension of the Connexional work both at home and abroad.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—On Friday evening last the third session of the Young Men's Missionary Band was brought to a close by a very successful meeting held in the Board-room of the Mission-house, Blomfield-street, Finsbury. Dr. Cecil Davenport, who has been a member of the band from its foundation, and who has been appointed as a medical missionary to Chung-king, Western China, bade his friends farewell. He urged the young fellows deliberately, yet humbly, to place themselves in God's hands, to be used according to his will. Mr. F. C. Bedford, a member of the committee, assured Dr. Davenport of the prayerful interest of the band in his future career. Addresses were delivered by Mr. A. J. Shepheard, president; Mr. S. R. Scott; Rev. J. W. Woods, of Clapton Park; Mr. N. H. Smith, of Mansfield College, Oxford; and Captain Hore, of Central Africa. They were characterised by spirituality throughout.

The Book World.

ORIGINAL FABLES. By Mrs. Prosser. 1s. Religious Tract Society. Excellent "morals" are pointed in a forcible manner. What with the bold type, capital illustrations, and animated style, these pages will rejoice the hearts of many children, and convey practical instruction at the same time.

IN OTHER LANDS, by Caroline Geary (3s. 6d. Digby & Long, 18, Bouverie-street, E.C.), is a collection of vivid notes, descriptive of journeyings in Spain, Italy, and Austria, with a chapter on "The humorous side of travel." The book is at once diverting, and full of information presented in very palatable form.

IN JESSIE VEITCH, THE SOLDIERS' FRIEND, also HELEN BERRIE AND HER CITY ARABS, we have the story of two devoted and useful lives spent for the glory of God and the good of men. It is an encouraging and stimulating record of all who think their talents are few, but would make the most of what they have. (1s. 6d. Andrew Stevenson, Edinburgh.)

BIRD PREACHERS. By Rev. A. N. Mackray, M.A. 1s. Religious Tract Society. These "friendly talks with little folks about Bible birds" make a volume which old as well as young will be the better for reading. Scripture is illustrated, and many lessons are enforced. Natural history information is conveyed in an admirable manner, a number of illustrations adding to the attractiveness of the book.

HELPFUL TRUTH. By Thomas Moor. 1s. Nisbet & Co. We rejoice to welcome this little book, the object of which is to remove doubts and fears concerning personal salvation, from the minds of such as desire to enjoy the peace of God. The gracious provision which God has made, and the dutiful privilege of man, are admirably set forth, and the book is calculated to minister spiritual profit to many who are in perplexity.

THE HEBREW BIBLE AND SCIENCE. By Rev. W. Collins Badger. 1s. Nisbet & Co. In the words of the preface, the author has endeavoured "to show that Scripture, rightly understood, and science, when correctly stated, throw light on each other." The endeavour is eminently praiseworthy, but the performance cannot be pronounced successful in every respect, as the author shows a disposition at times to deal arbitrarily with words.

FOR GOOD CONSIDERATION. By Edward Butler. Mr. Elliot Stock. These nine chatty chapters are a remarkable compound of logical acumen, spiritual penetration, sanctified common sense, and practical wisdom—a set of rare and goodly dishes of literary fare, garnished with the condiments of choice speech, and much of it having a strong, rich, legal flavour, that proves the author to be "a limb of the law." The essays are perfect models of high and pure thinking as applied to some of the varied spheres and functions of modern life.

STORIES FOR BIBLE READERS. By J. L. Nye. 2s. Sunday-school Union. A capital volume of incidents and illustrations respecting the Bible, and its use and power. Among other things, this work admirably shows what the Book is, and what are the grounds of our confidence in its teachings. The selections are from a wide field of literature, and they have been made with excellent judgment. The extended circulation of this attractive volume will certainly be a blessing, for the pages are likely to prove specially useful in instilling into the minds of the young a reverence for the Word of Truth.

ASPECTS OF SCEPTICISM. By John Fordyce, M.A. Second edition. Elliot Stock. This book is what it professes to be: a voice to the present time. The reader will find the varied sceptical objections and contentions of the present day clearly stated, and given largely in the very words themselves of their authors, while with much pains, candour, and point, the antidote is supplied. The tone and spirit of the writer are unexceptionable. Having read the book throughout, we can pronounce it free from the "odium theologicum." Mr. Fordyce has aimed at the kindly, patient and unbiassed treatment of adversaries; and if a conciliatory spirit can win them, or a calm and temperate confutation unsettle their views, he bids fair to succeed. The treatment under the head of inspiration, however, seems to us somewhat inadequate. No one, indeed, need believe in any uniform mode of inspiration (see Heb. i. 1), but every Christian apologist should be precise and emphatic, touching the fact that "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God." The style of the book is clear, and the thought well evolved.

FROM COT TO CROWN: A Book for Young Men, By Old Cornish. Partridge & Co. A small book, but brimful of true manliness and true godliness. Pointed headings—e.g., "Wanted Men," "Creeds and Confessions," "Pump and Pray"—introduce the reader to pithy counsels, apt quotations, and pious thoughts, clad in simple, vigorous Anglo-Saxon. The title of the book is somewhat misleading, suggesting a tale of fiction, but the book itself leads aright, showing how to prize the home below and win the home above. We should like to see it in every Y.M.C.A. library, and among the prize books of every school.

Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton have issued cheap editions of William T. Thayer's extremely well-written lives of GEORGE WASHINGTON, the first President of the United States, and ABRAHAM LINCOLN, the pioneer boy, who also climbed his way to the chair of the White House. The names of Washington and Lincoln stand at the top of the muster roll of famous men in the great Republic, and we welcome these popular presentations of lives that have done so much to inspire the youth of this generation to high motives and noble deeds. The volumes are beautifully printed and attractively got up; as the price is only 1s. 6d. they ought to be in great request as school prizes.

THE DIVINE LEGATION OF PAUL THE APOSTLE. By E. B. Underhill, LL.D. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. A valuable contribution to the study of Christian evidences and apostolic doctrine. The life of Paul is sketched in a lucid manner, with special reference to his call and equipment by the Lord Himself, and his important mission to the Gentiles. The numerous interviews of the Apostle with his Divine Master, and the guidance he received from the Holy Spirit in his work and movements, are enlarged upon in an instructive manner. The whole constitutes a conclusive argument for the authenticity of the Epistles with which the Apostle's name is associated, and an urgent incentive to follow him, even as he followed Christ.

SONGS OF THE SPINDLE AND LEGENDS OF THE LOOM. Selected and arranged by H. H. Warner. Within the covers of this little book are spinning and weaving songs, stretching over a period of three thousand years—from the days of Solomon to our own times. The object has been to give back to a few of the Westmoreland men and women the "venerable art torn from the poor." Not only are the covers of hand-made Langdale linen; all the various processes in the production are hand-work, the printing is old style; the paper hand-made. The illustrations are chaste and appropriate. There is much of human interest about the book from first to last, and we hope many will procure it, and so encourage the benevolent effort which it represents. The price is 3s. 6d. (larger size, limited in number, 10s. 6d.), to be had from N. J. Powell & Co., 101, Whitechapel, E.

LETTERS FROM A MYSTIC OF THE PRESENT DAY By Rev. R. W. Corbet. Mr. Elliot Stock. We are not surprised that these fragmentary but thoughtful and deeply experimental expositions of great spiritual truths have reached a second edition. Mr. Corbet endeavours reverently to penetrate beyond the surface meaning of the Divine revelation, and to bring out of it things new as well as old. The brevity of the meditations indicate, as the preface states, that they are intended to be suggestions or seed thoughts rather than fully developed statements of the inner meaning of the sacred oracles. The reader may not be able in every case to follow Mr. Corbet's reasonings, but he may certainly gain great help in a patient search after the knowledge of the deep things of God. The chapters are marked by sustained thought, but are by no means "mystical" in the sense of being obscure.

JOSEPH ROGERS, M.D. Edited, with a preface, by Professor Thorold Rogers. 7s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin. This unadorned and excellent narrative preserves for posterity an important chapter in the history of poor law administration. It is a notable instance of the thorns and briars that strew the path of the social reformer. Even now many of the traditions that rule the treatment of our pauper population are the remnant of a barbaric régime; from Dr. Rogers's story of the difficulties he met with in introducing rational and humane methods, we can imagine how much worse they were a quarter of a century ago. The name of Joseph Rogers ought to be had in grateful remembrance by all who have to eat the bitter bread of poverty, and we are glad to believe that this book will help to perpetuate his memory as a workhouse medical officer who sacrificed much for the sake of his unfortunate fellow creatures.

The new and enlarged edition of Mr. Isaac Pitman's PHONOGRAPHIC DICTIONARY is the outcome of the aggregated experience and judgment of many able writers of the system. We should say it approaches sufficiently near perfection to constitute it a standard of appeal in the case of all disputed or doubtful outlines. It is indispensable to all students and practitioners of phonography who wish thoroughly to know the useful and mystic art. As a pronouncing dictionary it is also of great value. (4s. cloth. Pitman & Sons.) From the same publishers we have received a revised edition of Rev. J. H. Bacon's GUIDE TO THE IMPROVEMENT OF THE MEMORY. The preface states that many have testified to the benefits derived from the instruction contained in the work. Without practically testing Mr. Bacon's system, we could not, of course, offer a dogmatic opinion as to its merits, but we are prepared to believe that no small help will accrue to those who master and consistently apply it.

THE SAVING SPIRIT. By Rev. John Harries. 3s. 6d. Elliot Stock. The aim of the author has been to exhibit the Biblical doctrine of the Divine personality of the Holy Spirit, and his work in the mediatorial economy; also to show what the Spirit of God does for the sinner, and what the sinner must do for himself in the whole matter of salvation. Eight in number, the chapters illustrate many precious truths. In one place the author holds the view that a personal appearing of Christ to reign on the earth for a thousand years is responsible for indifference to special effort for the revival of God's work. Against this we place the incontrovertible and important fact that not a few of the most earnest missionary organisers in England and America, and a large number of devoted labourers in the foreign field, are throwing all their energies into the work of evangelisation, from the definite conviction that, in the plain sense of the words, "the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." Far from inducing sloth, as suggested, the expectation of Christ's manifestation in kingly glory, as we certainly find it foretold in Holy Scripture, is a stimulus to ever-increasing activity on the part of those who accept the words of the Apostle, "If we suffer, we shall also reign with Him."

BUDDHISM, IN ITS CONNECTION WITH BRAHMANISM AND HINDUISM, AND IN ITS CONTRAST WITH CHRISTIANITY. By Sir Monier Monier-Williams. John Murray. The "Duff Missionary Lectures" for 1888 are here presented in the form of a truly comprehensive treatise on a subject of peculiar interest. In reading this goodly volume we sit at the feet of one who knows whereof he testifies. In view of present-day confusion, the work is very welcome, and may be heartily commended to those who seek a reliable statement expressed in a popular manner. The entire range of Buddhism is surveyed, from its origin in India to its latest developments in other Asiatic countries. Bringing to bear upon his work a life-long study of Brahmanism and its sacred Sanskrit, and embodying the results of personal investigations in the sacred land of Buddhism as well as in Ceylon and on the borders of Tibet, Sir Monier is thorough from first to last, and never more readable than when, combining loving discipleship of Christ with great erudition as an Orientalist, he estimates Buddhism as compared with the glorious Gospel of the Blessed God. He corrects a very general misconception with regard to the prevalence of this hoary system. There are not, he says, more than 100 millions of real Buddhists at the present time, Christianity with its 430 to 450 million adherents having now a numerical preponderance over all other religions. Buddhism, adds Sir Monier, contains within itself the germs of decay, and its condition to-day is one of increasing disintegration and decline. The work is embellished with a number of illustrations.

The Special Summer Number of The Graphic (1s.) contains the usual attractive features in picture and story, besides a finely executed coloured Supplement, "Patient Heroes," after a painting by Lady Butler.

THE BANKER'S DAUGHTER, by Dr. M. L. Rossvally, and THE CLARES OF CLOVERLY, by Fannie Eden, are the two latest issues of the admirable series of "Penny Stories for the People," being published by Messrs. W. B. Horner & Son, 27, Paternoster-square, E.C.

GUERNSEY AND ITS BAILIWICK: A Guide and a Gossip. 1s. John Gardner, Old Government House Hotel, Guernsey. To those about to take a holiday, and who wish to find a quiet spot, this attractive guide will afford timely information. Mr. J. Linwood Pitts, the writer, has contrived to condense much that is valuable into a small compass; he places his readers in possession of facts which could only be gathered otherwise by wide reading. In addition to matters relating to Guernsey, the book contains views, maps, and a summary of attractions to be found in the adjacent islands of Alderney, Sark, Herm, and Jethou.

LAY EVANGELISM IN THE VILLAGES. By E. B. Dingley. This is a paper read at a Methodist Circuit Convention. The employment of lay evangelists, such as Mr. Champness, of the Joyful News Mission, supplies, is advocated. 1d. "Joyful News" Book Depôt, Rochdale.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE BIBLE. By H. E. J. 1d. Penman & Co, 33, Furnival-street, Holborn. The contents of the books of the Old and New Testaments are stated in verse. The interesting task could hardly have been more satisfactorily accomplished. Children or others who learn these rhymes will undoubtedly be well on the way to a good understanding of the drift of Scripture history and teaching.

LE SOUVERAIN PONTIFFE ET L'EGLISE DE ROME, SOUTIENS DE LA VÉRITÉ. Par L. Gaussen. The Société Internationale de Traités, Bâle, has republished, in pamphlet form, with notes and appendices, this powerful address, delivered in 1843, in the Theological School of Geneva. Finding in the papal system the fulfilment of prophecy as to the great apostasy from the faith of Christ, the author at once presents an argument for the truth of Holy Writ, and urges friends of doctrinal purity to bear unflinching testimony for God and righteousness against superstition and sin. Timely when originally delivered, this forcible address is still more emphatically so in the present day.

FATHER DAMIEN MEMORIAL.—On Monday last the Prince of Wales presided at Marlborough House over the first meeting of the committee for promoting a memorial to the late Father Damien. A scheme was adopted, embracing a monument on the spot at Molokai where Father Damien's remains are interred; the establishment of a leper ward in London, to be called the "Father Damien Ward," together with the endowment of a travelling studentship to encourage the study of leprosy; and a full and complete inquiry into the question of leprosy in India. Mr. Edward Clifford, the Duke of Westminster, Sir James Paget, Mr. J. Hutchinson, Sir W. G. Hunter, Cardinal Manning, Rev. Hugh B. Chapman, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Lord Mayor of London, addressed the meeting.

DR. JUSTIN D. FULTON, in a letter from Rome, after giving some account of Christian activity there, says:—"The workers here need encouragement and support. The Pope is fighting against the Bible and liberty. Why do not Protestants fight for them? They ought to do it. Yet they come to Rome, and, leaving the evangelical churches empty, run off in droves to St. Peter's and other churches, thus bowing down to Rome. Never was I so prepared as now to witness the fulfilment of the prophecy recorded in Revelation xviii., 'And she shall be utterly burned with fire; for strong is the Lord who judgeth her.' The fact is, these churches in Rome, with their pictures and statues, looked at by Protestants from all the world, bolster up Romanism. They are born and built out of superstition, constructed to support error, kept in vogue because Christ's name is mentioned, while the doctrines of his Gospel are ignored. Protestants sadly need to be strong in their convictions, and turn their backs on Romanism."

BLIND IN BELFAST.

A VERY earnest work has been going on in Belfast for the last sixteen years. The workshops for the industrious blind, which were then established, have been an untold blessing to a great number of men and women, who are thus enabled to support themselves and their families. Another great benefit has been brought close to them in the establishment of the "Home Teaching Society." The blind home teacher, Mr. Leech (who was introduced to their notice by Dr. Armitage, the great friend of the blind), has over seventy blind pupils, who are learning to read and write in Braille type, and some few in Moon's type. Many of them are able to read well and to correspond with their friends by means of the Braille writing frames.

The teacher, who is himself blind, is a true Christian man, and the great Mission work done by him in enabling so many to read with their fingers the blessed Word of God, has met with most gratifying success. His work and labour cannot be estimated simply by the number of visits he has paid. Many give a portion of their dinner-hour daily to receive lessons in the workshops. The teacher's visits to the blind have all the true mission element in them; he wins their hearts by his kind sympathy, and is daily becoming the confidant of all their little cares and troubles; though he goes among them without any alms or doles, he is welcomed as a true Christian friend.

The entire Bible in Braille type and also in Moon's type are in the blind library in the workshops, 32, Royal-avenue, and several other excellent and interesting books. The hon. secretary of the Mission is Mrs. Aickin, Murray's-terrace, Belfast.

CAPE GENERAL MISSION.

SOME months ago we gave an account of three railwaymen who started for South Africa as self-supporting missionaries, to fill posts under the Cape Government Railway, and preach Christ as opportunities offered themselves. Many will be glad to hear of their passage out; they were true and faithful witnesses for Jesus Christ, and had decided blessing among the passengers; they are now firing engines from three separate railway centres, and are seeking faithfully to serve their Lord.

There is quite a little band of missionaries leaving England in connection with this Mission, on August 14, by the Roslin Castle. Mr. Spencer Walton, the director, and his wife; Mr. Wilfred Malcolmson, of Belfast, who supports himself the first year; Mr. Walklet, of Dr. Guinness's College, who can sing the Gospel as well as preach it; Mr. Michael Coates, of Sunderland, and Mr. Dudley Kidd, who comes out at his own charge, and will act as honorary assistant-director. All these will devote the whole of their time to mission work, and will probably be stationed to begin with at the gold and diamond fields, while there will be a centre of activity at Cape Town.

There is still considerable difficulty in obtaining native evangelists for the compounds, but no doubt this will all be removed in God's own time and way. Other missionaries are under consideration; one to take up the railway work, which will be unitedly undertaken with this Mission and the Railway Mission in England.

Earnest prayer is asked for God's blessing on this new departure, which undoubtedly is a direct answer to the many prayers of that devoted servant, Mrs. Osborn, and the president, Rev. Andrew Murray. Mr. Arthur Day, of Mayfield, Lancaster-road, Wimbledon, has kindly undertaken to act as honorary secretary. We need hardly add, owing to the enormous rush to the gold and diamond mines, this will prove a wonderful field of labour for this young Mission

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

For the thirty-seventh time, on Tuesday evening, last week, Rev. Dr. W. Meynell Whittemore preached the annual Flower Sermon at St. Katherine Cree Church, Leadenhall-street, London, the text being Ps. xciii. 15: "As a flower of the field." He chose for his subject "The Daisy." A large number of young people were present, each one bringing a bunch of flowers, which were afterwards forwarded for distribution amongst the poor in a large London parish.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The very interesting "Testimony" of Marsden Monthly Meeting concerning the late John Bright is published in extenso in The Monthly Record of the 15th inst. It is well worthy of perusal and possession.

In the same paper Samuel Baker gives a chatty and hopeful sketch of "Camping near Hoshangabad, India." He says: "We feel much encouraged by our tour, as there seem to be indications that the Gospel is making its way in the minds of the people. The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few."

The Friends' Missionary Advocate of this month presses the necessity that "missionary boards determine, in God's name, to have a sanctified treasury," and records two resolutions of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of Friends in America against sensational or other methods of raising money upon which they could not ask the Divine blessing.

The first Woman's Foreign Missionary Conference of Ohio met in Cleveland on the 2nd ult., and was attended by fifty-five delegates, representing seventeen auxiliary societies. Esther Butler and Amanda Kirkpatrick are likely to settle in Nankin, China, and open an orphanage and training school for native Bible-women at an early day. It was reported at the conference "that both the young emperor and his bride have been brought into contact with the Gospel."

CONGREGATIONAL.

Mr. W. Huckett, of New College, has been ordained missionary to Madagascar in connection with the London Missionary Society.

Mr. Edwin Smart, of the Evangelisation Society, commenced on Sunday week his ministry at Blenheim-road Church, Hornsey-road, N., a branch of Park Chapel, Crouch-end.

Rev. G. C. Morgan has held a month's evangelical mission at Westborough Chapel, Maidstone, as a result of which fifty-three members have been added to the fellowship of the church.

On Thursday last, Rev. Clement Clemance, D.D., was presented with an illuminated address by the congregation of Camberwell-green Chapel, on his retiring from the pastorate of that church.

Memorial stones in connection with St. Mary's Mission-hall, Morley, have been laid. For some time past the mission has been conducted in a hired room, but a site has been acquired from the Earl of Dartmouth for a permanent building, which is to accommodate about 300 persons.

At Darwen, Lancashire, active measures are being taken for new mission work. A new church is to be built in Bolton-road. Duckworth-street Church intend building a mission school in Highfield-road, and it is expected that before long a mission school will be built on the Lee.

Circulars have been issued by the Lancashire Congregational Union to the ministers in that county, inviting aid in prosecuting itinerant evangelistic preaching in the villages and rural districts during the months of July and August. Last year thirty ministers itinerated in seventeen districts. This year there are to be thirty-five districts, and a still larger number of ministers are expected to engage in the work.

METHODIST.

Evangelism is developing and taking more aggressive forms in the United Methodist Free Churches denomination. Rev. Alfred Jones reports that the four Connexional evangelists are fully engaged until about the spring of next year, and he has so many applications for many of the months of the year that several other evangelists could be employed.

A number of ladies from the suburban district of Headingley are actively employed in connection with the recently formed Leeds Wesleyan Mission. These ladies visit the sick, relieve the poor, and instruct the young and ignorant. They have commenced an interesting class for the mental and moral improvement of the young women employed in the mills of the neighbourhood.

The Primitive Methodist Missionary Society has asked Rev. W. N. Barleycorn, who has just returned to West Africa, to make a translation of the Gospel of Luke into the Bubi language. The British and Foreign Bible Society has undertaken to print this translation free of cost to the Missionary Society. It is also intended to translate into Bubi an additional number of Methodist hymns.

The members of the London Wesleyan Mission Bands Union conducted a vigorous campaign of evangelistic work on Whit-Monday. They had stirring meetings throughout the day in three centres—in and around the headquarters of the East London Mission, at Battersea, and at Wood Green, N. At the last mentioned place, about 400 members of the Salvation Army joined 600 Methodists in an open-air demonstration in the evening.

The Methodist New Connexion and Primitive Methodist Conferences have been in session at Dudley and Bradford respectively. Rev. A. R. Pearson, of Longton, was elected President of the former, and Rev. J. Toulson of the latter Conference.

In an article on Village Methodism in this month's South Wales Crusader, Rev. George Eddy avers that in a village where he conducted a mission, at which he had seventy converts, the converts were next month served with notices to quit their cottages unless they discontinued to attend the Wesleyan chapel; while four servants lost their situations in one household, and a coachman and his wife theirs in another; and the village wheelwright had to remove to another village.

SALVATION ARMY.

The Army have taken possession of a large theatre in Douglas, Isle of Man.

A public welcome will be accorded by the Army friends to Miss Stirling, "the prisoner of Chillon," in Exeter Hall, next Wednesday evening.

An important "Council of War" will be held in Paris from June 30 to July 3. A very interesting time as well as a season of much blessing and power are expected.

The power of God has recently been manifested in the conversion of a notorious character at Berwick; she was a great drunkard and a blasphemer, but is now saved, happy, and working for the King of kings.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth's Bible-readings, which have been held every Wednesday in the Portman-street Rooms, have been seasons of much refreshing and power; they are now announced for the Council Chamber, at the Exeter Hall.

A publican of Kampen, in Holland, came to the Mayor requesting him to stop the "performances" of the Salvation Army, as he was being very much damaged in his trade through them. His best customers had got converted, and he sold less drink. To the astonishment of the publican, the Mayor replied that he was glad to hear the news, and that he would be intensely pleased if Salvation temples were opened in other parts of the town with the same result.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. J. T. M'Gaw, the newly-appointed general secretary of the English Presbyterian Church, has arrived in London, and entered upon his duties at the Church offices, East India-avenue, E.C.

The Presbyterian churches of Newcastle held a united open-air service on the Town-moor on the evening of Sunday week, which was attended by a vast concourse of people. The address was given by Rev. Richard Leitch. This was the first of a series of services intended to be held every Sabbath evening during the summer.

The foundation-stone of a mission church was recently laid at Black Callerton, near Newcastle-on-Tyne. This is one of the spiritually neglected places in the county of Northumberland. There is at present no place of worship at all in the Black Callerton district, and the Presbyterians are the first to meet the needs of the people in this way. The mission is connected with the Presbyterian Church at Stamfordham, of which Rev. D. Merson is the pastor.

At the meeting of the North London Presbytery last week, Dr. Monro Gibson gave in the report of the evangelistic committee, which mentioned that the expectations respecting the appointment of Mr. Robert Stark as organising agent have been more than realised. No fewer than 120 ministers and laymen have given in their names as willing to undertake evangelistic work wherever desired. Open-air services were never so extensively carried on as now.

BAPTIST.

Rev. Carson Graham, of the Congo, will hold special missionary meetings on June 23 and 24, at the Baptist Church, Teddington, S.W.

Connected with the American Baptist Missionary Union are 279 missionaries, 2076 preachers, and 134,413 church members; 10,388 were baptized last year, 5337 of these being converts from heathenism. Of the 642 churches of native converts, 406 are self-supporting.

In connection with the annual assembly of the Gloucestershire and Herefordshire Baptist Association this year, in addition to the ordinary business meetings, a conference was held for the deepening of the spiritual life and power, which was conducted by Mr. W. P. Lockhart, of Liverpool.

A number of prominent laymen of the Baptist denomination assembled last week to discuss the question of the formation of a Baptist Social Union, on the basis of similar societies existing in most of the large cities of America. A committee was appointed to consider certain details of the scheme and report.

Most of the Baptist County Associations have expressed approval of the resolutions passed at the Annual Assembly of the Baptist Union in May, in favour of the amalgamation of the "Particular" and "General" Baptists. It is urged that Baptists should form only one denomination, and act altogether in home and foreign mission work.

Rev. J. and Mrs. Ellison, of Mymensing, East Bengal; Rev. C. S. and Mrs. Medhurst, of Tsing Chu Fu, Shantung, North China; Rev. Robt. and Mrs. Spurgeon, of Mahariporc, East Bengal; Rev. H. R. and Mrs. Phillips, of San Salvador, Congo; Rev. W. R. James, of Serampore; and Rev. W. Williams, of Trinidad, are now on a visit to England to recruit their health.

Highgate-road Chapel, of which Rev. James Stephens is pastor, reports a membership of 654, a nett increase of 48 during the preceding twelve months. During the year the sum of £372 was given by the Church and Sunday-schools to foreign mission work. The numerous agencies in connection with the church are reported to be in a very flourishing condition.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Rev. James Wells, of Pollokshields Free Church, Glasgow, is to have his semi-jubilee celebrated on Thursday, June 20.

Rev. John Robertson, Stonehaven, has been chosen, by a considerable majority, as successor to Rev. John McNeill, in the pastorate of M'Crie Roxburgh Church, Edinburgh.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Methodist mission tent is pitched at Gilford, co Down, and is being attended night after night by large and attentive congregations.

A public meeting has been held at Dublin for the purpose of forming a Dublin branch of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

A Gospel mission has been conducted in the Presbyterian Church, Ennis, by Mrs. Jennie E. Caldwell, of America; it is stated that much good has been done.

The Seamen's Mission at Belfast has been energetically worked during the past year, and has afforded the opportunity of preaching the Gospel to hundreds of sailors of various nationalities.

The annual Methodist Conference has been in session in Cork during the past week, and has assembled under the dark cloud of the appalling railway disaster near Armagh, by which nearly a hundred persons, who were attending the annual excursion of the Armagh Methodist Sabbath-schools, lost their lives. On Saturday a most interesting conversation on the spiritual work took place in the Conference, and reference was made to remarkable religious awakenings which recently occurred at Monaghan, Dromore, Lisburn, and Dunmanway, and in which scores of persons were led to decide for Christ, and are now earnestly working for God.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Mr. William Johnson, of the firm of Lincoln, Bennett & Co., Sackville-street, Piccadilly, a warm-hearted Christian gentleman, and a devoted friend of the Wesleyan Methodist Church.—Mr. Lancelot Smith, a prominent member of the Wesleyan Church, Green-lanes, Stoke Newington, N.—Rev. Samuel Alexander, formerly rector of Termonmaguirke, co. Tyrone, Ireland.—At 36, Thomson-street, Dundee, Mrs. Andrew Scott; she was blessed to the conversion of numbers of railway men, and also to the poor she visited, and by whom she will be much missed.—Rev. Thomas Eaton, rector of West Kirby, Cheshire, and until two years since one of the residential canons of Chester Cathedral.—Rev. B. A. Edwards, vicar of Bettwsynrhos, Abergele, and brother of the Bishop of St. Asaph.

Personalia.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe has so far recovered that it is hoped he may reappear in his own pulpit on Sunday.

President Harrison is about to abolish the Sunday morning inspection in the American army, and all other unnecessary military exercises on the Day of Rest.

Ex-President M'Cosh, of Princeton, is now completely recovered from his serious illness, and was able to lead in the exercises when the General Assembly visited the University during its recent sittings at New York.

Rev. Jacob Freshman and his wife, of the Hebrew Christian Work, New York, have returned from their journey to Jerusalem, and are now in London. When in Paris, Mr. Freshman spoke in the Congregational Church on his trip to Palestine, and addressed other gatherings. He will remain here a few weeks, and will be glad to preach or lecture on the Jewish people, or on Jerusalem. Communications to Mr. Freshman may be addressed to our care.

Mr. and Mrs. Matthews, of the Maloga Aboriginal Mission, have arrived in London, accompanied by the two aborigines, Paddy and Jennie Swift. They are desirous of holding meetings throughout the country, wherever the way may be opened up, descriptive of the mission work among the aboriginal tribes of Australia, and they will be glad if friends will communicate with them on the subject as early as possible, since the period of their stay in England will be comparatively short. Mr. Matthews' address is care of Mr. J. T. Matthews, 72, Cornhill, London, E.C.

MISSIONARIES FOR MOROCCO.—A party of missionaries proceeding to Mogador, Morocco, to join Mr. E. F. Baldwin there, will be present, and will speak at the Aldersgate-street noon prayer-meeting to-day (Friday).

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JUNE 23.—Deuteronomy V.

VER. 1.—All Israel were summoned to hear the words of Moses, because no one was excepted from their range. And the end of hearing should always be learning, keeping, and doing (James i. 22, 23).

Ver. 3.—"Not with our fathers" may mean not with the patriarchs, who had simply the covenant of circumcision; or it may mean that the covenant of Sinai was ratified not only with the generation which received it, but with all others represented in them.

Ver. 4. "Face to face."—Not in dark visions, as of old to the fathers (Job iv. 12, 13), but openly and clearly, so that all the thousands of Israel might hear and understand. Our face-to-face vision is yet to come (1 Cor. xiii. 12; Rev. xxii. 4).

Ver. 5.—What a vivid idea does this give us of the work of a mediator (Gal. iii. 19); one who stands between God and men, speaking to God for man, and to man for God.

The repetition of the ten commandments here is very interesting (6—21). There is some slight alteration in the words. The things commanded are the same, but the reasons and setting are a little different. In Exod. xx. the ground for the fourth commandment is taken from the creation of the world; here from their deliverance from Egypt. Is there not, therefore, a suggestion of the reason why we keep the Lord's Day, that Jesus rose from the dead, leading captivity captive. In the fifth commandment the promise is added which is quoted in Eph. vi. 3. The last five commandments are coupled together, as they were not in Exodus, which reminds us that they are all of a piece, and we must take them altogether (James ii. 10, 11).

"He added no more," therefore the law is perfect; He wrote them in stone, therefore it is permanent. How the conscience which has not experienced the blood of Jesus shrinks from the holiness of God (24, &c.). But such fear has no saving element in it. In spite of all, a man may go back to sin and calfmaking. The yearning of God's heart expressed in ver. 29 is very touching. It repeats itself in many parts of the Bible. "Oh that thou hadst hearkened!" (Isa. xlviii. 18). "How often would I have gathered thy children" (Matt. xxiii. 37). But God is willing to give us such a heart (Ezek. xxxvi. 26).

Remember that our well-being depends on our obedience (29, 32). All God's commandments have our truest welfare as their end and aim. He forbids those things which we should be eager to renounce, had we the same knowledge as He has. He enjoins those things which we would gladly do, could we see, as well as He does, the end from the beginning.

MONDAY, JUNE 24.—Deuteronomy VI.

Ver. 1—3.—Obedience to God's Word is the one condition of true prosperity and increase. Lands still flow with milk and honey for those who have learnt to obey; and though the literal longevity which was so dear to the Israelites is not ours, yet they live long in a few years whose lives are constantly yielded to the will of God. We live in deeds not hours.

Ver. 4.—A better rendering has been proposed: "Hear, O Israel; Jehovah is our God, Jehovah alone." The basis of religion is in the assent of the understanding to the unity of God's nature, and the love of the heart towards Him. These two verses are reckoned by pious Jews as one of the choicest portions of Scripture. They write them on their phylacteries, and say them at least twice every day. In this they resemble the scribe (Mark xii. 32). We must love God with the love which He alone imparts, sincerely, strongly, superlatively, intelligently. Not that we can produce such a love by effort, but by asking the Holy Ghost to shed it abroad within (Gal. v. 22; Rom. v. 5).

Various methods are here prescribed for maintaining religion in heart and home. First, by meditation (6). Secondly, by the religious training of children (7). Thirdly, by pious discourse and conversation (7). Fourthly, by the frequent reading of the Word. When books were scarce, isolated texts inscribed on walls would be of great service; we too may use them; but we must never let reliance on texts take the place of prolonged Bible study.

Ver. 10—12.—Needful cautions are given lest prosperity should wean their hearts from God. We need to offer Agur's prayer (Prov. xxx. 6).

Ver. 13 was quoted by our Lord in Matt. iv. 10.

Ver. 16 was also quoted in the same temptation (Matt. iv. 7).

Ver. 13.—To swear by the name of God is used for the open avowal and confession of Him (Isa. xlv. 23; Rom. xiv. 11).

Ver. 18.—It is only when we are doing all the commandments of God that we can expect Him to fight for us. Constant failure indicates lack of consecration.

Ver. 20, 21.—Let us never forget that we were slaves, and have been redeemed; and are now required to be the slaves of Christ, as devoted to the new Master as once to the old.

TUESDAY, JUNE 25.—Deuteronomy VII.

Ver. 1—5.—Israel is strictly cautioned against all friendship and fellowship with the people and abominations of Canaan (Eph. v. 11). We must be merciless in our separation (2). So in the New Testament Christians are forbidden to marry not in the Lord, and equally stringent rules are given about worldly intercourse (1 Cor. vii. 39; 2 Cor. vi. 14). Where these commands are violated, misery is inevitable. God can drive out the sevenfold power of sin from our hearts for all those who will hand the battle over into his hands, and are willing to cut off and destroy whatever would suggest sin (Exod. xxiii. 24, xxxiv. 13).

Ver. 6—11.—God's reasons for thus cautioning his people. First, that He had chosen them to be his own (6). Secondly, the freeness of his grace which had no cause outside itself (7). Thirdly, the holy covenant into which he had entered, as the faithful God, from which He would not recede. What incentives were these to obedience! Surely as He was only for them they should be only for Him. And there is not one of these arguments that does not apply with even tenfold weight to ourselves.

Ver. 12—15.—The promises to obedience are enlarged upon with touching copiousness and fervour. Love, blessing, multiplication, freedom from sickness, are freely promised. Let us claim them also.

Ver. 16—26.—Whatever be the strength of our inbred corruption, let us fearlessly go against it. He who redeemed us from the penalty can surely deliver us from the power of sin (Rom. v. 10). Let us well remember what God has done already (18). The work may not be accomplished in a single moment (22), but it shall be done. We, however, must give sin no quarter (25). Knox said, "Pull down the nests, and the rooks will disappear." We become like the objects on which we set our hearts, whether good or evil (26; 2 Cor iii. 18).

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 26.—Deuteronomy VIII.

Ver. 1—9.—Fresh incentives are here given to induce obedience. They were first asked to remember the wonderful past, which was calculated to reveal so clearly the evil and perverseness of their hearts, that they might be humbled and led to walk with care and watchfulness. They were bidden also to remember the supplies which had been given them, of manna, and clothes, and physical strength. Our Lord quoted from this paragraph in his conflict with Satan, and surely we, too, may count upon participating in similar blessings. Then Moses expatiates on the goodness of the Land of Promise. Is it not our portion to pass through trial which is intended to reveal us to ourselves, and to give us fresh views of the loving care which is ever at hand to provide us with all we need? And the sorrows of life are not meant as the punishments of rebels, but the chastenings of sons (5; Heb. xii. 5, 6). Let us, however, not wander ever in the wilderness; but let us live by faith in that good land of promise, drinking of the ever-springing water of life, and eating of the rich provisions of God's love.

Ver. 10—16.—Prosperity is full of temptations to us all. It is much harder to walk with God in the sunshine of success than in the nipping frosts of failure. Have we forgotten Him in his gifts?

Ver. 17—20.—The cure for this forgetfulness is in giving constant glory and praise to the loving Giver of all. In everything give thanks. And let us remember that the mental and physical power which win us bread are the direct gifts of God, and therefore are capable of being withdrawn. Of all He will most strictly demand an account, when He comes to take an account of his servants (Matt. xxv. 19).

THURSDAY, JUNE 27.—Deuteronomy IX.

Moses sets himself anew to convince the people that it was not on account of any worthiness in them that God was prepared to do such great things, in driving out their enemies before them. Let God go before you, and drive out your inward foes, not for your worthiness, but for his great mercy. Boasting is for ever excluded from all share, whether in our justification or sanctification (Rom. iii. 27).

One great reason why the land was given them was on account of the wickedness of the inhabitants (5). The iniquity of the Amorites had become full (Gen. xv. 16). The contagion of their sin would have spread to infect the world, so they were mercilessly extirpated. The love of God to the race was obliged to be severe on those who were flagrantly sinning against their own nature.

During the remainder of the chapter (7—29), Moses reminded the people of their rebellions. It is well, when we are tempted to elation, to listen to that faithful monitor conscience, recording the evil past. We are apt to forget our provocations, especially when the smart of the rod is over, and need to remember, and forget not. We all have our Horebs, Taberahs, Massahs, Kibroth-hattaavahs, and Kadesh-barneas (22, 23).

Again and again would the people have been destroyed, had it not been for the intercessions of Moses on their behalf (18, 20, 25—29). Ah! how often had we been put down from our positions of usefulness and privilege, had it not been for the secret intercessions of One who has not fasted only, but died for us! Mark well the arguments advanced in this prayer by Moses; these are they which prevail with God. Let us make use of them, not for ourselves only, but for others. We need to emulate Moses in his life of intercession.

FRIDAY, JUNE 28.—Deuteronomy X.

Some commentators consider ver. 6 and 7 misplaced, and belonging to the second chapter, whilst the Samaritan version adds a longer list of stations, giving the general outlines of the exodus. But the main point is to notice the marks of God's unexhausted favour to his people, in spite of their provocations. First, He gave them a second transcript of his law (1—4). Next, He led them forward to Canaan. Thirdly, He selected one of their tribes to stand before Him always to minister. What a lovely description of the position into which Jesus has introduced us (Rev. i. 6). We may be well content to have no inheritance among men, if the Lord is ours in all his glorious fulness.

Here is our duty to God (12—15).—To fear Him with the fear born of love. To walk with Him in his ways. To love Him with the love his Spirit inspires. To serve Him with all our being. We are too prone to give Him less than all. If you cannot give all; ask Him to come and take all.

Here is our duty to ourselves (16, 17).—There is pain in the use of the knife (Col. ii. 11). But who can tell the blessedness with which Jesus fills the soul, which is willing to taste his death, and to pass through death into the risen life. We have to see to this side of it; to the incessant mortification of our self-life, Christ will see to the constant inpouring of his Divine life (Rom. viii. 13; 2 Cor. iv. 10).

Here is our duty to others (18—22).—Remembering God's tender love to others, we should show them the same, being imitators of God, as dear children (18). Remembering God's love in times past to ourselves, we should deal with needy ones as He dealt with us (19—22). Be specially careful of strangers, lonely hearts, wanderers, and prodigals (Heb. xiii. 1, 2, 3).

SATURDAY, JUNE 29.—Deuteronomy XI.

With this chapter closes the introduction to the enumeration of statutes and judgments, which follows in the next chapters. One further plea for obedience backed by many arguments.

Ver. 2—7.—A recapitulation of the wondrous past. Do we often enough stir our hearts by recalling what God has done?

Ver. 8—17.—A description of the fair land which God had prepared for his people; and of the blessings that would accrue to obedience (1 Cor. ii. 9, &c.). We need to remember that a like obedience is demanded of us, and is the condition of fruitfulness and blessedness. Our Lord Jesus lays great emphasis on obedience (John xiv. 15, 21, 23, xv. 10). We do not obey to be saved, but being saved we obey. What a contrast between the life of effort and that of trust is suggested by the description of the difference between the laborious irrigation of Egypt, and the blessed rains which God would send from heaven.

Ver. 18—25.—Again the people are exhorted to con the holy words of God. They were to be their incessant meditation; and it was on this condition being fulfilled that God undertook to drive out their foes. Then (23). We must be saturated with the word of God, if we would live an overcoming life.

Ver. 26—32.—One final appeal is made, as the blessing and the curse are set clearly before the people. This choice was to be constantly repeated to them in the land of promise. Further particulars were given afterwards (xxvii. 11; compare Josh. viii. 33). We are constantly passing beneath these mountains. Be it ours to know the Gerizim of Matt. v. 1—12. Blessing and blessedness from the outstretched hands of the ascending Lord (Luke xxiv. 51).

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, June 30.

REVIEW OF THE QUARTER'S LESSONS.

GOLDEN TEXT: ROM. iv. 25.

I. THE TRIUMPHAL ENTRY took place on Sunday of Passion Week. It was a strange beginning to a week which was to have such a tragic end. Prophecy had foretold the event (Zech. ix. 9); Jesus foresaw it, and made preparations for it (Mark xi. 2). There was a good deal of genuine enthusiasm prompting it, though based upon a mistake concerning Jesus as King. He understood its value, and knew that what seemed like a triumph was but the beginning of the end.

II. THE REJECTED SON.—This parable was delivered on the Tuesday following the triumphal entry. The chief priests were opposed to the popular movement in favour of Jesus; in the husbandmen, whom even they themselves condemned, they were obliged to see themselves reflected. This only enraged them the more. But they are not alone in the guilt of rejecting the Son. He comes to men in the Gospel; from all who hear it God may justly look for the fruit of faith and love. Where these are not found, men are guilty of the great sin of rejecting Christ.

III. On the afternoon of Tuesday, Jesus answered the Scribe's question, and declared THE TWO GREAT COMMANDMENTS. Both are included in love. "Love is the fulfilling of the law" (Rom. xiii. 10). Love to God fulfils the first table of the law; love to men fulfils the second. The second of these is impossible without the first. True love to God is the necessary condition of love to men. And only the love of God in Christ can inspire love to Him. We love Him, not because the law commands it, but "because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts" (Rom, v. 5). How near was this questioner to the kingdom of God—yet outside!

IV., V. The predictions in these two lessons were uttered on Mount Olivet, on Tuesday afternoon and evening. They foretell not only THE DESTRUCTION OF JERUSALEM, but the general course of events from that time until the end of the age; and THE COMMAND TO WATCH is given in connection with more particular descriptions of features that will mark the close of the present age. True watchfulness is connected with praying, with waking, and with working.

VI. THE ANOINTING IN BETHANY took place on the Saturday before the triumphal entry, and is inserted here to introduce the betrayal. The incident is a touching and memorable illustration of love prompting to self-sacrificing service; enduring most painful criticism; yet receiving the best possible reward. However much our service may be misunderstood by others, it is rightly understood by Him to whom it is rendered.

VII. "THE LORD'S SUPPER" was instituted on Thursday night—"the same night in which He was betrayed." The service is commemorative. It is intended to help the memory to recall Him. The bread and wine present in symbol his broken body and shed blood. It is to be observed by his disciples, not to save them, but because they are saved. It expresses our personal appropriation of his death for our salvation.

VIII. THE BETRAYAL followed immediately after the agony in Gethsemane. Its motive was desire for gain. To Judas, the silver was more than the Saviour. The circumstances connected with the betrayal considerably aggravate its guilt. But the end of Judas may well warn men against preferring the world in any form to Christ.

IX., X. JESUS BEFORE THE COUNCIL, and JESUS BEFORE PILATE.—The first of these was an irregular meeting of the Sanhedrim, before which Jesus appeared after his arrest in the garden. It established the fact of his innocence. No witness was found against Him; and only by his own avowal of Messiahship could a semblance of reason for condemning Him be found. The appearance before Pilate was necessary to get the sentence of death confirmed and carried out. Here, too, his innocence was declared. Pilate, though not without desire to act justly, yet consented to deliver for crucifixion a man whom he pronounced "a just person."

XI. JESUS CRUCIFIED.—A more painful or more ignominious death could hardly have been chosen. Yet the reproach attaching to the cross could not destroy his cause. Never did his love appear more wonderful than here. "He was delivered for our offences." This gives each of us an interest in his death. What we deserved, He endured.

XII. JESUS RISEN.—About the fact of the resurrection of Christ no reasonable person can have any doubt. The evidence is too strong, the witnesses were too many, to leave us in uncertainty. "He was raised again for our justification." The resurrection is as necessary to the Gospel as the cross (1 Cor. xv. 3, 4; Rom. viii. 34).

The review suggests: (1) What a dreadful thing sin is!—It appears in its true character during the Passion Week—in Judas, the priests, Pilate, the Jews, the Roman soldiers.

(2) What a lost condition men must be in!—The means by which God would save them reveals the awful character of their doom. It is impossible to make light of the consequences of sin before the incidents of that last night and the day of crucifixion. If only such a death could save us, how lost we must be!

(3) What wondrous love was that of Jesus!—The cross as powerfully displays the love of God in Christ as it reveals the wickedness of men. Such love cannot be rejected without incurring greater guilt, and being exposed to severer doom.

Notices.

☞ OWING to numerous complaints from recipients of THE CHRISTIAN and other papers in India, we would advise senders to write across the postage stamps and wrapper, "Stamped, 1½d." This would prevent the stamps being removed by dishonest carriers, and the consequent demand for double postage.

REV. ROBERT LENNIE, late of New Westminster, British Columbia, has removed to Nevada City, Nevada Co., California, U.S.; and Rev. N. L. Rockey, late of Bignour, is now at the Memorial Boys' School, Cawnpore, N.W.P., India. They would be glad if the friends who kindly send THE CHRISTIAN would in future please forward them to their new addresses.

France has not passed the necessary law for giving effect to the North Sea Liquor Traffic Convention, hence it has not yet come into force.

Books for Outward-bound Ships.—Commander WILLIAM DAWSON, of the Missions to Seamen, writes:—As our stock of literature is exhausted, may I appeal for disused books and periodicals, to be sent prepaid to the Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, London, W.C., or to its nearest chaplaincy. We also need several thousand white "crash" bags, made the size to take a Graphic or Illustrated London News. A pattern bag would be sent.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

SCOTTISH PRESBYTERIAN LADIES might with advantage follow the example of their American sisters. During the recent sittings of the Northern Assembly in New York, a missionary prayer-meeting was held every day for a week by ladies from all parts of the country.

FRANCE.—For four years M. Durban has been carrying on a good work in Hyères, exclusively among the Roman Catholics. Formerly a member of this communion himself, M. Durban knows how to get a hearing for the truth. A score of people have completely broken with Rome and accepted the Gospel, and the young men, nine in number, have been formed into a Y.M.C.A.

PARIS.—Any evangelical minister remaining over the Lord's Day in Paris is invited to communicate with Pastor Dez, 48, Rue de Lille, whose pulpit is not fully supplied for the special English service, during the Exhibition, at 11 a.m. In the afternoon there is opportunity for helping at the Y.M.C.A., 160, Rue Mont-Martre, or at the undenominational McAll Mission, 31, Avenue Rapp.

ASCENSION DAY is becoming associated with open air religious meetings, as well as picnics, among the Protestants of Continental Europe. The Salvation Army has constituted its review day in Switzerland, and this year the proceedings were almost as full of encouragement as enthusiasm. Other evangelistic organisations in various cantons arranged outings, which were improved by open-air Gospel meetings very largly attended.

LOCUST PLAGUE IN ALGERIA.—The agriculturists of this region are engaged in fighting another locust invasion. Fires have been lighted to reduce the evil, but the fuel has been exhausted before the mass of the invaders, which presented an unbroken front of six miles. Civil and military authorities have combined in driving back the enemy, but with little, if any success. Indeed, a south wind has carried a cloud of the insects into France. Last year Christian succour was sent to the poor French colonists of Algeria, and it seems as though the same will be necessary again this year.

THE NEW TESTAMENT in the Efaté dialect has lately been seen through the press by Rev. D. Macdonald, Australian Presbyterian missionary to that island. The translation is the joint achievement of Rev. J. W. Mackenzie, another missionary in Efaté, and Mr. Macdonald. This is the second complete translation of the New Testament published for the New Hebrides, the Aneityumese being the first. Three thousand five hundred copies of the Efatése Testament have been printed. The British and Foreign Bible Society are bearing the expense, but it is expected that the Christianised natives, by sending supplies of arrowroot to Melbourne for sale, will in a short time liquidate the whole amount themselves.

THE FREE CHURCH OF THE CANTON DE VAUD, Switzerland, has a membership of four thousand, and is very zealous in good works. The members give a large amount of their substance for the maintenance of Christian effort, and besides their pastors and evangelists, they support in Africa a most prosperous mission amongst the Maywamba, north of the Transvaal, and amongst the same people on the coast at Lorenzo Marquez. In ten years they have gathered into the fold of Christ 1280 heathen, 300 of them last year on the coast. One of the most striking features of the church's home work is the Gospel temperance movement in the Canton; through its agency many former drunkards have been reclaimed, and are now "clothed and in their right mind," and enjoying the liberty of the sons of God.

THE QUESTION OF THE SABBATH is engaging much attention on the Continent. From September 25 to 27 next a congress on the subject will be held in one of the halls of the Exhibition at Paris, under the auspices of the Minister of Commerce and Industry. The subject will be treated from hygienic and social points of view, but at other meetings, to be held at the same time, the religious phase will be considered. In Belgium the Minister of Railways has taken up the question of the weekly rest day, and effected remarkable reforms. Already some two hundred goods trains have been stopped from running on Sundays, and eight thousand workmen who formerly toiled in the central depôts are free all day. In other departments much has been done to a like end, and where the respite is not complete, work is reduced to the lowest possible limit. At the same time the offices of commercial houses in the large towns have taken to closing half day, while the post and telegraph service has been so rearranged as to liberate the employés every alternate Sunday.

PROTESTANTS IN SPAIN.—The Daily News correspondent in Madrid writes that in the province of Ciudad Real, the Civil Guards and the authorities have had considerable trouble in protecting the Protestants and their chapel from the rest of the villagers. A procession, instigated by the Jesuits and priests, attempted to attack the Protestants. The Mayor ordered the Evangelical Church to be closed for an indefinite time, though it had been opened in due form. The Protestants then assembled for worship in the house of one of their congregation. They were fined because their singing could be heard in the streets, and the Mayor told them he could not answer for their lives if they stayed another week. The priests even prosecuted the Protestants for an alleged insult to the very procession which attacked their chapel. All applications for redress and the re-opening of the chapel have met with no response from the Minister of the Interior, though a Liberal Government is in office. The only reply made was that it is impossible to interfere, as everybody knows the state of things in the provinces.

NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

PULVERMACHER'S WORLD-FAMED GALVANIC BELTS, for the cure of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION and DEBILITY, have received Testimonials from three Physicians to Her Majesty the Queen and the leading Physicians of Nine London Hospitals, including Forty Members of the Royal College of Physicians of London.

The distressing symptoms of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION and DEBILITY are speedily removed by means of Pulvermacher's World-famed Galvanic Belts, which are so arranged as to convey a continuous electric current direct to the affected parts, gradually stimulating and strengthening all the nerves and muscles, and speedily arresting all symptoms of waste and decay.

Dr. C. HANDFIELD JONES, F.R.C.P., F.R.S., Physician to St. Mary's Hospital, says: "I am satisfied that Mr. PULVERMACHER is an honest and earnest labourer in the field of science, and I think he deserves to meet with every encouragement from the profession and scientific men."

Dr. H. A. ALLBUTT, M.R.C.P., 24, Park Square, Leeds, writes, October, 1888: "I always recommend with confidence Mr. PULVERMACHER'S BELTS. Ladies recovering from illness incidental to their sex will find these BELTS of vast assistance in restoring lost nerve power."

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

ADVANCED PHTHISIS.

Mrs. EDWARDS, of HULL.

On the 9th of January in the present year, Mr. E. Edwards, of 4, Charles-terrace, Derby-street, Beverley-road, Hull, consulted me upon the case of his wife. He was encouraged to apply to me by an article in the Christian Herald, and by the advice of a Christian lady in Hull.

The patient having had a family very fast (six in six years), having also suffered hæmorrhage from a varicose vein of the leg, had been weakened in constitution, and nine months before the application to me had taken a chill, which was soon followed by a little cough, languor, and loss of appetite. These symptoms were not removed, and in the natural course of the disease they gradually increased, until the time her husband consulted me, when the cough was violent, and the expectoration had become very purulent; great emaciation and weakness had ensued, and dropsical swellings had begun to appear.

On the 23rd January I heard from Mr. Edwards: "Cough and appetite a little better; pain in the chest relieved by the liniment."

In the course of the next month several letters reported the patient to be gaining strength, the night sweats had disappeared, cough very much better; also expressing gratitude to God for the "wonderful progress."

On the 4th May Mr. Edwards writes: "I think it my duty to write and testify to the great value of your treatment. My wife's was a very bad case of phthisis. Now she can perform her household duties as before. She has gained a stone in flesh since first writing you. You can print her case if you should wish. God spare you for a long life."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. T. L. Cuyler, D.D., of Brooklyn, U.S.A.

Our next issue will be a Double Number, price 2d.; it will contain a special and extended report of the chief addresses at the Mildmay Conference. The subjects to be treated are of fundamental importance, and we invite our friends to aid us in giving the report as wide a circulation as possible.

An important question arises in connection with a decision, last week, of Mr. Bushby, the Worship-street magistrate. An officer of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children had appeared to prosecute a man for neglecting to provide his offspring with adequate food and clothing. The magistrate raised an objection to the effect that only the Guardians of the Poor or the "next friend" of the child could legally prosecute in such cases, and he dismissed the summons. In its report of the case The Daily Telegraph very appropriately asked, "Who will protect the children?" We trust an effective answer to that question will be given in connection with the Bill now passing through committee in the House of Commons.

Very pathetic is the story unfolded in connection with the murder of an acrobat at the door of a London music-hall last week. A young girl who, against her father's wishes, had joined the troupe, succumbed to the strain which such a life involved, and, three months after leaving the troupe, died of consumption. Her father, driven to desperation by her death, and the failure of summonses taken by him against her employer, whom he considered responsible for his bereavement, took a fearful revenge by fatally stabbing him.

Although the case of the girl attracted some public attention at the time, owing to the alleged cruelty to which she was subjected in her training, there seems some doubt as to how far this was true, it being contended that her employer was a kind-hearted man. But it is certain that she suffered greatly from the unnatural character of the life, and that it ruined her constitution. And if such disastrous results accrue under a "kind-hearted" employer, it furnishes a ghastly supposition as to the sufferings of children under a callous one. Yet these performances are sustained by the general public, including parents who, no doubt, are careful enough of their own children, while careless as to the welfare of those of others.

Under the title of "A Dream of the North Sea," Mr. James Runciman has written a marvellously realistic and graphic narrative, describing the perils and needs of the deep sea fishermen, with the benefits conferred, and to be conferred, upon them by the hospital and mission work so earnestly and successfully directed by Mr. E. J. Mather. We hope in an early issue to give some extracts from this thrilling story; meantime, we counsel those who wish to see a splendid piece of literary work, done in the interests of a noble cause, to procure a copy of Mr. Runciman's book. (5s. Nisbet & Co.)

While medical practitioners and others are discussing the claims of M. Pasteur's treatment for the prevention of hydrophobia, we are glad to observe that Christians are canvassing the subject on other grounds. In a communication to The Pall Mall Gazette, Mr. Edward Maitland states a strong case admirably. Pasteur's inoculation method involves vivisection, and it is contended that this is a renunciation both of humanity and of Christianity. Having maintained that the torture of animals is not human but subhuman, Mr. Maitland says:—

> We hold that even if human life could be saved by means of vivisection—if the world were so perversely constituted that good could be got by doing evil—it would be no gain to humanity; but rather would humanity be the richer by the loss of those who, knowing what vivisection is and means, would accept for themselves benefits procured through it. It is no part of my present purpose to demonstrate the uselessness or mischievousness of Pasteurism. It is enough for us that the thing is wrong. There are moral limits to every pursuit, to that of knowledge and of health, as well as of power, profit, and pleasure. And the pursuit becomes unlawful when these limits are overpassed; to make an exception on the ground of the strength of the inducement is but to say that a temptation has only to be a strong one to justify the yielding to it.

These are pertinent and weighty words, and we trust they will at least induce Christian people to hesitate before declaring for practices which, it is more than probable, will in a short time be pronounced scientifically fallacious. For ourselves we hold by the axiom that the thing which is morally wrong cannot be scientifically right.

In a recent number of the London edition of The New York Herald the serious question is asked, "Are the Africans to be alcoholised?" There are only too good grounds for the query. The recognition of the Congo Free State as an independent country, and the application of free trade to the territory, have led to the importing of huge quantities of "the vilest and cheapest and most deadly alcoholic poison, distilled from grain and potatoes, mingled with a dash of fusel oil," the profit being about 75 per cent. The result is that about one-fifth of the population are already victims to drink.

It is very far from creditable to the Governments concerned, that the state of things under this introduction of civilisation should be such as to warrant our contemporary in asserting that "from a philanthropic point of view, it would have been better a thousand times for the vast population of Central Africa to be converted to Islam and sobriety rather than to Christianity and alcoholism." Will not some of our leading men take up this matter? There is no time to be lost, now that the Congo railway will very shortly increase the facilities for the wholesale destruction of the natives, to the profit of a few unscrupulous traders.

Mr. Henry E. Clark, of the Friends' Foreign Mission Association, who has been for many years a missionary in Madagascar, has written to us in reference to the paragraph in our last week's issue on Dr. Cust's new book, and the charge he brings that some English missionaries in Madagascar countenance slavery. Mr. Clark says that it is altogether incorrect to say that English missionaries in Madagascar countenance either slavery or the slave trade; that on the contrary their action is gradually undermining the system, and is preparing the way for its ultimate abolition.

Now that "the time of the singing of birds is come," grave interest attaches to the statement in The Hospital of June 1 that no fewer than a hundred and ten millions of birds are slaughtered in America every year "because fashion wills it." It is not unlikely that the plague of caterpillars which is now being felt in some portions of our own country is traceable to a great extent to similar merciless folly. It seems useless to appeal to those who wear such disgraceful trophies; nature's own retributive appeal to the husbandman may be more successful.

"England's treatment of the people of India adds nothing to her glory." So says Mr. Bancroft, the eminent American historian, in one of his books ("California Pastoral"), and the latest instance of British misrule illustrates the shameful truth of his words. The following statement has recently been made by the late minister of the Maharajah Holkar:—

> A man aged forty-seven years, who was lately defendant before the court of a magistrate, charged with having ill-treated a child-wife eight or nine years of age, wanted to go away from the locality, and applied to the British police for a guard to enable him to leave the place and take the minor with him without fear of interference from her parents. The British people's representatives in India escorted a closed carriage, in which were seated this man and the girl-minor, prevented the parents from approaching their child, and kept them off till the man had carried her away from her parents to a place about a thousand miles away from the scene.

That such an outrage upon justice and morality should not only be possible, but aided and abetted by the ruling power, is another foul stain upon the British Government of India. Well may the writer of the narrative ask: "If this child had been the offspring of an Englishman, and the scene London, would the British people have tolerated such conduct on the part of the British police?"

So apt are we to associate Blue Books with long rows of figures and disheartening statistics of crime or poverty, that a report lately issued upon the Blue Book of Heligoland (which has a population of about two thousand) is most refreshing in its simplicity. There is stated to be very little serious crime in the colony, and no regular gaols; in 1887 there was only one summary conviction for an offence against the person, and last year only three. For offences against property there were only two convictions in 1888, and no convictions for other offences. It would be interesting and instructive, however, to know what regulations as to the liquor traffic are in force in the island, for drunkenness and crime are invariably associated.

It is to be regretted that Mr. Provand's Bill making it illegal to insure children's lives under certain ages, which was set down for second reading on the 19th inst., was not reached. That there is urgent need for some such restrictive legislation cannot be gainsaid; for, in the opinion of coroners and others who have special opportunities of forming an opinion from actual facts, the present system is responsible for much cruelty to young children. This latter subject, it is satisfactory to note, is being dealt with by the Cruelty to Children Prevention Bill. Several burial and friendly societies are opposing Mr. Provand's Bill, on the grounds, inter alia, that it will discourage thrift, that it is an interference with the liberty of the people, and "will grind down working men into pauperism." But those who raise such objections seem to forget that the measure is only directed against the acknowledged abuses of an otherwise very beneficial system, and that "liberty" is not licence to do wrong.

We are told upon reliable authority that the leading man (second to Mr. Prince) in connection with the Agapemone, has been expelled from that body on account of gross immorality, and that he has judiciously left this country; also that Mr. Piggott has taken his place as leader. Some months ago a similar charge was made against Mr. K——, and he was forgiven on his confession and repentance. This time also he would have been forgiven and reinstated had he professed repentance; it being the habit of these peculiar people "to show a spirit of love, not like the churches to punish the confessed offender." It is a very spurious kind of love, which would leave the seducer at liberty to ensnare other victims; as though the peasant woman should pity the fox that robs her henroost, or the mother spare the snake that coils in her baby's bed. "Love is strong as death; jealousy is cruel as the grave." We are told that the person referred to has confessed to having been guilty of similar conduct for many years, before his connection with the Agapemone.

A fortnight ago The Baptist uttered a warning and a reproof on account of a church having accepted a pastor without inquiry into his antecedents. We must similarly rebuke those who have attached themselves to a system with so stained a record as the Agapemone; and we warn others from following their example.

Ritualism without and perfectionism within are making appalling advances, towards Romanism on the one hand, and toward free love on the other. For as certainly as a sensuous worship and a sacerdotal priestcraft lead to Rome, so do trusting the flesh and neglecting to keep the body under, lead to Baal-Peor. But protesting against these evils will not evacuate Ritualism or perfectionism of their delusive power. Their strength lies in that aching void in the human soul which only God can satisfy. Sacerdotalism must be met by lifting up Jesus the Son of God as the true High Priest, who ever maketh intercession for us. Perfectionism must be met by manifestation of that true life in the Spirit of which this is the imitation and the counterfeit. Until evangelical believers can let the reign of God in the soul of man be seen in them, our doctrinal protests against these and other forms of error will only be like dams of earth before a rolling river. Conventions for teaching and conferences as to work might all with infinite advantage be merged in a solemn assembly like that convened by the prophet Joel:—

THE LOW ESTATE.

Is not the meat cut off before our eyes? Yea, joy and gladness from the house of our God?

THE ALARM.

Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy mountain!...Blow the trumpet in Zion, sanctify a fast, call a solemn assembly: gather the people; sanctify the congregation: assemble the old men; gather the children and those that suck the breasts: let the bridegroom go forth of his chamber and the bride out of her closet. Let the priests, the ministers of the LORD, weep between the porch and the altar, and let them say, Spare thy people, O LORD, and give not thine heritage to reproach, that the nations should use a byword against them: wherefore should they say among the peoples, Where is their God?

THE CONDITION OF BLESSING.

Yet even now, saith JEHOVAH, turn ye unto Me with all your heart, and with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning: and rend your heart and not your garments, and turn unto the LORD your God, for He is gracious and full of compassion, slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy, and repenteth Him of the evil.

THE PROMISE OF THE SPIRIT.

And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions: and also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my Spirit.... So shall ye know that I am the LORD your God, dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain: then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall no strangers pass through her any more.

It were to be wished that the private Conference of Churchmen held last week in London, comprising as it did very influential laymen and clergymen, had been marked by a stronger Protestant sentiment, by greater unanimity, and by less prospect of divided action in relation to The Church Association. At the same time, we cannot but hope that the protest raised against Sacerdotalism will have its influence on statesmen, and be a step, at least, towards the awakening of England to the dangers that menace the Reformed Faith, and the cause of our common Christianity.

The Calcutta correspondent of The Times telegraphs to last Monday's issue as follows:—

The Government of India has published a despatch reviewing the Patna mission case. The magistrate is exonerated from all blame, save the remark that his interpretation of the law, though made in good faith, proved erroneous. The missionary's [Mr. A. S. Dyer's] language is censured as intemperate and unjustifiable. The High Court Judges were assailed by him with equal impropriety, but the Government prefers to leave him to the universal condemnation of public opinion rather than direct a prosecution.

The correspondent shows his small acquaintance with the inward facts of this celebrated case by describing Mr. Dyer as a "missionary." We cannot believe that this Government despatch will be the last word upon it. Mr. Dyer may have used some injudicial, or even discourteous, language in describing the action of the magistrate and the judges of the High Court, and in doing so we think he has not strengthened his position. But with all the facts in mind, and especially the developments to which we gave publicity in our last issue, we must come to the conclusion that a crying injustice and wrong have been perpetrated on this Indian girl; for such a wrong the British sense of right must surely in some form provide a remedy. We appeal to those of our legislators who have aforetime stepped into the breach on behalf of oppressed womanhood, to do so once more. The final court of human appeal is the electorate, and the Government will be ill-advised if they court such an appeal by any lack of sympathy with this suffering class of their fellow-subjects.

We shall be obliged if any of our readers can send us the following numbers of THE REVIVAL:—Nos. 28 (New Series), 399, 449, 468.

We greatly regret to state that Pastor Frank H. White is compelled to take a lengthened rest abroad owing to the state of his health. All communications should meanwhile be addressed to Talbot Tabernacle, Talbot-road, Bayswater, W.

We have received several letters referring to our Notes of 7th inst. upon Rev. B. Dinnick's strange conduct during his recent mission at Oldbury. Some defend him and his work, but the greater part corroborate our statements. After further inquiry we have nothing to recall, nothing to alter. We do not wish to question the assertion of those who contend that Mr. Dinnick is a good man; but this fact does not justify methods that are foolish and dangerous, nor does it lessen the scandal which those methods bring upon the cause of Christ.

An article on "Missions and Education," by Rev. T. G. Selby, in The Methodist Times, deserves attention. He maintains that in India education, European in its forms, will not be permanent, and that the method of making the English language the current channel of instruction in the colleges is an affront to native ideas. An able utterance from a writer who has himself laboured in the East will be of use in the present controversy on this important subject, and it is especially valuable as a warning against introducing Anglo-Indian traditions into China.

MISSIONARIES FOR NORTH AFRICA.—Three more missionaries have left for Magador, under the auspices of the Ayrshire Christian Union. They are Miss M. B. Reid, of Catrine; Mr. D. Muir, of Dalry; and Mr. J. Richmond, of Ayr. They were accompanied by Mr. John Anderson, of Ardrossan, and will co-operate with Mr. and Miss Nairn, who, it will be remembered, went to Morocco in the same relation a few months ago.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

AN "OLD-FASHIONED MISSIONARY'S" VIEW.

I OUGHT to have written to you long ere this, to thank you for sending me THE CHRISTIAN so regularly. You will be pleased to learn that the copy received by me is read by several others, and that its weekly record of Christian work is felt by us all to be a perpetual source of inspiration. Its singleness of aim, and the fulness of its information on the one great subject to which its pages are devoted, render it a periodical of exceptional value to the Christian worker, both at home and abroad.

As a missionary, I cannot but rejoice in the interest which THE CHRISTIAN evinces in missions. In this respect I feel that I am greatly indebted to it. Of all the questions which command the attention of the Christian Church, in these days, the question of missions is in some respects the most important. The Church cannot give up her missions. The question as to whether any portion of the habitable globe shall be abandoned to sin and Satan can never come up before the Church again. That question is settled for ever.

The one point of importance to be considered is this: Are the principles and methods adopted by the Church in the conduct of her missions the wisest and best? This is a point which demands attention, and the more light that is shed upon it the better. We need not regret that the subject is taken up by foes as well as by friends, by theorists as well as by practical men. My own conviction is that the deeper you go into the matter the more thoroughly will you be convinced of the reality and greatness of the work which the Church is carrying on through her missionaries. The missionaries themselves believe in their work, and invite the minutest investigation. They do not feel that they have anything to be ashamed of, and they have no desire that the shield of charity should be thrown over the work or themselves. Taking them all in all, I do not think that you could find, in the whole of this world, a class of men more earnest, more hard-working, or more successful. That there may be here and there a bread-and-butter missionary, I will not try to disprove. That there may be a few, though earnest and sincere in their intentions, who have mistaken their calling, I am quite willing to admit. But that the missionaries, as a body of men, belong to either the one or the other, I utterly deny. And I know what I am talking about. They are men called of God to this ministry, to whom the work in itself is a joy, and whose one ambition is to serve Christ.

The friends of missions at home would do well to pay as little attention as possible to the accounts given by passing travellers of both the missionaries and their work. Let an enemy talk as much as he likes, and as loud as he likes, as long as he talks from knowledge. But these birds of passage do not speak from knowledge. They are for the most part men who have no faith in missions, and very little in Christianity itself. Even in the case of those among them who are professed believers and friends, their reports are to be taken with many grains of salt. So far as their personal observation goes, it must necessarily be extremely limited, and intrinsically of little value. In too many cases their conclusions are based upon nothing more solid than the stock tittle-tattle about missions and missionaries which is to be found in every foreign settlement at which they may call.

A great deal has been written on the "Missionary Failure." I have just been dipping into the "Report of the Missionary Conference," and I cannot find any intimation of its existence in these two volumes. I have been looking around me here for proofs of the great failure, and I cannot find a ghost of a proof anywhere. That the conversion of the world is a hard task, and that the progress is silent and slow, must be admitted on all hands. But that there is progress—real and wonderful progress—cannot be denied by those who have eyes to see. It is not necessary that I should give you the statistics of our work in China, for they are familiar to you. There is much in them to encourage us. Thirty years ago we had a few hundreds of converts in China; we have now tens of thousands. That is something to thank God for. But what rejoices my heart most is the vast amount of preparatory work that has been going on. This is something you cannot put down in figures. It is something that the traveller can take no cognisance of. And yet it is the feature in connection with our work which we value most.

When I came to Hankow, nearly thirty years ago, there was not a Protestant Christian in the whole of this region, and not a heathen who knew anything about Christianity. Now, professing Christians are to be found here and there and everywhere, and among the heathen there are thousands and tens of thousands who are more or less acquainted with the truth as it is in Jesus. Speaking of the London Mission, I may say that there is scarcely a Communion Sunday, from one end of the year to the other, on which some are not admitted into the Church by baptism, and, though some fall off, most remain faithful. Last year more than a hundred adults were admitted into our fellowship; and, during the first three months of this year, between thirty and forty have joined us. Not a few of our converts have been passing through the fires of persecution; and again and again have our hearts been gladdened, as we have witnessed their patience and faith in the hour of trial. The beautiful Christian spirit manifested by some of them has been the means in several instances of winning the enemy over to Christ.

Yes, the work is real. So real do I feel it to be that I would willingly give another thirty years to it; nay, thirty multiplied by thirty, if I had them to give. And the question of salary does not enter into my calculations. Salary or no salary, this is my work, to live in and die in.

I have very little sympathy with the "Cheap Missions" cry which is heard everywhere in these days, and I sincerely hope that the wise men among you will not allow themselves to be influenced by it. The cry is an unhealthy sign, and must die out. Can it be that the churches are going in for purchasing missionaries in the cheapest markets! If the missionaries are men of the right stamp, called of God, and inspired by his Spirit, is it not for the churches to do all in their power to provide for their wants, and place them above anxiety in regard to things temporal? Ought not the churches to deem this a privilege and an honour? The older societies are not giving too much to their missionaries. This I say with perfect knowledge of the missionary life and the missionary's real needs. I could make this perfectly plain to you, if space and time permitted. There is something extremely low and sickly in this treatment of the salary question. Some seem to look upon all the old missionaries in India as so many paid agents, not one of whom is serving God for nought. They seem, also, to judge of a man's worth as a missionary by the smallness of the salary which he receives. The man who can live on £50 is the missionary for them. That seems to be the grand qualification, the one consideration which lifts the man above all suspicion. How meagre must their knowledge of missionaries be! And how utterly devoid of the missionary instinct, soul, and heart must they themselves be! But "Sera nunquam est ad bonos mores via"—It is never too late to mend.

In regard to methods, I should like to say one word. It seems to me that there must be something in every method, thought out by earnest and prayerful men, worthy of respectful consideration. I do not think it is possible to discover any one method which shall be adapted to all men, to all times, and to all places. If your correspondent, Mr. Baldwin, of Morocco, were right, there would be only one method for all of us. But it is not likely that many will adopt his views, whether among the Christians at home, or among the missionaries abroad. For my own part, I cannot accept his interpretation of our Lord's words. Neither can I adopt his mode of life. I think he is wrong in both, and deem it a pity that his views are not clearer in regard to the spirit of our Master's teachings, and that his methods are not more in harmony with the plain dictates of common sense. Still, there can be no objection to Mr. Baldwin following his own sense of what is right and best in the prosecution of his work. All that I would ask of him is to allow me, and others who think as I do, to differ from him, without coming under his ban. Whether his method is the best for him, I cannot tell. I know it would not be the best for me, or for my work. He is doing good in his way; but others are doing good, and good as great, in their way. In regard to this question we must exercise the grace of mutual toleration. Infallibility on this point cannot exist, and he who assumes it has much to learn.

It would be well for us all to bear in mind that the newest scheme is not necessarily the best and wisest. Every scheme must have the test of time applied to it before its real value can be known. The new missionary is, as a rule, a prolific method-maker, and the younger he is the greater his genius in this line of things. Did I not know more than all my seniors when I arrived at Shanghai more than thirty years since! Was it not as clear as daylight that their methods were all wrong, and that their small success was to be ascribed to their want of insight! The young missionary, like the globe-trotter, is generally a man who knows everything better than the man who ought to know most. During my long life in China, I have seen many fine schemes collapse under the test of time. A grand method has been discovered by Mr. or Dr. So-and-So. For a little time it carries everything before it. The results are wonderful. It has brought in so many converts the first year, and so many more the second year. Surely the method has been discovered at last. But wait a bit. The tide turns. The accessions grow fewer, the apostates multiply, and the noisy little method passes off into silence and desuetude.

> "Old things need not be therefore true,
> O brother men!" "Nor yet the new.
> Ah, still awhile the old thought retain,
> And yet consider it again."

Mr. Caine has made known to us his new plan for the conversion of India. "The sort of men we want," says he, "are young, bright, earnest men of from twenty to twenty-three years of age. When they are once accepted by the Committee, they should not be put into the cast-iron grooves of theological colleges, but sent right out to the mission-field, pledged to a moderate term of celibacy, say ten years, and at once put into technical education, under an old and experienced missionary, carefully selected for special fitness. In two years these fresh young fellows would learn any Indian language, and, while costing a fifth of the expense of one of our old-fashioned missionaries, would get through three times the work, by being free from the care and worry of a wife and young children in the trying climate of India."

Such is Mr. Caine's plan for the speedy conversion of India. The missionary enterprise in India does not need the influence of age, the ripeness of experience, nor the culture of college training. The men for India must be young, wifeless, childless, free from the college taint, and, above all, they must be cheap. What is to become of these "fresh young fellows" when they reach the age of thirty or thirty-three we are not told. It seems that the plan admits of their getting married, and having children, as soon as they arrive at that age. But would not marriage ruin them as missionaries? Would it not bring them down to the level of the "old-fashioned missionaries"? It is possible, however, that Mr. Caine expects his youthful army to conquer the whole of India within ten years, and to disband it at the end of the grand campaign. It would be difficult to imagine anything more crude than this scheme. But let it by all means be tried. At the end of ten years of experience in the management of his pet mission, his vision will be clearer, and his judgments on the existing methods more charitable.

Hankow, China. Griffith John.

THE KING'S DAUGHTERS. — This is an organisation formed in the United States in 1886 by a band of young ladies who wished to have some definite work. They agreed: (1) not to give themselves to gossip; (2) to do one good act each day; and (3) to please others first. There are now 20,000 young lady members in the United States with branches in different parts of the world. A branch has been established at Southport, Lancashire. A little pamphlet descriptive of the Society is published by Mr. James Greenway, 33, London-street, Southport.

Conditions of Spiritual Power.

By Rev. J. F. T. HALLOWES, M.A.

The controversial questions which have recently aroused so much interest on the subject of the incomes of missionaries will doubtless do good, partly by bringing the whole matter of Gospel propaganda among the heathen more prominently before our Christian churches.

I am convinced of one thing, which I think ought to go without saying, that our churches, acting through their several societies, cannot rightly propose to cut down the salaries of men now in the field. Were this really to be done, it would be equivalent to our home workers addressing the foreign ones somewhat in this style: "We admit that you are giving greater proofs of self-denial than we are. We do not at present think well to emulate you in your sacrifice of the ordinary comforts of existence by any diminution of our personal expenditure; but we demand that, in the interests of your great and solemn work, you should yet further multiply your renunciations. Henceforth you may expect a considerable reduction in your incomes."

Whatever may be purposed in reference to missionaries subsequently to be sent abroad, I do not believe that we should ever address in such a fashion men and women who are actually in the field. It may be doubted whether even considerable retrenchment at home could ever make such language defensible, while it would be simply monstrous, unsupported by further degrees of self-abnegation on our part. No, let our missionaries' salaries be maintained. If the standard of comfort is anywhere to be lowered, let it, like charity, begin at home, and then it will be time to consider whether we should impose it on those who are in the forefront of the battle. If any of them come to the conclusion that still greater plainness of living is consistent with their health and that of their families, we ought to leave it to them to expend what they thus save in the development of their own work.

But behind the whole question of finance in reference to the extension of Christ's kingdom in the regions shadowed by Paganism there is the yet greater question of the spiritual endowments of its God-sent agents. The Primitive Church as a whole assuredly wielded great spiritual power; but, judged by the standard of the fourth and fifth centuries, she was not an ascetic Church. It is a fact that as asceticism grew, spiritual power declined, the fundamental doctrines of the Gospel being more and more eclipsed by the ever-spreading, ever-darkening cloud of Romish apostasy. Nor can it be proved that under Protestantism there is any necessary connection between great bareness of living and great spiritual power. In England, during the present century, the men who have most effectually stirred our people, whether as pastors or evangelists, have been far removed in outward seeming from celibate, bare-footed friars. Like the Son of Man, they have come "eating and drinking"; like St. Peter, they have been married. But they have had this in common with the most effective heralds of the Gospel in all ages: they have been baptized with the Holy Ghost. While luxury may easily stand in the way of power, voluntary poverty does not necessarily secure it.

No doubt many Christians ought to be much more self-denying than they are; but, even if they were to become so, they would not necessarily receive that plenitude of sacred energy which opens men's eyes, turns them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God. The comparative weakness of the modern Church as a whole is not that the powers of civilisation are hers, but that the powers of Christ's kingdom are not hers, at least in full measure.

God does not require her to lay aside the former, for "every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving"; but He does intend that the Church of each age should have her Pentecost: yea, that all her members should have each his personal Pentecost repeated from time to time according to the needs of his character, the requirements of his ministry, and the wants of that whole body of Christ of which he is a member. The watchword of the present day should be "new powers" rather than "new measures." Nor is it enough for particular prominent individuals in the Church to be from time to time afresh endowered with the conquering Spirit.

Whatever they may receive personally from his grace, they are only able to exert their highest influence as agents of a Spirit-baptized Church. If the sacred anointing oil is so shed forth that it touches every member of the household of faith, then in the general invigoration of that body will the stronger members find that they are wielding a power which they could not have put forth had the unction, however rich, however fresh, been confined to them alone. There is a greater solidarity than that of the human race; it is the solidarity of the Church of God. This mysterious union is much insisted on by St. Paul in 1 Cor. xii. He says: "God hath set the members each one of them in the body." "God tempered the body together." "Whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it, or one member is honoured, all the members rejoice with it." This solidarity is designed of God, not only for the conveyance of sympathy, but for the conveyance of power. Would that this were better understood. The sense of solidarity would give a greater sense of responsibility. Then we should say: "I dare not be weak, for my weakness is a spreading infirmity. I must be strong, for my strength is a spreading energy."

In the times of the Apostles men saw what God could do by a small but Spirit-baptized Church, since then men have seen what He could accomplish by Spirit-baptized individuals; we yet await the vision of what He can effect through the whole great modern Church being endued with power from on high. The Church of to-day does not know what great things God can do by her. Still less does she understand that there are no substitutes possible for a wide-spread baptism of the Spirit of God. But there is hope in the cheering fact that an ever-increasing number of Christians are coming into this conviction and are acting on it.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.—Earnest prayer is asked for God's blessing on a small mission being started on the sands at the sea-side resort of Santa Monica. Many families erect houses on the beach during the summer months, and thousands of pleasure-seekers come down every Sunday. In this part of the world, like Continental Europe, the Lord's Day is given over to amusement. Will your readers pray that an effort now being made by the distribution of tracts, and services held in a small mission tent, may be owned of God to the salvation of many. Granville P. Beauchamp.

Sceptical Novels.

Under the heading, "Sceptical Novels by Women," an article by Rev. C. Lloyd Engström appeared in the January issue of The Theological Monthly, dealing particularly with "Robert Elsmere." The writer of the article rightly describes "this feminine handling of difficult topics as one of the most marked features of the age." Yet he is very lenient towards women's sceptical opinions. "Can we wonder," he says, "if, in quick sensibility to note the sufferings, the injustice, the discordant cries of this most mysterious world, she sometimes relaxes her intellectual hold on the cross of the Redeemer?" We should have thought that such a condition would lead to a more tenacious hold on the cross. Then he adds, "While we condemn her logic, and reject her theological inferences as most inconclusive, we may venture to hope that she is true to Christ in her inner soul." This is charity of a very doubtful kind, and may tell as injuriously on the woman described as on the truth itself. The strange fact is that this writer himself so far discerns the evil of scepticism as to speak of "an age, which, because it is sceptical, has broken down many moral landmarks." Why scepticism in the age should be so dangerous to morality, and in the woman of the age should be compatible with loyalty to Christ "in her inner soul," does not appear. We are convinced that the tendency of scepticism is equally dangerous in both.

And for that reason we differ from this writer in his favourable view of sceptical novels in general, and of "Robert Elsmere" in particular. Of this last he acknowledges "that the main object of the authoress is to set forth her belief that orthodox Christianity is untenable, and that the sooner the fact is recognised the better." A novel, cleverly written with such an object, cannot fail to do harm to many readers. Evidence of this is found in the fact that some of Mr. Engström's friends have told him of the "distress and trouble 'Robert Elsmere' is known to have caused." He thinks that the authoress, "unconsciously and unwittingly," has blessed Christianity "altogether" and "effectually." We strongly think that his friends are nearer to the truth. When, in an interesting novel, sceptical opinions are associated with characters noble and manly and virtuous; and orthodox Christianity with the ignoble, the weak, and the vicious, the ordinary reader will connect the character with the creed, and, while he has nothing but contempt for the character that is so unworthy, he cannot respect and honour the creed associated with it. "His interest in the characters puts him off his guard." His "kindled and stirred emotions" mislead him.

The writer anticipates this objection, and thinks he answers it by saying that "human life itself is all through in just the same position." But is this a sufficient answer? Is it true that in human life we are brought into contact with such gross contradictions? Does scepticism usually produce such moral excellence, and Christianity such a want of it, as to make the sceptical novelist's picture true to human life? We do not believe it. The Perfect Man was He who was the Truth as well as the Life. And attempts to emulate his perfect life, while rejecting his truth, are not likely to meet with success. Right thinking, even upon theological questions, is needful to right living; and any novels which tend to undermine the teachings of Scripture are dangerous to the moral character, and should be carefully avoided.

In a second article in the June issue of The Theological Monthly, the writer continues the subject, and we are glad to find that in the meantime he has found it necessary to lower his estimate of "Robert Elsmere" and its author. Yet he shows no pity for those who may be injured by reading the book. They are injured "either (a) because they have no real hold of Christ with all their nature, or (b) because they are utterly uninstructed in apologetics, and have no common sense." There may be some truth in this; but, speaking generally, we should regard these persons with more charity. Poison may be so skilfully concealed in something pleasant to the palate that a man may take it before he is aware. Let a man be carried away by his interest in a book, and, before he knows it, his mind has become injuriously affected by its errors. Is it not an evil to injure those who have not yet got "real hold of Christ with all their nature"?

But we do not wish to appear to criticise this article; it contains so much that is good that we would rather quote one or two passages which we heartily endorse. For example, speaking of Mrs. Ward's reverence for Professor Green—the Mr. Grey of the story—the writer says, "I do not blame the tendency to rest on the authority of great souls. Doubtless, Mrs. Humphrey Ward has been greatly influenced by the convictions of Professor Green; and many of her readers have been much influenced by her convictions. Let all due weight be given to both, but let due weight be also given to the convictions of Him who spoke, and lived, and died, as no other man ever did. If the argument is to rest—as in the main I think it does, and ever will—on the convictions of great souls, Mrs. Ward must not complain if we much prefer the convictions of Jesus Christ to hers and Professor Green's."

Upon the subject of miracles, the writer quotes Mrs. Ward's view as embodied in Robert's lecture. It may be reproduced here with safety. "The study of miracles in all nations, and under all conditions, yields everywhere the same results. Miracle may be the child of imagination, of love, nay, of a passionate sincerity, but invariably it lives with ignorance, and is withered by knowledge!" Mr. Lloyd Engström writes upon this subject with a sound and enlightened judgment, and asserts that "the tendency of modern inquiry is to make the evidence for the Gospel miracles stronger than it was before the inquiry began. Formerly it was mainly a matter of unquestioning faith, now it is also a matter of almost certain knowledge."

With equal wisdom and clearness this author criticises Mrs. Ward's view of the worthlessness of testimony borne by those who lived in the time of Christ. He rightly concludes that the value of testimony depends upon "the character of the acts of the persons to whom and by whom testimony is now borne, or was borne 1800 years ago." If this be true, then there can be no more reliable testimony than that upon which the New Testament history is based.

OPEN DOORS IN THE EAST.

Dear Sir,—About nine months ago, before leaving for the East, I sent you a letter which you were kind enough to print, drawing attention to Alexandria and Cairo as important fields for missionary work. I spent the winter and spring in Egypt with my family, and have just returned, having also paid a visit to Mr. and Mrs. Lethaby at their lonely mission station of Kerak in Moab.

If any of your readers are specially interested in the countries I have mentioned, and will communicate with me, I shall be glad to give them any information in my power. There is plenty to be done there among both Christians and Mahommedans.

F. T. Haig, Major-General.

The Rechabites of the Birmingham district recently celebrated their jubilee. On the roll there are 80,000 adult members, 40,000 juvenile members, and 20,000 members' wives or widows—a total of 140,000, all pledged abstainers.

THE PROMISE OF THE FATHER.

By Rev. JOHN ROBERTSON, Stonehaven.

A graceless, Godless place it was, this fishing village on the Ayrshire coast. For generations Diabolus had been in entire possession, and Shaddai and his Emmanuel were kept from their own by the surrounding whisky-steeped "moderatism"—the blight this day of "bonnie Scotland;" drinking, fighting, swearing, and sinning, "with a cart rope"; until Dunure had become a synonym for rough, rioting wickedness—a sunken "toonie," to be shunned, and given the go-by indeed. In our recent "Mission Week" at Ayr, we were asked to visit this village, and to hold an afternoon meeting. It was a beautiful day, and several Christian friends from Ayr accompanied us.

The music of Mr. Sankey's hymns meets us as we descend the hill to the little harbour. Here is a large open-air gathering of big child-like fishermen, the light of a fervent love to the Lord dancing in the summer-blue of each northern eye of them. You look round at the earnest faces, and you feel they would furnish again the Peters and Andrews, Jameses and Johns of the Lord's little band by the Eastern sea. Into the little hall they throng, to be joined by all the men, women, and children in the place. What hearty singing, telling of the lonely midnight watches out on the deep! What earnest listening, telling of the Word-famine and starvation of that terrible past! We felt like Jacob at Bethel: "Surely the Lord is in this place; this is none other than the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven!" Is it Dunure the bad, this praising village? Yes. Is it the disreputable place of but six months ago, this converted hamlet? Yes. What has wrought this marvellous change—darkness to light; winter to summer; the clanking of chains to the singing of birds; the devil's grip to the kingdom of God? We had been informed by others, but we turn for direct confirmation to the modest and devoted young missionary, Mr. Richmond. "Yes," says he, "it was just that way. One holiday, without a thought of preaching at Dunure, I took a walk along this road. As I came in sight of the village and remembered about its bad name, all at once a strange overpowering feeling—such as I never felt before nor since—came upon me; an impression now to plead for the place, like Abraham for Sodom, for the Lord was before me. I could not put the feeling away, and I retired behind the hedge by the road, and, almost unconscious in the grip of that something, for three hours I wrestled with God in prayer for the village. Then I went down, got one or two of the fishermen together, and held an open-air meeting. While speaking the word, the Holy Ghost fell, and the whole village, man, woman, and child, has been brought to the feet of Jesus!"

Ah! it is the old, old story. "This Jesus, having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, He hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear." Dear worker for the dear Master, let you and me halt a moment. Have we this something? Have we this "baptism of fire" for the evangelistic work of the regeneration? Have we "waited for the promise of the Father, which we have heard of Him"? Have we "received the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon us to be witnesses unto Him, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judæa, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth"?

THE GRATITUDE OF THE POOR.—A few days ago the Deptford Medical Mission was unexpectedly visited by nearly thirty of the poorer inhabitants of St. Giles's. Their object was to present a piece of furniture, subscribed for and purchased by themselves, to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Shurvell, formerly for twelve years Christian workers in connection with the London (St. Giles's) Medical Mission, and now attached to the new Medical Mission in High-street, Deptford.

Needs of Evangelistic Work.

BY REV. H. M. MONTGOMERY, BELFAST.*

WHAT is the meaning of the expression "Evangelistic Work"? The general impression is, Something for fiery enthusiasts who are not much good for anything else. This is a great mistake. The true answer is, The work which God has given his people—and all his people—to do in this world, viz., to preach the Gospel to every creature, at every opportunity, in every kind of way. Evangelistic work is the Christian's occupation. In this respect we are to be just what Christ was, and do what He did.

What then was He? He was an Evangelist. Read Mark i. 14, 15: "Now after John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the Gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying . . . repent ye, and believe the Gospel." And what did He do? He did evangelistic work. Read verse 38. "And He said unto them (the disciples), Let us go into the next towns, that I may preach there also; for therefore came I forth." This was just evangelistic work, and that was his work.

Now, as to the needs or requirements for this work. If anyone could have lived and worked without prayer, surely it was Jesus; yet He spent whole nights crying to his Father for the precious souls perishing around Him. Oh, what lie-a-beds we are! How unlike the old times in our own land. Where shall we find a Livingstone now, to be on his face all night with the burden of souls, and to preach, as he did next day in the Kirk o' Shotts, with five hundred souls converted? And so it was again with him at Holywood, Belfast, on Communion Monday, when another five hundred souls were gathered in. He had realised the true requirement for evangelistic work. He had cried to God for it. The Spirit of God had laid hold of him, and supplied all the needs for the work. Subsequently, he said that these two sermons were the only ones he would care to see in print. Where are the men that live like this? He said once to one who came to visit him, "I am not so near Christ to-day as I ought to be, so I want to be alone;" and he bowed him out of the room. Oh, friends, not one of us ought to be out of China, India, or Africa, without a special reason that we could state as in the presence of God. We go on exactly the opposite tack. But in face of the Master's commission, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature," I, for one, am ashamed I am not there. I wished to go, but the state of my health prevented.

Look at the disciples in the Acts of the Apostles. They believed that the people around were hurrying onward to destruction, and there came on them the impossibility of silence. "We cannot but speak," they exclaimed. In Eph. ii. 1, 2, you have, emphasised, the need of evangelistic work—the point being the condition of the people around. Some say, even Christians, "He's a little bit wild; he'll come round"; but God says, "He is dead." The woman, whose babe the eagle bore off in his talons, scrambled up perpendicular rocks, to men inaccessible, and the cry as she gained the eaglets' nest was "It lives! it lives!"—not it is comfortable or happy—but it lives! You may say all the rest of the natural man, but you cannot say "he lives." The men and women around us are dead; and we are only half awake. We see them filling our churches, sitting at the Lord's Table, teaching in our Sunday-schools, visiting the sick, and we think all that means something more than just what it is.

Privilege does not mean conversion. Hagar had lived for sixteen years in the home of the friend of God; she had been of the inner circle, and had assisted in morning and evening worship, and yet she went straight off to get a heathen wife for her only son. Gehazi, inbreathing the very atmosphere of heaven, outbreathes a shameless lie, and the talents he hides away weigh down his soul, as did the soul of Judas those thirty pieces of silver, which he leaped into hell to get rid of.

What wonder, then, the apathy and indifference of people to the awful realities of death, judgment, eternity; they are dead. On that fatal day the orders and ornaments were torn off the uniform of the lion-hearted Gordon in Khartoum. Why no resistance? He was dead. So is it that the lost give no response to the Gospel. Here comes Nicodemus to the very Master Himself, with his "We know." "Yes, Nicodemus, you know all the rest; but you do not know God. To Him you are dead, and must be born again." Southey's "idiot" digs up the dead mother out of her grave. He speaks to her, cries to her. She neither moves nor speaks. He ceases his unavailing efforts, and moans, "There's something wanted inside." Yes, poor unsaved one here to-day, poor living-dead, that is it. Something is wanted inside, which only God can supply. "Ye must be born again."

In Matt. ix. 36—38 our Lord expresses the need for evangelistic work under the figure of a harvest. The first thing that strikes one here is numbers—the myriads of golden grain-stalks. So I thought as I passed through the crowded streets of Glasgow to-day, and each unit of the great multitude bears an immortal soul. And so of London, India, China, Africa. Oh, friends, was not Jesus right when He gave us this figure? It is only of late years that we have solved the mystery of Africa. Till then we marked its interior on our maps as a waste, howling desert. But Jesus knew better; He has Africa on his heart! All these are on his heart—black men, red men, yellow men—as well as the white men here in Scotland, and we don't believe it; at least we act as if we did not.

A little London arab stood in the dock. When asked what he had to say in his defence, he sadly replied, "Please sir, I never got no chance." Somebody was to blame for that. And so we are to blame for the millions abroad who have never heard the name of Jesus. They never had a chance.

Then another idea of harvest is preciousness. We do not act as if we believed it. At a great auction in London, fabulous sums were given for old stamps, pieces of China, old furniture, and there are thousands around us who would not give three halfpence to save a soul. Jesus brought out the commercial idea when He said, "What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" How often have we seen a woman on the street with an organ, and a baby which she had hired to excite compassion. How little cared the pretended mother for that child, how little the passers-by, how little even its own mother. But at a shop close by a crowd is staring at a picture of the horse that won the Derby. The one to pass into annihilation in a few years: the other to live for ever. The fleeting flesh of the animal to fetch its thousands of pounds: that eternal child to be hired for a few pence.

Another thought connected with harvest is danger. It cannot wait, it must be reaped at once. Every willing hand must be pressed into the service. Christian, this is your harvest day. All too soon it will have passed away for ever. Will you have any soul reaped by you here to show up yonder?

Last week I was called to a dying woman. She had been asking for something which the neighbours could not quite make out. At last the word "water" was heard. But when it was brought to her, she whispered, "It's water of life I want." Dear friends, there are thirsting souls all round like that, and you have not been giving them the blessed water. Death is working while you are sleeping, and souls are perishing the while.

Read the story of the feeding of the five thousand, and note the points. See Matt. xiv. 13—21. In ver. 14 we read, Jesus "saw." Turner was once walking with one of his students. He paused to admire the landscape. "I can't see anything in it," remarked the student. "Ah," said the great painter, "don't you wish you could?" Let us, like our Lord, "go forth," and "see" the great multitude, like "sheep not having a shepherd," with "nothing to eat." Like Him, let us be "moved with compassion," and, as our hearts are touched, let us hear his words, "They need not depart; give ye them to eat."

But take heed how ye feed these starving ones. It is food, not fun, they want. Not sights and sounds for eye and ear, but light and life for soul and spirit. Not something to pass the time, but something to gain eternity. Friends, they are going to hell, and your balls and sports, your concerts and theatricals, won't save them from it. Away then with these "stones," these "serpents," these "scorpions," and give them the word of the living God. There is but one mission: the saving of the souls of men; one commission: "Preach the Gospel to every creature." May God keep us unspotted from the world; and that it may be so we need more prayer. The crying need of every congregation is a live, earnest prayer-meeting. Let our shot be like that used at the siege of Gibraltar, red-hot—Christians around us praying, behind us praying, and we praying ourselves. There is no other way for effective evangelistic work.

* Notes of an Address at Stirling, reported by Dr. Moxey.

DR. PENTECOST IN EDINBURGH.

IN addition to the brief notice in our last issue, a correspondent sends the following:—

On hearing that arrangements had been made for Dr. Pentecost to occupy the pulpit of Free St. Andrew's Church during the summer months, a committee of laymen with the concurrence of many of the ministers of the city drew up and signed a memorial inviting him to hold a special mission for the benefit of the western district during the months of May and June. This requisition was signed by a large number of influential men of various denominations, and a small working committee formed to carry out the necessary arrangements. The result has been a very remarkable series of meetings now just concluded, during which the gifted preacher has day by day "reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come," before deeply interested audiences, to many of whom his words have come home "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power."

Perhaps the most marked feature of the mission has been the interest aroused and sustained in connection with the afternoon Bible-readings, which, with the exception of one week's interval during the session of the General Assemblies, have been continued four days a week since May 7. The audience has been mainly, as was desired, a "West-end" one, and during the Assembly time the clerical element was very noticeable.

The week-night evening services have been held during the last fortnight in the Free Assembly-hall and have embraced a very solemn series of addresses on "The Future and Eternal Punishment of Sin"; the topic announced for the closing week being "The Forgiveness of Sins."

It has been somewhat of a new departure in Edinburgh, attempting to hold a sustained mission at this season of the year, but it has been abundantly manifest that "God has been in the midst of us to bless us," and that he has, through our honoured brother's instrumentality, been "adding to the Church daily such as should be saved," while many, already his believing children, have been greatly refreshed and strengthened in the faith. To his name be all the praise!

IN a booklet entitled, "A Retrospect of Mildmay Work during the year 1888," some account is given of much earnest labour for Christ in many spheres. The Deaconess' House has been occupied by about fifty deaconesses, most of them, as well as about twenty-five more in the branch houses in the south and east of London, being employed in parochial work as varied in character as it is to-day essential to thorough-going Christian effort in our great cities. Over twenty deaconesses have also been working in other parts of England, one among soldiers' wives in Malta, one superintending the Dublin Prison Gate Mission, six in Palestine, and two among Jews at home.

In the Mildmay Conference Hall, besides the three crowded meetings each day during the yearly conference, the Gospel has been preached to large congregations on Sunday afternoons and evenings throughout the year, and many meetings of varied religious interest have been held in the large basement rooms; an average of about four hundred men have assembled upon three evenings a week for educational classes during the winter months. Weekly Bible-classes have been held for outsiders; Dorcas-work has given a measure of employment to a large number of poor women; the Invalid Kitchen has supplied dinners during hard times to many sufferers in the neighbourhood; and the Flower Mission has carried loving cheer and messages of grace to thousands of inmates of hospitals and sick-rooms.

Without going into details as to several departments of effort, we glance at the work of the Nursing Home. No fewer than seventy nurses and nursing sisters make this institution their home in the intervals between their cases. All of these have received thorough hospital training, and are in perpetual demand for nursing in private families, their services having been secured in 549 cases during the past year. One, who lives at the Home, and works permanently among the sick poor of the district, has paid 2000 visits during the same period. Several institutions at home and abroad are also supplied, and fourteen probationers are still under training.

During the year the Mildmay Memorial Hospital received 189 in-patients, while in the Hospital at Bethnal Green 392 in-patients and 5941 new out-patients were treated. These figures indicate only a part of the work actually done, for they represent a total of more than 12,000 attendances at the Medical Mission, and about 7300 visits by doctors and deaconesses to the sick in their own homes. Dr. Gauld is still medical superintendent; Dr. L. B. Paton is resident physician at Bethnal Green, and Dr. Woodroffe at the Memorial Hospital. Seventeen ladies left the Training Home at "The Willows," to engage in mission work at home and abroad. Twenty-five other ladies have passed through the Probation House, eleven of whom have entered the Deaconess' House, or gone on for training to "The Willows."

Thirty-six girls still form a happy, busy family at the Orphanage, while the Home and Registry has given temporary shelter to 220 applicants, and found situations for 973 females, from governesses and matrons to little maids-of-all-work. Employment was also found for about 50 men and lads. In the "Haven," the little Refuge in the Borough where rescue work is carried on, 217 girls and women were received; some required only temporary shelter, advice, and assistance, but by far the larger number were cases of real rescue from a life of shame. After a period of testing, 40 were sent to other Homes; 56 restored to friends, placed in situations, or sent abroad; and all lovingly directed to a Saviour, whom it is hoped many of them sought and found. A second house has been opened in connection with this Mission, where women of various ages and classes, rescued from sin, or struggling with temptation to drink or other vice, are watched over and shielded till they are able to pass out safely to ordinary life. Remarkable blessing has rested on both branches of the work.

As usual, fully half of the entire income (£27,498) was contributed by those actually engaged in the work. This fact should give the institutions a strong claim on outside support, but, we are sorry to say, the year closed with a deficit. Having surveyed labours additional to those mentioned here, the "Retrospect" says: "We dare not reckon up conversions even for our own encouragement, still less attempt to tabulate the various sacred experiences that week by week call forth the thanksgivings of our workers. But we must record it to the glory of our prayer-hearing God that He does vouchsafe a rich and constant blessing to our work for Him. We have abundant cause, wherever we look, to thank Him and take courage, and for the joy of the harvest we are content to wait."

REST FOR THE WEARY.

THE Holiday Home for delicate mothers with weakly babies in Southend-lane, near Lower Sydenham, is an interesting feature of the North-East London Gospel Mission. In addition to a large number of children, here may be found poor frail mothers who have neither friends nor means otherwise to provide for a country change. Among the frequent visitors at the Home is Lady Grove, who sits and chats with the mothers and children, and enters into their circumstances like a true friend. One mother, returning last week strengthened to resume the cares of her family, was so weak when she went thither that she could scarce drag her body into the train, and was quite unable to care for the child she had brought with her.

Many cheering instances might be given showing how the spiritual character of the Home influences the children.

A PRAYERLESS-CHILD CONVERSION.

After "family prayers" the children are dismissed to their bedrooms, and here each little gathering has its own prayer-meeting. One evening two little strangers from Bow were seen to retire without private devotions, and upon the other children begging them to pray, they replied they had never yet learnt how. Promising to teach them, one of the little guides asked, "Why not ask Jesus to save them just now?" And so, while one talked with them, the others pleaded in such direct and simple appeals to the Lord, that soon they were rewarded by their little friends giving way and yielding their hearts to the Saviour.

MOTHER'S WASHING DAY.

Another child, whose home is close to Millwall Docks, was one evening overheard pouring out her heart to the Lord for her mother. With all simplicity she was telling Him it was her mother's washing day on the morrow, and that she would not be at home to mind baby, and would He please not let him cry or fall out of his chair, and went on to ask the Lord many small mercies for her mother's comfort and blessing.

Through the multiplicity of similar efforts the director finds it increasingly difficult to obtain the necessary help to maintain this happy service for the poor. Communications may be addressed either to Mrs. F. A. Bevan, 60, Princes-gate, S.W., or to the director, Mr. William Chorley, 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, N.

MR. SPURGEON ON PROVERBS.*

THE "John Ploughman's Almanac," which Mr Spurgeon has now published for many years, has for a special feature a collection of proverbs for every day. The placing of wise words and quaint sayings in successive almanacs has, it need hardly be said, cost Mr. Spurgeon much labour. Not feeling disposed entirely to lose the large collection thus made, he has brought together a few out of many thousands, and given them to the world in a permanent form. Alphabetically arranged, the two goodly volumes, of which the first is already to hand, will certainly prove of great utility to preachers and teachers, as well as exceedingly interesting to many ordinary readers.

The proverbs have been gleaned from various sources, and the homely notes which follow them are, as a rule, made up of other proverbial expressions. The notes are intended to give hints as to how the proverbs may be best used by those who desire to flavour their speech with them; the meanings assigned are the most natural, and such as afford the most profitable treatment. Mr. Spurgeon has not been actuated by the motives of the antiquary, but rather by those of the moralist and the Christian. Holding that godly sentiments, sandwiched in between slices of wit and common sense, may become nutriment to the soul, he has placed not only moral precepts, but Gospel instructions in the midst of maxims well known wherever the English tongue is spoken.

Specimens from such a splendid collection may be taken at random, for all are good:—

A bad horse eats as much as a good one.—A reason for keeping good cattle, and employing efficient persons.

A bird in hand is better far
Than two which in the bushes are.

—This proverb turns up in several forms, but it always means that we are to prefer that which we have to that which we only expect. It is a proverb of this world only, and is not true on the broad field of eternal things. There our bird in the bush is worth all the birds that ever were in mortal hand.

Be solid, not sad; be merry, not mad.—There's a medium in thoughtfulness and gaiety; find it out and keep to it. The middle way in this matter is the safe way.

Cackling is not laying, and promising is not paying.—Creditors who have waited long for their money are well aware of this, and their patience grows feeble as the false promise is repeated. Thomas Fuller says, "Creditors have better memories than debtors, and are great observers of days and times."

Earth is our inn; heaven is our home.—We may well put up with discomfort in this world, for we shall soon be away from it; it is only for a few days that we accept its hospitality. Archbishop Leighton often said that if he were to choose a place to die in, he would choose an inn; for it looked like a pilgrim going home, to whom this world was all as an inn, and who was weary of the noise and confusion in it. He had his desire, for he died at the Bell Inn, in Warwick-lane.

He who marries a fool is a fool.—He did not use sufficient discretion and discernment. However, fool or not fool, he is in for it, and must bear the consequences.

If it rains—well! If it shines—well!—This is the contented man's feeling. He leaves the skies and clouds with Him who manages them far better than short-sighted mortals could. "I wish you a good day," said the divine to the peasant. The answer was, "Sir, every day is a good day to me, for God sends it."

In the preface, Mr. Spurgeon says that sermons would seldom be dull if they were more alive with aphorisms and epigrams. These may not be the point of the shaft, but they may be the feathers of the arrow. Comparatively, they are trifles; but nothing is trifling by which serious truth can be brought home to careless minds. We have no doubt this capital book of illustration will be a welcome help to many Christian workers.

THE GLOUCESTER CONFERENCE.

THIS annual Conference, convened by Rev. J. J. Luce, which was recently held, was largely attended. Three days were set apart for the Conference subjects—and one day for accounts of work at home and abroad.

The subject on the first day was "The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ." Dr. ELDER CUMMING founded his address upon 2 Cor. viii. 9., and spoke of Christ's grace in: (1) Emptying Himself of his own power and becoming entirely obedient to the will of God; (2) In his exposure to temptation, yet without sin; (3) In his perfect obedience to God—so that no cloud ever came between them—and the Father never knew anything against his Son; (4) In his perfect submission to God in place, time, and method. Dr. MORGAN (Leamington) applied the subject in a very practical manner. Rev. GRAHAME THWAITES spoke on the Grace of Jesus being the beauty of Jesus, leading his hearers to several passages with much felicity of thought.

The speakers in the afternoon were Revs. J. SLOAN and C. G. MOORE. The latter gave a most powerful address. Grace, he said, is too large a word to live in any of our definitions of it. He illustrated his address by the story of Saul's offering the sacrifice, in 1 Sam. xiii. There was the want of obedience in the crisis of his life's history. He trusted to a mere rite rather than to the living God. Mr. Moore's relation of a chapter in his own history was most telling, illustrating how God may answer our prayer for fuller consecration by deep trial.

At the evening meeting, Rev. J. T. BUTLIN (Birmingham) spoke upon Grace as the favour of God. Dr. CUMMING gave a very practical address, founded on Eph. v. 8. "Walking," he said, consists of little steps, one at a time. It is easy and natural. It suggests lowliness; it implies progress. "As children of light" implies no secrecy; you walk in safety; you can see how to help a brother.

SECOND DAY.

The subject on the second day was "The Love of God." Rev. N. S. TAYLOR showed that God's love is consistent with his anger against sin. Rev. J. T. BUTLIN declared it to be also consistent with the sufferings of his people. Dr. CUMMING spoke upon The Love of God in giving his Son.

At the afternoon meeting Dr. CUMMING took Rev. iii. 20, and applied it as Christ's appeal to the lukewarm Christian to admit Him into every chamber of the house, which He is willing to enter on four conditions: (1) That He has all the keys; (2) That He takes the management; (3) That He keeps the purse; (4) That He asks the guests. Rev. J. SLOAN followed upon Rom. xiii. Rev. F. B. MEYER gave a particularly helpful address on the Naturalness of the Spiritual Life. There must be nothing deformed or stilted.

At the evening meeting Rev. J. SLOAN and Rev. J. WILKINSON gave very practical addresses, and were followed by Rev. F. B. MEYER, who took for his keynote, "The King hath brought me into his chambers."

THIRD DAY.

The subject was "The Communion of the Holy Ghost." Rev. C. G. MOORE gave a striking address, founded on the story of Naaman. Fellowship, whilst being utterly indefinable, may be said to be common or shared life, with God and with one another, by the Holy Ghost. He showed how God first acted by an instrument not in fellowship—afterwards by Elisha, who at all risks acted in God's way, and was in fellowship. The result was that Naaman returned, not praising Elisha, but Elisha's God. "Oh, to preach," said Mr. Moore, "so that the people may be directed from us away to Christ." Gehazi, as an intruder, brings upon himself the curse. Rev. F. WEBSTER said the secret of life was (1) constant contact with God; (2) constant contact with souls.

In the afternoon, Rev. J. WILKINSON dwelt upon the importance of obedience. Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR also spoke with much unction.

In the evening, Rev. E. N. Thwaites gave a helpful address on the position of believers as seen in the type of the Levite: (1) "Joined" to the Lord (Gen. xxix. 34); (2) The Lord's possession (Num. iii. 12); (3) Relationship (Exod. iv. 14); (4) Separation (Num. viii. 14); (5) Their duty (Num. i. 50); (6) Their occpuation (2 Chron. v. 12). "Christians want converted faces."

The last day was devoted to accounts from Rev. J. Wilkinson, of work among the Jews; from Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission; from Mr. E. H. Glenny, North Africa Mission; Mr. E. J. Mather, Mission to Deep-sea Fishermen, and Mr. A. J. Arnold, Evangelical Alliance. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe was present, and spoke on the claims of the heathen. A very deep impression was made, and the searching character of the Conference was deeply felt.

DR. MONRO GIBSON ON THE BIBLE.

ON Thursday last, the members of the Open-Air Mission held their quarterly meeting in the Baptist Mission House, Furnival-street, Holborn. It was a happy gathering, turned to very profitable account by a lecture on "The Unity and Symmetry of the Bible," delivered by Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson. Sir George Bruce occupied the chair, and in some introductory remarks, testified his sympathy with the work of the Mission.

At the outset, Dr. Gibson showed that the sixty-six books of the Bible, though varied in literary character and contents, the work of many authors, and embracing a wide range of subjects, are not merely so many treatises bound in one volume, but are really a single book, and that book a miracle in the literary world. The books have not been carefully selected from a mass of other literature, but are a literature in themselves, and together constitute what is emphatically The Book. It would be impossible to make such a selection from Greek literature. And yet there are those who would have us believe that what would be impossible with the most careful selection from the rich and abundant literature of the most intellectual people of ancient times has been brought about by the merest accident in the history of the comparatively uncultured Israelitish people! Evidently the only explanation of the wonderful unity is that given at the beginning of the Epistle to the Hebrews: "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son."

Having remarked upon the character of the books, all of them making for righteousness, having for their object the turning of men from sin and leading them to holiness, Dr. Gibson showed that the unity is not simply one of tendency, but is distinctly organic. It is the unity of a body and not of a family; one life pervades and one mind directs the whole, from beginning to end, during a period of fourteen centuries at least. Speaking of the Old Testament in relation to the New, he cited the formula of the old divine: "The New lies hid in the Old, and the Old lies open in the New." The bud of promise developed slowly during long ages, and suddenly, in a single generation, spread into the open flower. This was a wonderful evolution, but not in the line of natural development, as it was against the current of Jewish thought and tendency.

Proceeding to indicate the symmetry of the Bible, the speaker showed that each Testament falls into two divisions; in the Old we have Moses and the Prophets, and in the New, Christ and the Apostles. As the Pentateuch is characterised by the "appearings" of God to his servants, so the Gospels record the appearing and movements of Christ among men. These first parts of the two Testaments may be called the books of Manifestation, in which God's message was delivered. Generally speaking, the remainder of the Old and New Testaments may be called two books of Revelation or Inspiration. These second books may also be subdivided into books of Application, Experience, and Outlook. Thus as to the Old Testament:—Application (historical books): Joshua, Judges, Ruth—Commonwealth; Samuel, Kings, Chronicles — Kingdom; Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther—Foreign Dominion. Experience (poetical books): Devotion, Psalms; Practical Wisdom, Job (piety without prosperity), Proverbs (prosperity with piety), Ecclesiastes (prosperity without piety); Love, Song of Solomon. Outlook (prophetical books): Isaiah, who sets forth Christ as "The Holy One of Israel," is the prophet of the advent; Jeremiah, who writes of "The Lord our Righteousness," and of whose book the Lamentations form a part, is the prophet of the cross; Ezekiel, who writes of the mighty one, the conqueror of death, is the prophet of the grave; Daniel, who writes of the eternal King, the Lord of all ages, is the prophet of the crown. The twelve minor prophets close with glorious intimations of the coming dawn.

With regard to the New Testament, Dr. Gibson described the Gospels: Matthew was written for the Jew, and sets forth Christ as the hope of Israel. Mark sets forth Christ for the Roman, as the great worker, the mighty conqueror, many in deeds and few in words. Luke wrote for the Greek, and brings into strong relief those features of the Lord's teaching which touch all peoples, and those incidents which are calculated to commend the Son of Man to men of culture and wide sympathies. He presents the Saviour as "the sinner's friend," and the word "sinner" occurs more often in Luke's Gospel than in all the others put together. John wrote for Christians, for those who, gathered together in Christ Jesus, are no longer Jews or Greeks, Romans or barbarians. The first three give the Christ of history; the fourth the Christ of theology, the Divine glory being in the foreground, and the Saviour being traced back to the bosom of God. In the three there is breadth; in the fourth there is depth, an inside view. The subdivisions of the second part of the New Testament were given thus:—Application (Acts): To the Jew—"beginning at Jerusalem"; to the Roman—Cornelius at Cæsarea; to the Greek—Paul at Antioch; to the Christians—Jerusalem to Rome. Experience (Epistles): Faith, Paul; Works, James; Hope, Peter; Love, John; Perseverance to the end, Jude. Outlook (Revelation): From exile in Patmos to home in the New Jerusalem. The Apocalypse reminds one of the close of a great oratorio, in which all the leading thoughts are combined in one grand finale. As we go forward we seem to be travelling backward in the multiplied references to the past, until at last, as we approach the magnificent close, we find ourselves at the new Genesis—like the old, but how infinitely above it? He who appeared as the Angel of the Covenant in earliest times, appears once more, and says, "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, the first and the last."

The address, of which we have only been able to give a brief summary, was replete with precious teaching admirably expressed. The unity and symmetry of the Bible were shown to be the truest outcome of analytical study, and the workers listened throughout with rapt attention.

REV. DR. T. L. CUYLER, of Brooklyn, U.S.A., preached on Sunday last in Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road (Rev. Newman Hall's). Amongst the congregation in the morning were the new American minister to London (Mr. Robert Lincoln, son of the late Abraham Lincoln), and Miss Lincoln.

For the Young.

THE SWEDISH ORPHAN GIRL.

EMELIE BERG was one of my earliest friends in Stockholm. Her mother, Lena, had been our nurse for many years, and we were all very fond of her. Her wedding was about the first great holiday I remember. After some years she came to stop at our house, on a visit with her little girl. Emelie was then about four years old, a beautiful child, with dark eyes, and a heavenly expression in her countenance.

In the evening we used to gather round her little bed, to hear her say her prayers. Even at this early age she could repeat many hymns and prayers. We always considered it a great treat to have the little girl with us for a short visit, when her mother came to help in the house. We looked upon little Emelie as a child of our own, and it was a great amusement to mind her.

After some time we lost sight of Lena and little Emelie. They moved away from the neighbourhood where we lived, and thus passed out of our knowledge.

Some years afterwards my father one day met little Emelie in the streets of Stockholm. She was then clothed in rags, and was begging. She was lame, and used a crutch. The day was intensely cold; it was a very severe winter. My father looked at the child, and thought he recognised her. He soon perceived that she was the little girl we used to be so fond of. He brought her home to our house, and told the servant to give her some dinner. He then called us all to come and see Emelie. She was at that time about ten years old, and we were young ladies. We hardly recognised our little friend in the garb of a beggar-child, limping on one leg. We eagerly asked her to tell us what had happened to her.

Her story was as follows: Her father, who was a mason, fell down from the scaffolding of a house, and was killed on the spot. Some time after this sad occurrence, poor Emelie herself fell while going down the stairs of the school she attended. The children were all rushing out, each trying to get out first. In the rush Emelie was thrown down, and fell at the bottom of the stairs. She was carried to the hospital, where she remained for nearly a year. She suffered a great deal. For some time her mother used to come and see her, but after the first six months her visits ceased. Emelie often longed to see her again, and watched anxiously for her coming, but in vain.

When Emelie herself was able to leave the hospital, she made her way to the house that used to be her home, but found other people in possession of the house. On inquiring after her mother, the neighbours told her that one day, during a severe frost, her mother went out to fetch water at an open well close by. When she did not return, her friends went to look for her, and found that she had fallen into the well, and was drowned. This was indeed terrible news to poor Emelie, who found herself left an orphan in the world without a friend. "What would the poor do if it were not for the poor?" is an old and true saying. A workman's wife asked Emelie to come into her house, and tried to console her in her great grief. When night came on, the kind woman and her husband allowed her to lie down in a corner of their room, where the poor little child cried herself to sleep.

We were all delighted to see poor Emelie again, even in her forlorn condition. We had again a child of our own to look after. The text we had so often learnt came home to our minds, "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction," and we thought Emelie was indeed a real God-sent treasure.

Emelie had still her beautiful eyes and splendid brown hair. We could not, of course, leave her in her ragged condition, but at once set to work to find some clothes she could wear. All were ready to contribute something. Even the servants took a great interest in the little girl. We arranged, after a little consultation, to cut down our clothes in order to make them fit her. Every one in the house undertook to make some garment, and we told Emelie to come back the next day. In a few days we had our little girl rigged out in nice and suitable apparel.

Emelie came regularly to dine in our house for a long time—for three or four years, I think. After that time all was changed, as our dear father died, and we had to leave the house which had been the home of our childhood. Only those who have themselves experienced such changes, which are so common to our mortal life, can understand the heart-bitterness connected with all such events.

The time that Emelie had been with us had been improved to the best advantage. She came to us every morning for lessons, and I taught her much which I had learned myself. I was nearly eighteen years old, and enjoyed the advantages to be derived from the best schools in Stockholm. Emelie was the delight of my heart. She was clever and teachable, and quick at taking in everything. She soon learned to sew beautifully, and to do embroidery work. She also learnt a little French, history, geography, and arithmetic. Everything seemed to come easy to her. I also took pleasure in seeing her neatly dressed, although her dresses were always very plain, with no trimmings of any kind. After a time Emelie was able to do a great deal of needlework for me. In fact, she became so very useful to me that by degrees I recommended her to all my friends. She used also to go out to do needlework, and soon become quite popular.

She was greatly sought after, as all good workers are when they become known. Some of my married friends gave her employment for months together. The poor girl was often a great sufferer from her leg. Her crutch gave her much inconvenience. It had often to be repaired, and stuffed in different ways as she grew up; and it was dangerous for her to go out in frosty weather.

I need not say that if I loved Emelie, she loved me in return as her only friend in the world. It was, therefore, a great trial when our home had to be broken up, and I had no place for her. She had, indeed, always lived with the kind people who had given her shelter when she came out of hospital as a little girl; and she always stopped with them when she was not otherwise employed.

In the course of time my sister and I left Sweden. My parting from Emelie was very sad. I hardly knew what to say to console her. I knew she had a few friends among my acquaintances, but she looked upon me as her best friend, and the world seemed to her like a wilderness without me. The only source of consolation was prayer. We prayed together, the night before we parted, that God would send the Comforter, the Holy Spirit, to cheer and abide with her, and that God would raise up friends to help her. It has often seemed to me that our prayer then was but a feeble cry for help and succour. We hardly then knew if we could believe that there was such a gift as the Holy Ghost. Marvellous to relate, however, peace and assurance were imparted to our hearts, and we felt as if God had heard and answered our prayers. We parted that night in a hopeful frame, and we met years afterwards to call to mind the truth of the promise, "Before they call I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear" (Isa. lxv. 24).

Before I left Stockholm, I asked my friends, young and old, to remember Emelie, and to be kind to her. I addressed my request particularly to two little girls, whom I dearly loved, and reminded them of the promise of God to those that care for the orphans and the fatherless. The elder of these girls was about twelve years old. Her name was Eliza. The name of the younger was Mary. Not long afterwards these little girls lost their own mother, and realised in their own case what it was to be orphans, although they possessed wealth and had many friends. But it is always sad for a child to have no mother to look up to for love and advice. My little friends faithfully performed the promise which they had made to me; and often asked Emelie to go to them, and do a day's work.

In the course of time both these girls married, and had their own homes. Emelie proved a very useful servant to them, and helped to look after their little children, both in health and sickness.

Emilie took naturally great interest in the poor and destitute. Having been an orphan herself, she did her utmost to help poor orphan children. The plan she adopted was as follows: She induced servant girls to unite together in order to work for children with whose cases they were acquainted. She formed what she used to term a "ring" round each orphan child. Each ring consisted of four or five servant girls. These she persuaded to take in turn the duty of looking after the children's clothes, and their repairs, and of washing for them. In some cases she induced these servants to pay small contributions for the support of the children. Most of these children, however, were workhouse orphans, which the Swedish Government used to board out in different families, and thus the heaviest portion of the expenses was provided for. Emelie has contrived in this way to help nearly eighty orphans during the last thirty years. She is still a most earnest Christian woman, and devoted to God's service in every possible way. She is what many people might call Puritanical in her opinions and habits. She never wears ornaments, or jewellery of any kind. She has, however, often received presents of jewellery, but after a while she sells them all for the benefit of the poor.

Dear Emelie has spent many a long year in hospital during her life, as she has been a great sufferer. But wherever she goes she makes friends, and exhibits the character of a sincere Christian, whose light is not kept hid under a bushel. Her life has, indeed, been a blessing to many, and she will shine like a star in the Saviour's crown. Such a life may teach us the lesson that the humblest person may be a real blessing to her land and people. Christians ought more often to remember the words of their Lord: "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was hungry, and ye gave Me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave Me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took Me in: naked, and ye clothed Me: I was sick, and ye visited Me: I was in prison, and ye came unto Me...And the King shall answer and say unto them, Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even the least, ye did it unto Me" (Matt. xxv. 34—36, 40).

THE TELUGU MISSIONS.—The last report of the American Baptist Telugu Mission chronicles 2700 natives baptized during the past twelve months. The missionaries are urgently calling for more men from the American churches who will come out and help in the pastorate of these multitudes of new converts.

MUNICH.—Herr G. S. Paul Schweikher, a Wesleyan minister, on the staff of The Methodist Herald in this city, writes as follows:—It may interest some of your readers in England who travel abroad and visit Munich (that celebrated city for art and music) to know that there exists here a society of Christians, who try to serve the Lord faithfully in the midst of much religious formality and Romish superstition. The preaching hall of the Wesleyan Methodists is at Fürstenfelder-str., 19, Munich. The friends gladly welcome everyone who is a brother in Christ Jesus. The preacher and his wife speak English, and are willing to give needful information concerning Munich affairs.

XIV.—A PRAISE MEETING.

I HELD a mission once, which was begun under great difficulties and perplexity. Those who should have been the helpers of it, because they were ostensibly the promoters, were the very people who interposed obstacles in the way.

They made propositions, which, instead of concentrating our efforts, were all for scattering and dissipating them.

However, the work was the Lord's, or it was not; and, if it was his, we expected that He would clear the way, and overrule oppositions of every kind.

There was no united prayer-meeting on the first Saturday, as is usual on these occasions; but perhaps there was much real and earnest prayer amongst individuals. The Sunday services opened with manifest tokens of both God's smiles and Satan's frowns. There was no pre-arrangement or organisation for the meetings day by day, so we went forward as blind ones, but trusting the Lord's leading.

Some of the things that happened were very perplexing at the time; but afterwards we could see how wonderfully, and wisely too, all had been ordered. Day by day souls were saved, and day by day new opposition arose.

We, that is all who were actually engaged in the mission, proposed to meet for prayer at twelve o'clock in a central place. We invited friends who were interested to join us, and some influential person of the town to preside each day at the meeting.

On the Friday, the gentleman who should have been in the chair, sent me a note, to say that he was unable to attend that morning; but if Mr. C——,who was appointed to preside the next day, would take his place, he would take Mr. C——'s place on the morrow.

Another note was enclosed, which was to be read at the meeting. Mr. C—— kindly took the chair, and read and re-read the note in his hand. Then he wiped his tears, and then his glasses, and when the first hymn was sung, he rose up and said in a trembling voice, "I have here a note from Mr. B—— requesting me to take the chair in his absence to-day"—then there was a pause. "He begs," said the chairman, "that this meeting will thank God with him for saving his soul!"

"Praise the Lord," said a voice, and then followed a murmur all over the hall.

The people had hitherto regarded this gentleman as a saved man; for he had before now expressed his indignation at any suspicion on the subject.

While they were thus whispering together, I gave out the Doxology, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow;" this was readily taken up and sung heartily twice over.

After this, the chairman said with much emotion, "I want you to praise God also for me"; then—another pause—he added, "most of you remember my dear wife joining the Church of Rome a few years since. She was converted to God last night, and has come back to us!"

There was again a burst of praise, and again we sang, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." The people had scarcely taken their seats, when another gentleman of position stood up, and said, "May I say a word or two? Thank God for me, I was saved last night!"

The meeting became excited, and once more we praised God in the same song and words.

In this way we went on until eleven persons, in more or less lengthened testimony, asked for thanksgiving and praise.

Before the conclusion of the meeting, I could not resist standing up and saying, "Last night it seemed to me as if the powers of hell were let loose to hinder the preacher, and to harden sinners, but see what God has wrought! We must not go by our feelings, that is certain. I have seldom been more discouraged and beaten down than I was last evening." With prayer and thanksgiving this remarkable meeting closed.

After the people had dispersed, there remained behind a gentleman to speak with me.

He said, "I have been following this mission very closely, and I have observed the pertinacity with which you keep to that one point, 'Ye must be born again.'"

I replied, "I am thankful to hear your testimony. That is the point I desire to urge inone way and another, and it is one of the objects of the mission to enforce this truth. I have not come as a shepherd to feed and lead out the flock to pasture, but as a fisherman to put down the net. This net is let down to enclose fishes of the sea; and to draw them out of their natural element, to the Master's feet."

"Do you mean," asked the gentleman, "that we are all fishes of the sea, as you term it?"

"Yes," I said, "all those who have not yet been enclosed and drawn out. By nature we are all children of Adam, and lost in the Fall, without exception."

"But it is very hard," he interrupted, "for you, a perfect stranger, to come here and judge us in this way!"

"Dear friend, I do not judge you at all. I merely state what Scripture says. 'All have sinned and come short of the glory of God'—'there is no difference.'"

"That seems very uncharitable to me, for many of us, including myself, have never heard of this new birth. We are doing our best to be as good as we possibly can. What can we do more?"

I said, "Supposing now, you are an unsaved man, and, as such, certain of being lost for ever, would it not be very uncharitable and unkind of me to tell you that you were all right, and that you need not fear? The God of love and truth would not tell you that. He is too charitable; but it is the devil who flatters thus, and spreads a net for the feet. He gets the deceitful heart of man to co-operate with him in this deadly work."

"Well, well," said the gentleman, "what am I to do to be saved?"

I answered, "St. Paul gave a very good reply to that question once, but we should remember that the person to whom he gave it, was a man who had been awakened by the Spirit of God to see and know himself to be a lost sinner. It was to such a man as this that the Apostle said, 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house.' God's Word says we are all lost, and the same Holy Spirit who inspired these words comes to the willing heart to write that truth or fact there. It then becomes a matter of reality, not mere opinion, and the sinner knows and feels he is a sinner.

"Ask God to convict you in this way, and then believe in the Lord Jesus, who died to save lost sinners, and you will be saved and know it."

After prayer he thanked me, and went his way.

He had not been gone long before he returned to the same place, saying, "I do believe, I will believe"; and he did so. It appeared that he had been under conviction for some days; now he had found peace.

I said, "Thank God for you also. This hall has been the place of testimony for twelve persons at least to-day! Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

My friend became a worker in that very mission, and continues to be one still.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—Messrs. H. Veasey and Alexander Clark have been holding services nightly in a tent at Sutton, Surrey. The meetings have steadily increased in numbers. Many believers have been refreshed, and souls brought to Christ. The meetings will be continued throughout July.

TILL HE COME.

TILL He come, whose right it is
O'er a ransomed world to reign;
Till He come, and all be his
That He gave Himself to gain;
Till He come, and pain and woe
Flee like night before the day;
Till He come, and all things go
That unworthy are to stay;
Till He come, whose hand alone
Can arrest the flow of tears;
Till He come, whose tenderest tone
Shall dispel our latest fears;
Watchful let us work and pray,
Hastening the joyful day.

Till He come—so runs the line—
Marking off the term of ill,
Darkest hour of powers malign
Never more an hour to fill;
Till He come, the might of hell
Still against the saints may rage;
And, beneath the tempter's spell,
Men in strifes and sins engage;
Till He come, wrong may prevail,
And the right be done in vain;
Truth's confession still entail
Toil, and obloquy, and pain;
But our hope can brook delay,
Waiting such a glorious day.

"Till He come!" 'tis sorrow's sigh,
Upward borne by Hope in tears.
"Till He come!" 'tis faith's reply
To a thousand doubts and fears.
"Till He come!" it is the groan
Of creation in her pangs,
"Till He come!" on this alone
Earth her expectation hangs.
"Till He come!" the words return
Echoing from the world again,
Where the weary nations yearn
For a righteous King to reign.
Thus for man and earth we pray,
"Hasten, Lord, the joyful day."

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.

THIS work is being prosecuted with energy in Paris by a devoted Christian lady, who, having formerly been on the stage, is intimately acquainted with the trials and temptations of the profession. Madame Bertrand is a good linguist, and has already gained influence over girls of different nationalities. She seems to have been specially raised up for the work, at a time when a French actor had despondingly stated, "We are all going down straight to hell, and nobody cares." A young actress had also written to Mrs. Courthope Todd, "I often pray, but God does not hear me." The expenses of this branch of the work have been guaranteed by a London donor for two months. Madame Bertrand will work specially in connection with the three large theatres in the Exhibition, also the various cafés chantants, and amongst the ballet dancers of the Opera, Eden Theatre, Chatelet, and Jardin de Paris. During a recent visit of Mr. and Mrs. Todd to Paris, the door was widely opened for initiatory work, and some hundreds of letters, written in French and Gospels and text cards, were given to, and gratefully accepted by, young employés of both sexes.

During the summer two parties of delicate theatrical and pantomime children will be received for a fortnight in a house which has been taken at Clacton-on-Sea. Mr. and Mrs. Todd hope to hold drawing-room gatherings on the South Coast in August, and in the principal cities of Ireland in September. The committee will be grateful to any friends who can arrange meetings when the story of this important work can be told. Further information can be obtained at the Mission Institute, Macready House, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, W.C.

THE LATE MISS MARY L. WHATELY,

English-Egyptian Mission, Cairo.

THE subject of this brief sketch was the second daughter of Archbishop Whately. She was born in 1824 at the country rectory of Halesworth, in Suffolk, where her father resided some years before his appointment to the see of Dublin. The chief part of her early life, however, was spent in Ireland, where, under her father's roof, she and her sisters received the highest educational training, mental, moral, and religious, from a father and mother such as few are blest with.

Activity, energy, and intelligence of no common order, distinguished her from childhood; and, after the Irish famine, when so many organisations were formed to help the poor and ignorant, she found a field for those energies, especially in the ragged schools opened in Dublin, in which she, her mother and sisters, were constantly employed. She often said in later life that the training she received in the Irish mission schools was an invaluable preparation for the work in which she was afterwards to be engaged. She had learned before this early beginning that the first step was to give herself to Him who had bought her with a price, and in this spirit her work at home and abroad was ever carried on. She was a good Italian scholar, and, together with her sisters, was at one time much occupied in visiting and teaching the poor Italians who were very numerous in Dublin. This also served as a preparation for the work she was to undertake later on among various nationalities.

In 1858 she visited Cairo and the Holy Land with some friends, and the interest awakened in her mind by this visit was the first preparation for her life-work in the East. At one time, after her return, she had much wished to engage in work in Jerusalem, but circumstances made this impossible, and another path was to open for her soon afterwards. In the winter of 1860 her health had suffered severely after the loss of her mother and youngest sister, and she was ordered to a southern climate. Her thoughts turned towards the land of Egypt, which she had already learned to love. She went there with a near relation, and, while residing in Cairo, felt a strong desire to do something for the little Moslem girls, who seemed so utterly neglected, living the life of mere drudges, without a thought or hope beyond their outer life. At that time no attempt had been made in behalf of Moslems in Egypt, and education for women, even for those nominally Christian, was at the lowest ebb.

In spite of difficulties and discouragements innumerable, and prophecies of failure on all sides, she opened a small girls' school in her own hired home. With the aid of a respectable Syrian Protestant matron, whose services she engaged (whose own native language, of course, was Arabic, and who knew about as much English as her employer had learned of Arabic), she went forth into the streets and lanes near her dwelling. She persuaded the mothers to let their girls come and learn to read and sew. With infinite difficulty she gathered about eight or nine little ones, taught them the Arabic alphabet from a card she had prepared, the first rudiments of sewing, and a text from the Arabic Bible she had herself learned by heart. This was the small beginning from which such a blessed fruit was to spring. Later, she was obliged to return to Europe—home duties claimed her; but it was ever a precious recollection to her that among the last things read to her father were the proof sheets of her second volume of "Ragged Life in Egypt," which particularly pleased him.

(From Photograph by T. Teanneret, Montreux.)

Her Irish home being broken up by his death, she settled herself in Cairo for life. With the voluntary help of Mr. Mansoor Shakoor, a devoted and highly gifted missionary from the Lebanon, and, a little later, of his brother, she was able to add a boys' school to the one already opened for girls. This filled even more rapidly, as the need of education for lads, to whom it might be daily bread, was more readily felt. In 1869, the Khedive, Ismaïl Pasha, at the kind suggestion of the Prince of Wales, gave her an excellent site, just outside the city walls, on which to build her mission-house and schools. She erected a spacious building for the boys' and girls' schools, a fourth part of the price of which was collected by friends in England, while the rest was supplied from her own by no means large resources.

Meanwhile, she had been joined, some years previously, by the betrothed bride of her first missionary helper, Mansoor Shakoor—the daughter of one of the landed proprietors in the Lebanon district, who first came to her as a young girl, was educated and treated by her as a daughter both before and after her marriage, and was her fellow-worker in all her labours of love. When the two excellent brothers who had been her assistants in the work were taken to their heavenly rest, within a few years of each other, the young Syrian widow remained, instead of returning to the home where her husband's family wished her to join them, and resolved to devote her life to that Mission to which her husband had given himself heart and soul, and spent all his strength, till death closed his labours.

From that time the work continued to prosper. A medical mission was added to the schools in 1879, for which Miss Whately built a dispensary and patients' waiting-room, also from her own private means. It had originated in her unaided efforts to relieve the sick, and is now carried on by a skilful and pious Syrian doctor. The schools now contain upwards of six hundred in daily attendance. Half the boys and two-thirds of the girls are Moslems, the rest being Copts, with some Syrians, and a few other nationalities, including several Jews. Almost all the subordinate teachers were trained in the school.

All are taught to read and write in Arabic, and all learn the Scriptures and Christian doctrine, as far, at least, as head knowledge goes, and, we believe, in very many cases, with the heart also. Any who have visited these schools will be able to bear witness that the answers of the children would do credit to any well-ordered English Sunday-school. In addition to this the boys receive an excellent secular education, including French and English well and thoroughly taught. All over the country pupils of the school may be found filling important positions in the railway and telegraph offices, in mercantile houses, in places under Government, and in other situations of trust. The good ground has been prepared, and the seed been sown, which will bring an abundant harvest when the Lord's own time shall come.

The girls necessarily receive a more simple and rudimentary education, because of the system of early marriages; but all of them learn reading and writing in their own tongue, Scripture history and doctrine, and plain and fancy needlework. Many mothers brought up in the school (indeed, almost all who are within reach) bring their children in turn, and visits are eagerly welcomed. The houses of rich and poor open to such visits number several hundred; and, even with the aid of a Bible-woman and other helpers, it is scarcely possible to keep up with the requirements of this branch of the work. A school for boys has also been commenced at Ghizeh, not far from the Pyramids; and a Levantine branch, as it is called, on the Mission premises, gives a European education to girls paying a small sum for instruction in French and English, and is superintended by a qualified English teacher.

The Medical Mission relieves several thousands every year of sick and suffering poor who could not afford to purchase even the simplest remedies for themselves; and has rescued multitudes from hopeless blindness by timely aid in the terrible eye diseases so common in Egypt. All who attend and are willing to listen hear daily the reading of the Scriptures, and have the Gospel tidings set before them as far as time permits. This daily reading at the dispensary was the delight of Miss Whately's life. Her simple and familiar explanations and illustrations of Gospel truth in the common tongue, which she had thoroughly mastered, were listened to eagerly by many a poor patient; often she was cheered by overhearing the exclamations from one and another: "We never heard such words before; they are sweeter than honey." The distribution of the Scriptures was another of the great interests of this active missionary life. Every year a Nile boat was hired for a week or ten days, and copies of the Scriptures distributed to the men and boys of the villages who could read.

At first these efforts were often met by opposition from the ignorant and bigoted, but the labour of love bore its fruit and won its way; and latterly the arrival of the boat was hailed at many a humble village of mud huts among the palm groves on the banks of the ancient river, and a crowd came to the shore to meet "the people with the book," and ask for a copy, and "a larger one for myself"; "one for my brother or my cousin, who can read." Women hailed her at the entrance of the villages, or grouped around her and her unwearied helper and friend to listen to "Sitt Miriam" and "Sitt Fereedy" as they read the Gospel story, or told of the miracles and parables of "Seidna Issa" (the Lord Jesus).

But the end of these devoted labours was drawing near. Last year she paid one of her occasional visits to Europe, and the beloved relations and friends who rejoiced to welcome her all agreed that never had she seemed brighter, or her conversation been more full of varied interest. In February last, her helper was obliged to go further up the river for health. Miss Whately hired as usual a Nile boat for her annual trip. A short one it had to be, for she had sunk all her own available resources in the Mission; and even the help obtained from England barely sufficed to keep the now extensive work going, on the most rigidly economical scale. A very few days were all the slender Mission purse could afford. She had caught a cold, and was urged to give up or postpone the voyage. But the hire was paid, and she could not give it up. She had been trying for years to raise money to buy a Mission boat. Could this have been secured, it might, humanly speaking, have made the whole difference as to the end. But the Master's "home-call" had gone forth, though she knew it not. The cold developed into congestion of the lungs, and, though there seemed at one time to be a decided improvement, a sudden relapse came, indicating failure at the heart, and in a brief space the vital spark had fled.

Now that she has finished her earthly course, will no British Christian come to the aid of the work she founded? Her sister, Miss E. J. Whately, and Mrs. Shakoor, will continue to carry on the Mission on the same lines; the latter residing in the Mission House, and perpetuating the labours in which she had been her friend s associate for so many years. For the information of the many friends of the work, we may add that the hon. sec. in this country is Miss J. E. Jourdain, 21, Westbourne Park-villas, W.

KINGSWOOD, BIRMINGHAM.—A deeply interesting three days' conference was recently held here. It was exceedingly well attended by the people of the district, and by Christians from Birmingham and Leamington. The addresses were characterised by a close adherence to Scripture, and were very helpful to those present. The speakers were Rev. J. T. Butlin, vicar of St. Clement; Rev. Dr. Morris, Parochial Church Mission Society, Nechells; Rev. F. S. Webster, vicar of St. Thomas, Birmingham, and Mr. John M. McAuliffe.

MESSRS. HYDE AND STEVENSON.

THESE two young evangelists are pursuing their evangelistic labours in the south of Ireland. Accompanied by a friend from London, they have conducted a ten days' mission in Clonmel. The services were held in the Methodist and Presbyterian churches, and were well attended. There was striking evidence of the Holy Spirit's gracious work. The noon gatherings for prayer and short "Bible talks," were held daily at the Friends' Meeting-house, and were felt to be times of near access to the "throne of grace." There has been much searching of heart among believers, as they have been tenderly yet faithfully appealed to on the subject of their solemn responsibilities.

The singing by Mr. Stevenson (especially of some new hymns as solos) added much to the solemnity and pathos of the services.

As the evangelists pass on to other scenes in the Master's service, we commend them to the sympathy of Christians wherever their lot may be cast. H. M. B.

THE SCRIPTURES FOR IRELAND.

THE important character of the work done by the Scripture-Readers' Society for Ireland is well known. We are glad to observe, by the sixty-eighth annual report, that last year's operations were in many respects very encouraging. The Committee has had to mourn the loss of some valued friends and generous subscribers, but the conviction that the work is the Lord's has sustained its members, and the devoted readers also, in times of anxiety, as well as during comparative plain sailing. The year's income amounted to £3165, and at the close there was a sum of £186 due to the treasurer. Ireland sadly needs a knowledge of the Scriptures, and this Society does much to supply the need.

In several places the report bears testimony to the fact that the people of Ireland are now open to listen to those who tell out the Gospel in its simplicity. The many prayers which have been offered during recent years have certainly been answered, and Christian effort has of late met with a very cheering response. One reader writes, "All classes received me kindly," and this is joyfully echoed by many others. The Pharisaic spirit is occasionally met with even among the Irish peasantry, for one man, after expressing a hope that God would change his heart, observed, self-righteously, that it was "not a bad one!"

It is peculiarly interesting to find that the itinerant labourers in the extreme western islands meet with a ready hearing from the people. The priests still keep a sharp watch on the movements of their flocks. In one case a priest accused the reader of "tampering" with his people, and vigorously denounced the distribution of "Protestant Testaments and other papers" among them. The reader rejoined that his endeavour was to impress the people with the great truth that God loves them, but this by no means satisfied the priest. In some places in the West, the Irish language was the only medium of intercourse, and therein the wonderful works of God were earnestly proclaimed. In houses and cabins, in fields and lanes, the Gospel has been spoken of quietly to thousands of individuals and families, and, while much blessing is already visible, it is also certain that good has in many places been done which the Great Day alone will reveal. Carried on in a spirit of love and not of controversy, the work cannot but have the smile of God. All communications should be addressed to the secretary, Captain J. Kearney White, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin.

RUSSIA.—The Czar has commanded the president of the Evangelical Lutheran Consistory, M. de Giers, to prosecute personal inquiries into the condition of the Lutheran churches in the Baltic provinces, and to report thereon. It is hoped that the outcome will be an improvement in the status of the Lutheran Church. M. de Giers is the brother of the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

CLAPHAM PROPHETIC CONVENTION

THE annual Convention for the study of Prophetic Scripture, was held at the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, on June 18, 19, and 20. The Convention seems to be making headway; the large attendance, with one exception, at all the meetings testified to a growing interest in its subject.

In the morning of the first day, the chair was taken by Mr. G. H. PEMBER, who remarked that the Bible presented a startling phenomenon; it declared that at some time fixed in the counsels of God, He would suddenly reveal his arm, and repeat, on a far grander scale, the marvels of Egypt. Many would say, "Yes, but we cannot be sure that the prediction will come true." The Bible, however, presented two other phenomena. It contained a series of complicated prophecies which ran down the centuries, and which has been fulfilled almost to exhaustion. This showed that we were now in the last times. There was also another series of prophecies, describing movements which should take place in these last times; and they were now being fulfilled before our eyes. We thus had proof, not merely that the threatened judgments would be literally executed, but also that the time was at hand. Hence it would seem that the day of the Lord must be near, even at the door.

Rev. F. A. C. LILLINGSTON delivered an interesting and stirring address on the words, "He must reign." By many quotations he enforced this solemn truth, depicting in vivid terms the absolute necessity of Christ's intervention, for the world, the Church, and the individual Christian. He pointed out that Satan is now the prince of this world, and must remain so until the stronger than he comes to bind him, and reign in his stead. The large audience seemed to be much moved by the powerful application of his subject with which this speaker concluded.

Mr. H. F. BOWKER having been prevented by illness from attending the meeting, his place was taken by Rev. JAMES NEIL, who gave an interesting address on "The Signs of the Times." These he arranged in three classes—political, moral, and chronological. In regard to the first class he enlarged upon the rapid spread of democracy. He also pointed out the gravely significant aspect of the Jewish question, and the fact that the Hebrew exiles were now actually returning to their own country in a continuous stream. Still more important were the moral signs. On every side spiritualism, necromancy, superstition, and infidelity were abounding. In regard to the condition of the professing Church, the speaker showed how the increase of sensuous worship, musical services, and ornate ritual, together with the Laodicean spirit of the day, proved that we were already in the "perilous times" of "the last days."

Rev. Dr. BULLINGER presided in the afternoon. An interesting and instructive address was delivered by Rev. John Wilkinson, on "The Messiah of Prophecy the Jesus of History." The attention of the large audience was very marked.

Mr. A. J. ARNOLD, secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, presided at the evening meeting. A powerful and incisive address was given by Rev. Dr. SINCLAIR PATTERSON, on "A Dream of Governments." In an exposition of the dream of Nebuchadnezzar, the speaker exhibited the failure of every form of human government. He showed that the democratic experiment was likely to prove the most disastrous of all, and would end with the revelation of the lawless one. Unregenerate man was equally selfish, whether he were an aristocrat with his feudal rights, or a workman with his vote. Blame must be distributed impartially. There could be no stable or absolutely just government until He should come whose right it is to reign.

Rev. G. D. HOOPER spoke on "The World's Theology: its Divinely Predicted Development and End." In an elaborate review, he traced the devil's travesty of true religion from its early appearance in the plain of Shinar and through the succeeding ages, down to our own day. He expounded the leading features of its doctrine and morals, giving a very vivid and powerful sketch of the latter.

Rev. Dr. Bullinger closed the first day of the Conference with prayer and thanksgiving for the manifestation of the Lord's blessing, and the increased interest of his people in the prophetic Word.

MEETING OF WORKERS.

THERE was a goodly muster at the monthly meeting for workers, held on Wednesday last at the Home of Industry, 29, Bethnal Green-road, E. It was gratifying to hear from Mrs. Merry that Miss Macpherson's fifty-seventh family, consisting of a hundred children, had no sooner been taken across the ocean than they were happily placed with people who can be trusted to train them to useful and Christian lives. Moreover, some forty-five other children had been admitted to the Home towards making up another party.

Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR gave an account of the rise and progress of the China Inland Mission, showing how wonderfully God has answered believing prayer. The story of his recent visit to America and China was equally full of interest. In the former place the responsibility of maintaining missionaries was assumed right gladly by churches and individuals, while workers who had shown their devotion in godly lives readily came forward for service. While in China, Mr. Taylor had many trials, through illness of missionaries and other causes, and yet there were many reasons for rejoicing, in view of the firm faith of some of the native Christians. When, not long ago, Miss Jennie Webb (formerly of the Home of Industry) was seriously ill, and indeed lay at death's door, several men, who held her in high regard for her service in the opium hospital, earnestly besought the Lord for her, and their petitions availed, for Miss Webb rallied, and has now recovered strength. This, Mr. Taylor said, is not the only instance in which our workers have been prayed back to life by faithful Chinese natives.

It was announced that Mr. F. S. Arnot and his party had not, so far, been able to leave Benguela for the interior of Africa. In earnest prayer the Lord was asked to carry Mr. Morris and his companions safely to their destination, and greatly to bless them to the peoples among whom they may have to labour.

EUROPEAN AND EURASIAN CHILDREN IN INDIA.—Rev. N. L. Rockey, principal of the Memorial Boys' School, Cawnpore, writes that there are hundreds of European and Eurasian children growing up like natives in the bazaars, knowing little of English or the Christian religion. They can be sent to no schools, except charity ones, or the cheap schools which the Roman Catholics have founded. The children of poor widows and pensioners labour under a like disadvantage. What is required is an association of benevolent people, desirous for the Christian education of these children, who will guarantee £1 a month for an orphan, or 12s. a month in aid of a pensioner's child. There are in the Memorial School several boys supported by charitable persons, and many more could be taken. Such care of the children would, Mr. Rockey says, greatly help the mission cause, as these children, though ignorant, are recognised as Christians by the natives. Information on which to act could be supplied by missionaries of any denomination in large stations, and Mr. Rockey himself would readily answer the questions of benevolent correspondents.

THE MALOGA ABORIGINAL MISSION.

MR. DANIEL MATTHEWS and his wife, accompanied by Paddy and Jennie Swift, aborigines of New South Wales, attended the noon prayer-meeting at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on Thursday last. Those who were present are likely ever to remember the deeply interesting story that was told. The first to address the meeting was Mr. MATTHEWS, who briefly related his efforts during the past fifteen years in co-operation with his devoted wife. For some years previously he had been exerting himself on behalf of the natives, after a considerable period of residence in the colony in search of his fortune. The work has always been very difficult, the people being sadly degraded; indeed, many who have started on efforts to elevate the various tribes have ultimately relinquished their endeavours through utter want of encouragement. Looking to God for blessing, Mr. Matthews continued undaunted through many trials, protecting the people from injury, if not at once succeeding in their spiritual enlightenment. After ten years it was clear that the Spirit of God was working, and in a short time quite a number of the people were brought to the Lord. The outpouring of blessing was greatly in excess of any expectation, and it was then made abundantly clear that the poor blacks of Australia were not sunk too low in degradation for the Gospel of Christ to effect their uplifting.

PADDY SWIFT is a good specimen of the Australian aboriginal tribes. His brief address spoke of deep humility and lively gratitude. He remarked that there was a time when he was blacker in heart than in face; but he rejoiced to know that his sins were forgiven through Christ. As long as God should give him life and ability he would praise Him for his love, and make the name of Jesus known. Paddy added, in tones of gladness, that he hoped to be able to return to Australia and carry the Gospel to many thousands of his people in Queensland. Some whites shoot them down, and others are afraid of them; he was not afraid of them, and he prayed that God would bless his entrance among them with the story of the Cross of Christ. JENNIE SWIFT followed with some earnest words. She has a ready tongue and showed a warm heart. Remarking that her heart yearned for her dear blacks, she alluded indignantly to the insinuation of some ignorant people that blacks have no souls. That some had given their hearts to the Lord, and were now living the new life, was a full answer to any question as to the people having souls. In conclusion, she solemnly asked herself and her hearers whether they were the living Gospels they ought to be.

Mrs. MATTHEWS added a few words. There are, she said, about one hundred adults and fifty children on the Maloga Mission, many of them converted, and others well instructed as to the way of life. From beginning to end the proceedings were full of interest, and earnest prayers were offered to God to continue to own Mr. Matthews's endeavours, and also to raise up labourers for Christ among the blacks themselves.

Mr. and Mrs. Matthews, with their dusky companions, will attend the meetings of the Mildmay Conference this week, when friends desiring to know more of their interesting work will have opportunities for conversation with them. They will address the midday prayer-meetings at Exeter Hall from Tuesday to Friday next week, inclusive, 1 to 2 p.m. We would again suggest that any friends throughout the country who can arrange for a meeting to be addressed by these workers, should communicate as early as possible with Mr. D. Matthews, care of Mr. J. T. Matthews, 72, Cornhill, London, E.C.

ETERNAL LIFE.

On the occasion of the dedication of the Cemetery Chapel, Chingford, June 16.

NAUGHT from Christ the soul can sever!
Such the hope the Gospel brings;
Life at once, and life for ever!
Thus the dying Christian sings.

Life in Christ is life for ever!
While on Jesus we rely,
Vain the foeman's worst endeavour;
One with Christ, we cannot die.

"Life at once, and life for ever"
Drives all darkness from the grave;
"Mine they are, to perish never"—
Blest assurance Jesus gave.

Life with Christ, with Christ for ever!
"There shall all my servants be;
With Me always, wheresoever,
Through a blest eternity."

Naught from Christ the soul can sever!
Such the hope the Gospel brings;
Life at once, and life for ever!
Thus the dying Christian sings.

ROMANISM IN BRAZIL.

DEAR SIRS,—I am regularly in receipt of THE Christian, from a friend, and greatly enjoy the reading of it. Your readers might be interested in knowing a few facts about Romanism in Brazil. These facts, in a letter I received a few days ago from a Brazilian Christian youngman, tend to prove that there is a most urgent need of the Gospel in Brazil. Without doubt they are representative of Brazil, and not of one city only. The young man says:—

"I am horribly scandalised for not opening my shop on Sundays, and to-day even threatened with injuries and abuses by several people for not doing so. I used to have a little shop in my native town, but there could do no business, not merely because of bad times, but because I was considered a heretic. Innumerable were the persecutions with which the vigario (vicar) troubled me, both particularly and in the parochial chair: particularly, in trying to persuade certain families not to allow me to enter their houses, although before they had been my friends; and in the parochial chair by ordering the people to burn all the Bibles, Testaments, and tracts distributed by me as being false and dangerous to the possessors. He instigated the Chief of Police to make me leave the town; that official replied that he could not go against the law of the country, and that to be a Protestant was no crime. In answer to accusations made against Protestants, I wrote two articles for publication, but the press would not receive them."—Yours sincerely, FITZGERALD HOLMS.

RITUALISM AND SCRIPTURE.—A timely and trenchant pamphlet, entitled, "High Church Teaching: Is it Bible Truth?" has been written by Rev. J. Charlesworth, Wesleyan minister, Chester-le-street (T. Fisher Unwin. 6d.). The author deals vigorously and most effectively with the high-sounding but fallacious claims of Romish clerics and their imitators, the Ritualists. He says:—"Rome, and those who have followed in her footsteps, have endeavoured to improve upon the primitive methods of the New Testament. The faith once delivered to the saints has grown to such proportions under their fostering care that we fail to discover her divine image at all. The sublime and holy religion of Jesus Christ has lost her comeliness. Her countenance is marred, her features are disfigured. Her once benign aspect is changed into one of dark malignity, and the flowers which sprang up where she trod have become withered leaves."

MARYLEBONE MEDICAL MISSION.

THE new premises which this Mission has been privileged to occupy were formally dedicated at an interesting meeting held on Thursday week, and presided over by Hon. Henry Noel. The medical superintendent, Dr. Robert Chambers, gave an account of the origin and growth of the Mission, and of the way in which, in the providence of God, the latest extension had been brought about. In the new premises there is opportunity for increased efforts; but this involves more workers and larger resources. The Chairman having seen something of medical mission work in the foreign field, rejoiced in finding its value and usefulness recognised nearer home. He regarded with hopefulness and confidence the work of this Mission in Marylebone.

Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke spoke of the example of our Lord in caring both for body and soul. He was inclined to think that the whole man had been forgotten in these latter days. Some acted as if man had a body only, and laboured for the benefit of that; others seemed to forget he had a body at all, and laboured only for the soul. The Marylebone Medical Mission was doing a very real and useful work in the district. The hon. treasurer, Dr. E. Parker Young, and Dr. Handfield Jones, urged the claims of the Mission, by reason of the admirable work it was carrying on. The new premises are situated at 12, Bell-street, Edgware-road, W., where visitors will at any time be welcome.

DEACONESSES IN JERUSALEM.

MISS M. A. LLOYD, of the Church of England Women's Missionary Association, writes:—"We are thanking God for much blessing in the work he has given us here. Our nurses are kept busy doing acts of love and kindness to the sick and suffering, while our meetings in the hall of our house, on Sunday afternoons, to teach native women how to sing hymns, are well attended. They are apt scholars, and they will enjoy more and more singing the praises of the Lord Jesus, when they give Him their hearts; and some are already seeking Him.

"The Jews, who are flocking back to Palestine, will not come into our churches or meeting-rooms. They must be sought out and met with kindness. Most of them know their Hebrew Bible, and all are keen controversialists. We have found the English tracts on the Jewish question, kindly given us by Rev. J. Wilkinson, of Mildmay, most helpful. We have much to thank God for in our progress in Arabic. We take lessons daily in it, and immediately afterwards use the little we know in our work. We find this a good plan. Our servants, too, speak that language, and we always have some portion of it used in family worship.

"Our hearts and sympathies are much drawn out for the poor, sad, and depressed women of this land, and especially for the 'daughters of Jerusalem.' Our work, however, is for all women who want our services and need our care; we make no distinctions. We are thankful to say our village medical work is very thriving; ladies to help us are much wanted. Trained nurses are especially valuable. We heartily thank the friends who have anonymously sent us Scripture cards to Jerusalem for distribution. Will praying friends remember our effort, and ask the Giver of all good gifts to stablish, strengthen, and settle the work of this household of women, for his name's sake, for the glory of his kingdom, and the salvation of souls."

The office of the Church of England Women's Missionary Association is 143, Clapham-road, London, S.W.

MR. J. J. ATKINSON, who for a great number of years has been secretary of the Islington Y.M.C.A., has resigned his post.

CHRISTIAN P.O. ASSOCIATION.

A MEETING of the junior branch of the Christia Post Office Association was held at 186, Alders gate-street, last week, under the presidency Sir Arthur Blackwood. The immediate occasio of the gathering was the annual distribution prizes for proficiency at the telegraph mes sengers' evening classes. There was a stron muster of lads from the Central Office, Kings ton, Peckham, and Woolwich junior branches and the proceedings were of a very heart character.

Before giving the prizes and certificates t the winners, Sir Arthur Blackwood addresse to the youths some words of congratulation an friendly admonition about winning the greates prize of all—eternal life. He said he fel proud to think that so many engaged in a mos important department of the Queen's servic should be banded together for such good ob jects. It boded well for the service and for th nation at large. He remarked also on the en couraging fact that many of the chiefs of de partments in the Post Office were strongl sympathetic. He urged the lads to make th best possible use of their spare time, and thu prepare themselves for the future responsibili ties that would devolve upon them.

Rev. F. A. C. LILLINGSTON seconded th chairman in giving the boys good practical ad vice, clothed in genial and homely garb. Th messengers' brass band discoursed lively, i somewhat noisy, music, and the interest show by all must prove full of encouragement to thos Christian ladies who take the leading part i superintending this good work.

THE GOSPEL IN NORTHERN SPAIN.

FOR some years past a most interesting work has been in progress in the town of Santander capital of the province of that name in Northern Spain. The place has a population of 40,000 and is the commercial centre of a prosperous region. The American Board for Foreign Missions commenced operations in Santander in 1872. Six years later, Rev. Enrique de Tienda of the Theological Seminary of the Free Church of Lausanne, joined the Mission, and until the present time he has been the only Spanish pastor labouring there. His people have been subjected to many trials, but persecutions have tended to increase their zeal rather than extinguishing it.

The church members number forty, all of the poor class, and there are about as many more persons making up the general congregation. One of the most important branches of the work is the schools, at which there is a regular attendance of 124 boys and girls, mostly the children of Roman Catholic parents. Except by the medium of those children, it would be impossible to reach the majority of the parents, who can now hardly escape from learning something of the Gospel. In the midst of effort which is being much blessed, the Mission is threatened with serious danger, owing to the insanitary condition of the school building, which is so small and unventilated that the Government School Inspector may at any moment order the pupils to be reduced in number or the school to be closed altogether.

With the view of meeting the urgent needs of the work, the church in Santander is endeavouring to provide a suitable school-house. Having during sixteen years been driven from seven different buildings by hostile landlords, and at some periods found themselves without any meeting-house at all, they may well desire a mission centre which they can call their own. Seven years ago they formed a fund for the purpose, and of their poverty they have given liberally. Friends on the Continent and in England have also helped, but sufficient has not yet been received. Donations may be sent to Rev. H. Noel, White Rose Grange, Woking, Surrey, hon. sec. of the Foreign Evangelisation Society.

Mr. Spurgeon & the Orphans.

The birthday of the Metropolitan Tabernacle pastor "contrives a double debt to pay": it not only brings shoals of personal congratulations to Mr. Spurgeon himself, but it is the anniversary gala day for his young protégés of the Stockwell Orphanage. This dual event came off last week in good style, and amid the happiest circumstances. Mr. Spurgeon himself was there, not very agile on his legs, it is true, but looking well and speaking his liveliest. The day was beautiful, and the Orphanage quadrangle was gay with bunting. The crowds of sympathising friends were large, and deeply interested by all they saw and heard.

In the afternoon a meeting was held in the grounds, over which Mr. James Stiff, one of the Tabernacle deacons, presided. Mr. Spurgeon said, in introducing him, he would rather have a deacon than a lord to take the chair. Mr. Stiff, in the name of the company, wished Mr. Spurgeon many happy returns of the day, and passed on to a warm eulogium of the Orphanage and its work. According to his account it certainly raises young people who can push their way in the world. He told of 'an old boy" of twenty-four, who had been in a situation for seven years. He wanted to leave because, as he told his master, he thought he could do better. The master, wishing to retain his services, asked what salary he wanted, and he replied £350 a year. "Very well," said the master; "you are worth that to me, if you are to anybody else; stop where you are."

Mr. Spurgeon himself spoke next, and began by saying that the chairman had backed up his speech by a cheque for £20. Then he told how the institution had often been in low water financially, but the children had never lacked a meal. By the time he is sixty, Mr. Spurgeon wants to see half the amount needed to endow the Orphanage, and before he dies he wants to see the place safely set upon its own legs, without fear of any future collapse. He has an apprehension, he says, that that will be the case, for he does not feel at all like dying yet; there is considerable life in "the old dog" yet. An earnest plea for the orphans followed, though the President said he did not by any means wish to make an ad misericordiam appeal for it. It really was independent of everybody, and rested solely on the goodness and faithfulness of God. It was a good work, and if any craved the privilege of helping it, the opportunity would be granted to them. The Church of Christ is brought into contact with the poverty and misery of the world, and ought to alleviate them as generously as possible. Mr. Spurgeon was very severe on the hard and niggardly methods of the Poor Law system. He was equally severe on the bribery systems adopted too often by Church organisations, which give their charity soup a flavour of Dissent, or of the Prayer-book, as the case may be, and which dole out blankets, not to keep people warm, but to make them religious after a certain fashion. The case of the widow and the fatherless found a very warm-hearted advocate in Mr. Spurgeon, and his description of a poor woman bereft of the natural breadwinner, and obliged to struggle on day by day to bring up her children, was most pathetic. He said that for every case they could admit to the Orphanage, ninety-nine deserving cases had to be turned away. They had now 500 orphan boys and girls, and they thought that was enough for any one institution to look after properly.

After a cordial little speech from Rev. John McNeill, a happy surprise was sprung on the gathering by Rev. W. Williams, of Upton Baptist Church. He had been deputed by several pastors and other friends to ask Rev. V. J. Charlesworth to accept a purse of gold and an illuminated address, as a token of their esteem on his attaining his half century, and for his twenty years' faithful service as head master of the Orphanage. In making the presentation, Mr. Williams spoke in the highest terms of the personal qualities of Mr. Charlesworth, and of the excellent work he had done at the Orphanage. Mr. Spurgeon seconded the presentation with the laconic but pregnant sentence, "Serve him right." Mr. Charlesworth replied in proper style, and gave some very interesting snatches of his autobiography, relative to the way in which Mr. Spurgeon had impressed him into the service, when he was acting as an assistant to Rev. Newman Hall at Surrey Chapel. He was profuse, almost prodigally so, in his complimentary references to Mr. Spurgeon, but, of course, the popular pastor has got inured to that sort of thing, and it is not likely to do him any harm. All who know Mr. Charlesworth will agree that he has amply earned the esteem and goodwill of South London workers.

Some sparkling Irish humour, well mixed with weightier observations, came from Rev. J. B. Meharry, of Crouch-hill, who said that it was the reading of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons in early life that first gave him religious impressions. Rev. G. D. Hooper, of Hendon, chimed in with the general chorus of congratulation and good wishes as to Mr. Spurgeon's birthday, and then the gathering dispersed to see the march past of the neatly dressed and happy-looking orphans. There were music from the boys' brass band, from the hand-bell ringers, from the little Scotch pipers, and we know not what else to beguile the time till the evening hour, when another meeting was held. It was a full and joyous occasion for the pastor and for the orphans, and we trust both may be spared to see many such occasions, with troops of sympathising and generous friends to assist.

MISSIONARIES for CENTRAL AFRICA.

The departure of Mr. T. H. Morris, Dr. Fisher, and others, to join Mr. F. S. Arnot's mission in Central Africa, has been awaited with lively interest by many churches and congregations throughout the country. Now the departure is a historical fact. Last week a telegram was received from Mr. Arnot, who was still at Benguela, stating that transport inland was difficult. Thereupon Mr. and Mrs. Morris determined to leave their children in England for the present. The last days of the devoted band in this country were happily spent, many friends commending each and all to the God of all grace and power. On Thursday last week a large farewell meeting was held in the Folkestone-road Gospel-hall, Walthamstow, and it was felt by many to be a very blessed season.

The party left the London Docks for Lisbon on Saturday morning, in the steamship Gibraltar. In addition to Mr. and Mrs. Morris and Dr. Fisher, there were: Messrs. Gall, Thompson, and Johnson, and Misses Davies and Gilchrist. An inspiriting meeting was held just before the ship left, twenty or thirty friends being present. Among the melodies that were sung was "Go ye into all the world," with its stirring and cheering refrain, "All power is given unto Me." Afterwards a prayer-meeting was held on the green near the docks, the loved ones who had gone forth being earnestly committed to the loving care of the Lord of the harvest. On the same ship were three American workers, also bound for spheres in the interior of Africa—Mr. Cotton and his wife, the latter a Doctor of Medicine, and Mr. Lee. Our readers will, we are sure, join us in prayer for present and future blessing upon every member of both parties.

ZURICH.—In the matter of small religious communities and sects this canton is more widely representative than any other in Switzerland. The Roman Catholics are very active, and their numbers are frequently added to as a result of mixed marriages. In the hope of reaching the thousands of nominal Protestants who do not attend public worship, the Evangelical Society is carrying out a distribution of sermon tracts, of which fifty thousand were circulated last year. Sunday-schools are increasing in number and usefulness in the canton.

AMERICAN NOTES.

By Our Special Correspondent.

Your readers will have heard of the appalling catastrophe by flood which has visited this land. The most graphic pen must fail to give an adequate description of this horror of horrors. One of the distressing circumstances connected with it is the fact that many had faithful warning, but they heeded it not. On the morning of the fatal day (Friday, June 1) a young engineer had observed that the fast increasing waters of the lake, from the excessive rain, were in danger of bursting through the dam. Hastily securing a force of thirty men, he opened a sluice, and ordered a second to be made instantly. Fearing a catastrophe, he then rode on horseback, at a dashing pace, through the villages, warning everybody to flee to the hills for safety. He telegraphed to the city of Johnstown, with its 30,000 inhabitants, forewarning them. Two men rode rapidly through the town, crying: "The dam, the dam is about to burst; flee for your lives." Some heeded the warning, and escaped; to others it was like the fabled wolf story, and they refused to believe. Within three hours of the first warning, the deluge was upon city, town, and village along the banks of the river. I know of nothing in modern history so plaintive and powerful an illustration of present danger and present warning concerning the great day of the Lord.

There are dangers threatening the moral life of our country which scarcely awaken an emotion in our hearts. Anthony Comstock, who is no morbid sentimentalist, declares of New York: "We are in the midst of a harvest of irreligion, scepticism, and immorality—a dark picture, but true." The recent centennial banquet has gone far to prove the rottenness and godlessness of fashionable society in that city. Even the presence of President Harrison, members of his Cabinet, and several clergymen, failed to subdue the uproarious hilarity, or check the Bacchanalian revels of wealthy men and women. Christianised heathenism is worse than the worst; we are in danger of an overflow from its rapid accumulations all over our land.

I cannot understand why preachers and moralists become restive when the sins of our day are alluded to. Optimism has run wild, with eyes wilfully blinded and fingers in ears. We inquire, Is it Christian, is it humane, to hide from the people the dangers which threaten us? Better that we all heed the prophetic warning, "The devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time," and be prepared to meet his hellish machinations, than be lulled to sleep with the false assurance, "Peace and safety!"

LONDON HOSPITALS.—The Archbishop of York, in preaching last Sunday evening in Westminster Abbey, spoke on behalf of the London hospitals. How comes it, he said, in the midst of this rich, this enormous metropolis, that £30,000 and more are wanting to meet the just expectations of those who set up this Hospital Sunday Fund? Can we do nothing to improve this? It is nothing else than a shame to see that great London can spare so little for its hospitals. People say, "We have so much to give and so many rates to pay." Yes, and we have to keep up our ball-rooms with banks of exotic flowers, and there is not a bud left to lay upon the beds of the patients within the hospitals. We have to feed ourselves and our guests with the choicest foods and wines, and think it a breach of honour to give them anything but that which costs us much, and those poor who have never enjoyed any banquet in their lives might have the succour they need so sorely in an additional hospital if we curtail a little that lavish luxury which exists on every side.

"MARTYRS FOR THE LORD."

SIR,—No real Christians would withhold their meed of praise to the memory of Father Damien for his heroic self-devotion amongst the poor lepers. But one is struck with the total oblivion displayed as to other Christian heroes in the same Gospel field. Many heroic Moravians have for more than seventy years past voluntarily lived and died amongst the lepers, in order to preach to them the Gospel of our blessed Saviour. No historic pen has of late described or published accounts of their patient devotion, their martyrdom for the cause of Christ, their self-abnegation for his sake, and the pure, simple, undefiled Gospel which they have preached in his blessed name, till death crowned their labours with the glory of immortality. As this Christ-like work is still being carried on by them in Jerusalem with much success, these facts should not be forgotten.—I am, Sir, yours truly, GEORGIANA (Countess of Seafield).

MISSIONARY EVANGELISM.

DEAR SIR,—Some rather remarkable developments are now taking place, which I feel prompted to lay before you for your prayerful interest and sympathy. On June 5 I handed to my session my resignation. This was prompted by no disagreements or controversy. I simply feel unable to carry the pastoral charge of a congregation numbering thousands; and especially that I am called, both by the voice of God and of the best saints I know, to undertake a sort of missionary evangelism, which is inconsistent with such pastoral duties.

Mr. John Wanamaker and the session propose that I retain a sort of connection with Bethany Church as its missionary bishop, receiving such support as individuals in the church and outside of it may incline to provide, leaving me free to go about the country or even take a tour of the principal missions of the world, to acquaint myself more fully with mission work, and stir up the churches to more intelligent interest and zeal.

Whether this plan be feasible or not only a trial can show. But, should this church thus set its pastor free from local duties to perform a wider work for which he seems in a measure fitted, it presents a unique instance of unselfish devotion to the Lord's cause. The proposition is to call a new pastor, and then, should he cordially acquiesce, constitute this new and peculiar missionary pastorate.

My own conviction is growing that, whether or not in connection with any church, I ought to undertake some such missionary work. There is a lamentable lack of adequate knowledge and hence of true activity, generosity, and enthusiasm in connection with missions, which such voluntary work might help to supply.

My only real hesitation is on account of a proper financial basis. I would not consent to go about addressing churches, and have "collections for expenses." When in Scotland last year, all cost of travel and entertainment was provided by gifts for that purpose, without drawing on any mission funds. Could any such plan be matured, my way would become plain. A gentleman, who knew nothing of my own plans in this matter, accosted me a few days ago, urged me to undertake a general work among the churches, and of his own accord offered to be one of ten men to assure my support in the work.

My thought is to go wherever the Lord opens the way, addressing churches and religious bodies without regard to denomination. on the general subject of missions at home and abroad; to present the Divine philosophy of missions and the great facts of missionary history and biography, the openings in every direction; and seek to stimulate greatly increased intelligence, activity, consecration, and enthusiasm; aiming to multiply labourers and means for their support.

I am already asked to return to Britain in the autumn, to take a new tour of England, Ireland, and Scotland; and, sooner or later, I should aim to visit the main missionary centres of the world.

If I undertake this work, it is of the highest importance that I secure the prayerful and sympathetic co-operation of true disciples of all denominations and everywhere; that whatever support comes to me be voluntary, and so take any mercenary aspect from the work. It may be better not to be connected with any local church, in order the better to impress the true catholicity of the effort. But for all the minor details I wait to be Divinely guided. May I ask your prayers in my behalf?—Yours faithfully, ARTHUR T. PIERSON.

MUSIC-HALLS.

DEAR SIR,—It will interest your readers to know that the nucleus of a committee has been formed in order to oppose, as far as may be found practicable, the continuation and extension of music-halls attached to public-houses and places holding wine and spirit licences. Lieut.-General Stephens has accepted the office of chairman, and Mr. Mordaunt Smith is hon. sec.

The moral evils associated with the present system are too well known to need reiteration. The power to grant music licences having been transferred from the Justices of the Peace to the County Councils, it is more than ever necessary that popular feeling should be gauged and firmly expressed at this crisis; otherwise a worse state of things may prevail, to the further ruin of our young men and women. It is proposed to form a ladies' committee.

I appeal to your readers to volunteer: (1) as members of the general committee—ladies or gentlemen; (2) as members of the Association. This appeal is addressed not only to sympathisers in London, but to those all over the country. A giant evil has to be met, and assistance is needed. —Faithfully yours, EDWARD W. THOMAS.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Chas. Boyall, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a fifteen days' mission at Grantham, on which the Lord has signally set his blessing; this, with a former mission, has resulted in a goodly number professing to accept Christ.

Chevington, Bury St. Edmund's.—For the past two months Gospel addresses have been given by Mr. E. Smith on Sunday evenings in a barn in this out-of-the-way country village to attentive and increasing gatherings.

Christian Instruction Society.—A ten days' mission in Kentish Town Congregational Church, conducted by Rev. W. A. Meaton, the Society's mission preacher, was concluded on Sunday, June 23. All the services were well attended, and expressions of gratitude were heard on every hand.

Messrs. Hyde and Stevenson have completed a twelve days' mission at Mallow, in county Cork. Meetings were held in the public ball-room of the town each evening, except on Saturdays, with the result of much refreshing to Christians, and the gathering in of several to the fold of Christ.

Rev. Thomas Cook continues to rejoice over conversions all the year round. He has paid a visit (says The Methodist Times) to the Hinde-street Chapel, London, where he had the pleasure of gathering in a few sheaves and of seeing a large number of Christian people seeking to enter into the Sabbath of God's love.

Miss Robinson's Tent, opposite the railway station, Portsmouth, has already done good work this summer; some fifty persons have professed to find salvation therein. Mr. Middleton and Mr. Hogben returned to the work there at the beginning of July. They will welcome all helpers during the summer; especially for the great Naval Review on August 3, when, in addition to blue-jackets, tens of thousands are expected to visit the town. They want at least a hundred earnest Christians to give two days to earnest efforts to make known their Saviour; a hundred thousand tracts; and help to defray the extra expenses of this effort.

The Wayside Bible Carriage is hard at work in the villages of Kent. Deeply interesting meetings are being conducted by Mr. John M. McAuliffe, asssisted by two brethren. Tunbridge Wells, Tunbridge, Frant, Groombridge, Southboro, and several other villages have been visited from door to door. One pleasing feature of the work is the demand for the Scriptures, the sale of which exceeds in number all other books put together. Every evening, when present, Mr. McAuliffe gives an address to the children, and invites them to write to him. He has received quite a pile of letters through the post, containing Bible answers to questions put on village greens from the carriage. After-meetings are also held.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has conducted a eight days' mission at the Congregational Churc Crawley (F. W. Whiting, pastor). The attendanc were not large at first, but the interest grew, ar the concluding services were the best. There we many tokens for good, and it is hoped the missio will result in permanent fruit.

Nottingham.—I have been on a flying vis to my old town, and find the people very open Gospel efforts. Mr. G. R. Cairns, from Americ is wonderfully blessed at the Albert Hall, the eve ing meeting during this summer season surpassi anything you could expect. Mr. Cairns exce both as a speaker and singer, and the fruit follow ing shows that God is with him. He may be con municated with at Sherwood Rise, Nottingha The pleasant Sunday afternoons (for men only) a marvellous movement—2150 registered membe with an average attendance of at least that numbe every Sunday afternoon. Mr. Mellors has muc cause for thankfulness in this work, as the so gathering therefrom is very considerable.

The Severn Valley.—A Salopian writes:—would earnestly commend to evangelists on whee this summer, the villages of the Severn Valle and South Shropshire. Starting from Cleobur on the Bewdley and Wooferton Railway, beginnin with the little old town near, they would fin between it and Much Wenlock, or, say Churc Stretton, not a few large parishes, where simp Gospel services and the distribution of Scriptur truth, would be acceptable to many, and as nov as necessary. Or, leaving the Severn Valley lin at Arley, and taking the eastern side of the rive making for Shifnal or Albrighton, several larg villages and centres of population would be passe through, which greatly need Christ's Gospe Crossing the county of Salop from east to wes from Wolverhampton, viâ Bridgenorth, to Ludlo would also touch another suitable district. Beside the joy of doing and getting good, an intelliger Christian would find in this county much to intere and refresh him.

A special mission is to be held at the Polytechni Regent-street, on Saturdays and Sundays during Jul conducted by Messrs. Fullerton and Smith

AN ENGLISH CHATAUQUA.—A novel an interesting experiment is about to be made a Blackpool. Next month the first summer assembl of the National Home-reading Union will be hel in that popular holiday resort. The inaugura meeting is fixed for July 16, and comprehensiv arrangements are being made for the following fort night. Four days in each week will be occupied with lectures of a most thoroughly attractive character.—Northern Advance.

PEACE CONGRESS IN PARIS.—The firs sitting of the International Peace Congress, whic was attended by 300 delegates, including repre sentatives of 100 societies, was held on Sunday las at the Trocadéro Palace. M. Frédéric Passy deputy for the Department of the Seine and Presi dent of the Central Committee, delivered an addres in favour of arbitration as a means of settling al international disputes. The Congress proceeded t appoint members of the honorary committee, amon them being Sir J. Pease, Mr. Hodgson Pratt, Mrs H. Richard, Mrs. Love, and Mrs. Belva Lockwood the last two being American ladies.

LAWYERS AT PRAYER.—The customary meet ing of the Lawyers' Prayer Union was held, o Thursday last, in the Mission-hall of St. George' Church, Bloomsbury. Tea and coffee, &c., were provided in the Lower Hall, to which a goodly number sat down. The meeting was held in the Upper Hall, which was well filled with barristers solicitors, and clerks from both professions. Mr Gainsford Bruce, Q.C., M.P., presided. Some very practical and soul-stirring addresses, interspersed with singing, were delivered by the following barristers and solicitors:—Mr. Smith, Mr. W. Baker Dr. Anderson (Home Office), Mr. G. R. Moore Mr. White, and several law clerks, the chairman closing with a few well-chosen words on earnestness in the Christian life. It was felt by those present to have been a very helpful and en couraging meeting, and was much enjoyed by all These interesting meetings are held half-yearly but they might with advantage be held more fre quently, say monthly, and would no doubt prove still more helpful.

WAS JUDAS SAVED?

WE were greatly surprised some days ago to learn that a minister of some distinction had avowed his belief in the salvation of the betrayer of our Lord. One would have thought that the condemnatory title, "Son of Perdition," would, in itself, have effectually foreclosed any such opinion. But it appears that a contrary view has been based upon what is said of the repentance of Judas. Scripture, however, decisively shows that there is a sorrow that worketh death, and there is a godly sorrow that worketh a repentance that needeth not to be repented of. And the classic Greek tongue has two words which sharply distinguish and clearly express this contrasted repentance. The sorrow of Judas is not expressed by the term which Scripture uses for godly repentance, but by the other term which signifies remorse. It does seem to us, therefore, an unwarrantable exercise of the imagination, and a dangerous delusion to those who love sin, to depicture the condemned in hell as rising up at the entrance of Judas, and saying, "There is no place here for one who died repentant;" while he is afterwards welcomed at the gates of Paradise on account of his repentance. May God save every reader of these pages from an approach to the sin or to the penalty of Judas!

M. PAUL BOUCHARD, Mayor of Beaune, Côte-d'Or, who has been in London seeking the sympathy of English Christians with the Protestant Church at Beaune, which is desirous of building a much-needed place of worship, has been called home to discharge pressing official duties as Department General Councillor. A water-spout has fallen upon the village of Mavilly-Mandelot, situate in his canton, killing a number of children, and causing great destruction of property. In connection with this sad event M. Bouchard has had to return to his post. He writes regretting that he has thus been compelled to end his stay in London, adding that donations in aid of the proposed church will be received by Messrs. Barclay, Ransom & Co., 1, Pall Mall East, London, S.W.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES IN THEATRES.—On Saturday a meeting was held at the house of the Earl of Aberdeen, Northop-street, Park-street, W., in aid of the work of the Committee for holding special religious services in theatres, halls, &c., and for erecting memorial mission-halls to the late seventh Earl of Shaftesbury. Mr. C. M. Sawell, secretary, stated that the influence of services in theatres had been good, many people having been led to attend church who had previously been absentees. Three halls have, he said, so far been erected in memory of Lord Shaftesbury—one in Gibraltar-walk, Bethnal-green, which is fully paid for; one in Kerby-street, Poplar, on which there is a debt of £500; and another in Union-street, Southwark, upon which a balance is due of £100. Lord Aberdeen expressed his interest in the admirable work of the Committee, and brief addresses were delivered by Canon Money, and Messrs. J. H. Lydall and George Nokes, preachers at the services. Communications to the secretary should be addresed to 3, Bridewell-place, London, E.C.

THE SALVATION ARMY.—Two meetings of the Salvation Army were held on Monday, in Regent Hall, Oxford-street, in connection with the work in India. The proceedings were conducted by Mrs. Booth-Tucker, assisted by Major Jai Bhai (Ceylon), and others. In the afternoon several addresses were delivered by the Indians and others, and at night Mrs. Bulman, wife of Commissioner Bulman, an Indian judge, said that she had started the work of the Salvation Army in Bamballa, North India, and had helped to erect a building there for them to work in. She had seen natives turn to God, and now they had six officers stationed in the place. She pleaded for some one present to volunteer for India to take her place, as the doctor had told her she could not live very long. Mrs. Booth-Tucker said that there was a very large field for missionary effort in India, and she wished those present would go and see them. If they made a great move in India, it would help them to commence work in other places in Asia. She contended that their method was Biblical, as they were "all things to all men." One of the greatest difficulties they had to contend with was the Indian language; but they were, after all, very successful. Another difficulty was the heat of the country; but, considering all things, they got on fairly well. Although the Army was seven years old in India, they had greater crowds and greater and better results than ever.

The Book World.

TIMOTHY COOP. By Rev. W. T. Moore. Commonwealth Printing Company. A full and careful biography of a true servant of God. His connection with Christian work in America for many years did not interfere with close application to business. Interesting facts about the "Disciples of Christ" appear in this volume, also a good likeness of Mr. Coop.

JOHNNY; OR, ONLY A LIFE. By Robina Hardy. 1s. 6d. Oliphant & Ferrier. A well-told tale of humble life. The scene is laid chiefly in Edinburgh, changing occasionally to Norwegian hills and fiords. Ronald Cameron is a fine specimen of manly, unselfish Christianity. Johnny, the brave-hearted cripple boy, brightening a dark home, reclaiming a drunken mother, and softening the heart of a worldly lady, is a character probably not altogether imaginary. Neat engravings of Edinburgh and scenes in Norway embellish the book.

A new and enlarged edition has been issued of that wonderful collection of missionary literature, THE EVANGELISATION OF THE WORLD, prepared and edited by Mr. Broomhall, of the China Inland Mission. It contains a new portrait of Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, and four additional portraits of well-known preachers, some of whose rousing words enrich its pages—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, Rev. Dr. A. N. Somerville, Dean Vaughan, and Rev. W. Arthur. A new and more permanent preface is found in a strikingly coloured copy of the missionary diagram showing the proportion of Protestants and the adherents of other religious beliefs in comparison to the great mass of unevangelised heathen. We cannot too strongly commend this volume to those who do not possess a copy; if it were prayerfully perused and studied in the churches once every three months, the tide of missionary zeal would be kept at high-water mark. (2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

AULD LICHT IDYLLS. By J. M. Barrie. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. In Mr. Barrie we have a new and notable chronicler of the simple annals of Scottish rural life a generation and a half ago. Like not a few others of his canny countrymen who have come of a lowly stock, he has scaled many steps of the ladder of literary fame, but he has not despised or neglected the scenes and surroundings of his youthful days. His writings are racy of the soil. These truly idyllic chapters are made up of daily incidents and experiences in the lives of the humble dwellers in the cold north-east, in the days when steam and electricity were practically unknown in that region. The quaint but most expressive dialect of the people, their loves and aversions, their religious convictions and divisions, their social weaknesses, their plodding industry, the "characters" that grow up wherever a simple standard of thought and life prevails, the lights and shades and neutral tints of bygone Scottish country life—all are reproduced with a skill, a minuteness, and a photographic fidelity that amount to positive genius. Here, in brief, we have veritable history in a thin disguise—a sort of history that is grateful to the reader in this age of artificiality and pretence.

MISSIONARY SUCCESS IN THE ISLAND OF FORMOSA. By Rev. William Campbell. Two vols., 10s. Trübner & Co. This is a work of sterling interest. First we have a sketch, originally published in London in 1650, giving the career of a Dutch Protestant missionary, R. Junius, who laboured in Formosa during the first half of the seventeenth century, and through whose life and preaching 5900 inhabitants of the island professed faith in Christ. Various other old documents are also reproduced, showing earnest activity on the part of other workers, whose general prudence and hearty devotion are as full of interest to-day as their occasional mistakes are instructive. We not only find the missionaries of 1650 estimating mere civilising processes at their proper worth, but we rejoice also to read that one of them actually sent home an appeal for a printing press, in order that the work of God might be helped forward by the publication of books! After editing these important documents, Mr. Campbell, who is head of the English Presbyterian Mission at Taiwanfoo, tells how, after a course of thirty-seven years, the good work was suddenly cut short in 1662 by Chinese conquest of the island. Then follows an account of effort since 1865, under the auspices of the Presbyterian churches of England and Canada. The story of recent endeavour is one of encouraging success, it being quite delightful to read that the Formosans have now themselves undertaken mission work in the Pescadore group. Portraits of worthies of the past and heroes of the present add to the attractiveness of this stirring chapter of missionary history.

THE SHEPHERD PSALM. F. B. Meyer, B.A. 1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott. Another charming little book from the prolific pen of our friend Mr. Meyer. In twelve brief chapters it contains an exposition of Psalm xxiii. The intention of the book is thus stated in the preface, "That in the quiet of the sick-chamber, or of the prayer closet, attention may be again concentrated on this inimitable Psalm; that the familiar words may be considered in the light of growing Christian experience; and that perchance some unnoticed beauty may be suggested." It is impossible to read the book without feeling that it is calculated to fulfil the author's intention. It is thoughtful in matter, chaste in language, attractive in style, apt in illustration, and devout and practical in tone.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., June 30, Ps. xcii. 1—15; Mon., July 1, 2 Chron. i. 1—12; Tues., July 2, 2 Chron. ii. 1—12; Wed., July 3, 2 Chron. iii. 1—17; Thurs., July 4, 2 Chron. v. 1—14; Fri., July 5, 2 Chron. vi. 1—11; Sat., July 6, 2 Chron. vi. 12—25.

THE BRETON MISSION.—A very interesting drawing-room meeting was recently held at the residence of Mrs. Brown, Rathgar, Dublin, when Rev. Dr. Bullinger spoke in the interest of the Trinitarian Bible Society, and Pastor Lecoat gave an account of his Mission in Brittany. An edition of the Holy Scriptures is being published in the Breton language by the above Society. Christians desiring to see and aid a unique work among a primitive people might visit Pastor Lecoat at Tremel, Brittany.

BRITTANY.—Miss Mary E. Bonnycastle writes from Havre:—François Cadieu, our Breton youth, came back from his fortnight's stay in his own place full of joy and fire. He has been used of God, and held crowded meetings for days and evenings running. Indeed, the people would not let him come away, and are crying out for a regular evangelist, there being 10,000 Roman Catholics in that place alone. Brittany is opening out wonderfully to the Gospel. How we long to fit a band of worthies here to help in that work. "Saved and sanctified ones," that is the thing, or else the work is useless, and worse than useless.

CHRIST CHURCH, WESTMINSTER-ROAD.—The annual floral service for children was held last Sunday afternoon. About two thousand children assembled, many of whom brought nosegays, large and little. These were piled on the chancel steps, round the pulpit, and on the communion table, producing a very pretty effect. Addresses were delivered by Rev. Newman Hall, President of the Southwark Sunday School Society, to which these children and their teachers belonged; by Rev. Henry Grainger, and by Rev. Dr. Cuyler, who kissed hands to the children. The young people responded enthusiastically, and with handkerchief-waving, to salute the scholars in America. These schools number thirteen, with 5000 scholars, and 400 teachers.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a special mission for young women in the City, by Messrs. Fullerton and Smith, July 1, 2, and 3, at 8 o'clock, in Falcon-square Congregational Chapel, E.C.——For blessing on tent mission work during the summer, at Weston-super-Mare and Bristol, commencing on Sunday next.——For blessing on the labours of Mr. J. J. Browne, City missionary, on a visit to Burslem, Staffordshire, during the "Wakes," from June 28 to July 1.——For blessing on services to be conducted by Rev. Edward Davidson, at Great Bridgewater-street Wesleyan Chapel, Manchester, on Sunday next, June 30.——For a ten days' mission, conducted by Rev. Dr. Morris, at St. Paul's Church, Newport, Mon., from Sunday, June 23.——For guidance in preparing a mission-hall for undenominational Christian work, in a village of Gloucestershire——For the town of Wanganui, New Zealand, that the Lord will graciously, in answer to prayer, send down the Holy Spirit to awaken the unconverted, and that believers may be stirred up to more faith and prayer for the salvation of souls.

The chief officer of the Salvation Army in Africa, Col. Thurman, writes that in three months he has travelled 3600 miles, usually sleeping in the open air, with crowded meetings in the day-time, much enthusiasm, many souls, numbers out for holiness, natives and Europeans receiving and helping him well.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The new Bishop of St. Asaph, unlike all his predecessors, travels third and not first class.

The London Diocesan Council for the Welfare of Young Men have organised a Youths' Camp near Deal. The object is to give poor youths, between fourteen and seventeen years of age, the benefits of a short stay at the seaside, and to instil into them habits of order, cleanliness, and discipline.

The Bishop of Rochester on Monday week consecrated a new church in Chatham-street, Walworth, which has been built in connection with the St. John's College (Cambridge) Mission in Walworth. The church will accommodate 500 persons. The building is to be open all day, and the seats will be all free and unappropriated.

The Anglican Synod has nominated Rev. F. J. Shavasse, rector of Oxford; Rev. H. C. G. Moule, of Cambridge; and Rev. Canon Saumarez Smith, Principal of St. Aidan's College, Birkenhead, as candidates for the bishopric of Sydney, vacant by the resignation of Dr. Barry. The Bishops of New South Wales will select two of the above-named gentlemen, and the final choice will rest with the bishops of all the Australian Colonies.

Bishop Barry is daily expected to arrive from Australia, and will at once commence his duties as Bishop Suffragan of Rochester. Detailed accounts of the presentation to him on leaving Sydney show his wonderful popularity in the Colony. Lord Carrington, the Governor, presided at a farewell meeting held in a hall lent by the Wesleyans, and the President of the Wesleyan Conference, the Chairman of the Congregational Union, and a leading Presbyterian minister, were among the speakers.

METHODIST.

The Queen has sent a cheque for £15 to the Rev. Henry Smith towards the enlargement of the Wesleyan Sunday-school at East Cowes.

It is said that the Senior Wrangler at Cambridge, Mr. G. F. Walker, of Trinity, who is a Wesleyan, takes a warm interest in missionary work, and may himself one day become a missionary.

Rev. Edward Smith, who lately resigned the oversight of the Clerkenwell Mission, has received numerous invitations to circuit, but is leaving himself entirely open and in the hands of Conference.

The proposed Methodist "Toynbee Hall" for East London is now in a fair way of accomplishment. Two well-known Wesleyans have each promised £500, and it is understood that others are about to follow suit.

The work at Cleveland Hall, in connection with the West Central Mission is very encouraging, and a large number of conversions have taken place since it was opened. Rev. Peter Thompson also reports that conversions are very numerous at the Seamen's Chapel, Commercial-road.

The Methodist New Connexion Conference at Dudley and the Primitive Methodist Conference at Bradford both manifested a most cordial feeling towards other sections of Methodists. The New Connexion body appointed a committee of twelve brethren to confer with representatives of the United Methodist Free Churches denomination as to the desirability and practicability of reunion.

Rev. T. Champness suggests in Joyful News that all the young men for whom there is no circuit, be sent forth under the direction of the Chairmen of the Districts, to spiritually destitute spots in town and country. Let them consent to go without any fixed stipend for one year, as the Joyful News men do every year. In answer to prayer, and as the result of their own work, God will send them food and raiment and all they absolutely need.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. T. Rowlands, of Madagascar, is doing good work for the London Missionary Society among the Congregational churches in North Wales by his addresses and sermons in the vernacular.

Rev. Frederick Hastings has reached Adelaide, and was heartily welcomed by the deacons and congregation of his new church, who awaited the arrival of his steamer. The first Sunday's services were very largely attended.

Rev. Hyma Redgrave, for over three years minister of the Congregational Church, Algernon-road, Lewisham, has announced his decision to enter the Church of England, and has placed his resignation in the hands of his congregation.

Dr. Joseph Parker seems to contemplate resigning the pastorate of the City Temple. At the close of a recent sermon he said that if any man thought it was easy work to be the pastor of the City Temple congregation, he would soon have some opportunity of seeing whether it was so or not. He was now daily considering the probability of ceasing that work. Dr. Parker, it is stated, has given several hints to the same effect during the last few months.

A farewell meeting was held on Monday week at Hanover Chapel, Peckham, in connection with the removal of Rev. G. Buchanan Ryley to Addiscombe. Addresses were delivered by Revs. H. B. Chapman, vicar of St. Luke's, Camberwell, P. J. Turquand, H. O. Mackey, Mr. G. C. Whiteley, and others, who bore warm testimony to the good work accomplished by Mr. Ryley, not only as the pastor of the church for nearly nineteen years, but also among the working men, the young, and the poor people of Peckham.

BAPTIST.

A new place of worship is to be opened near Harringay Station, in the north of London, to be known as Emmanuel Church; it will be opened on Sunday next, June 30, and is intended for evangelical Protestant Christians of all denominations. The minister will be Rev. William Frith, of Hornton-street Chapel, Kensington.

Rev. Dr. Edward Parker, of Manchester, who has recently returned from a visit to America, speaking at a meeting of the Yorkshire Baptist Association the other day, said anyone who went to America must be impressed with the fact that the American Baptists are in earnest and thoroughly united. It would be well if there were the same earnestness amongst the churches in this country. Dr. Parker was struck with the fact that seventy-one home missionaries are maintained in the State of Virginia, and could not help thinking how different is the rate of work there from what it is in Yorkshire, where there is more need for home mission work than in the State of Virginia.

SALVATION ARMY.

The Grecian Theatre in London has recently seen very successful meetings.

On Monday morning contingents of the Salvation Army, numbering in all 1500, paraded through some of the principal thoroughfares of the Metropolis on to the House of Commons, where they lodged a petition in favour of the Sunday Closing Bill. The petition contains 436,500 signatures.

Mr. Justice Patterson, of New York City, in recently dismissing a case against a Salvation Army officer for alleged obstruction, remarked, "These people have a right to worship according to the dictates of their own conscience. I suppose if the place adjoining was a hospital or a place where people were sick, and the noise was likely to cause their death, you might demand an injunction, but if they keep reasonable hours I do not see that I can interfere with them, even if they use musical instruments and shout."

PRESBYTERIAN.

A mission chapel is to be erected for the Presbyterians at Ewloe Green, near Buckley, at a cost of £300.

Rev. Dr. Valentine, Principal of the Medical Mission College at Agra, India, is at present staying at Brechin, N.B., his native town, recruiting his health.

Rev. Dr. Verner White, of Kensington, has completed the jubilee of his ministry. His father and uncle were both engaged in active ministerial work for fifty-two years, and his two brothers have just retired from the ministry of the Irish Presbyterian Church on the jubilee of their work.

Rev. P. Blair, of Cambuslang, says that one of the causes of non-churchgoing is the inconsistency of those Christians who, while singing psalms and hymns, can turn such a cold and stony stare upon strangers who might venture to intrude into what they might consider their private seats.

Several of the ministers of churches in the South London Presbytery united to hold a large open-air service at Blackheath on the afternoon of Sunday week. The audience was not so large as at the recent gatherings in Victoria and Regent's Parks; those who were present, however, listened very attentively to the addresses that were delivered. Revs. H. M. Mackenzie (Southwark), Wm. Martin (Forest Hill), J. R. Patterson (East Dulwich), and J. H. Thomson (Blackheath) took part in the proceedings.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The late Mr. J. R. Berwick, J.P., agent of the Duke of Devonshire, at Bandon, co. Cork, has left the sum of £11,348 to various churches and charities in Cork and Dublin.

A meeting for the promotion of fuller consecration for Christian service has just been held at Cork, in connection with the Methodist Conference now in session in that city.

Rev. John McNeill, of London, Major Whittle, and others, are announced to speak at some great open-air meetings to be held in the demesne of Mr. Wm. Young, J.P., Fenaghy, near Ballymena, on July 17 and 18.

A pamphlet published at Dublin, by Rev. Thomas Connellan, formerly Roman Catholic curate of St. Peter's, Athlone, in which he tells the story of his conversion from Romanism, has attracted much attention in this country.

Nine candidates for the ministry have been received by the Methodist Conference at Cork; six young men who have completed their probationary course have been ordained. The reports on the state of the spiritual work, presented from various parts of the country, show that during the year hundreds of persons have been brought to the Saviour, including not a few Roman Catholics.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. Thomas Eaton, rector of West Kirby, and for over fifty years a canon of Chester Cathedral.—Rev. F. C. Cook, Canon of Exeter Cathedral.—Rev. John Dolphin, rector of Antingham, Norfolk.—Rev Duncan Taylor, minister of Kilninian and Kilmore Established Church, N.B.—Rev. Robert Lomas, curate of St. Stephen-the-Martyr's, Liverpool.—Rev. Dr. Crombie, Professor of Biblical Criticism in St. Mary's College, University of St. Andrews, N.B.—Rev. John F. Guenett, pastor of the Congregational Church, Point-in-View, Lympstone, Devon.—Rev. Philip Rodger, minister of Pollokshaws Established Church, Glasgow.—Rev. T. Inglis Walsh, superintendent minister of the Gledholt Wesleyan circuit, Yorkshire.—Sir James Falshaw, a leading Wesleyan in Edinburgh.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

Mr. William Forbes gave addresses last week a Islington, St. Luke's, Highbury, and Surrey Chapel.

Sir Morell Mackenzie, in an article in The Contemporary Review, says fiery foods, condiments, or drink tend to injure the voice.

The Gospel Temperance Union at Edinburgh include about one hundred ministers of various denominations amongst whom are ten professors.

The Bishop of London states that when he first went to Oxford, drinking clubs of a low type were numerous Now such are not to be found either at Oxford or Cambridge.

It is stated that Lord Carlisle and the Duke of Newcastle have determined upon closing all the public houses on their property. It is to be hoped that other landlords may be disposed to go and do likewise.

The Gospel temperance work at the Central Hall Newcastle-on-Tyne, is being carried on with tireless zeal. Saturday night and all day on Sunday are special times, but every night some good effort is on foot.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church Ireland, passed a resolution noting the intensified evils of drunkenness, and urging on all ministers and sessions the duty of setting an example of personal abstinence.

FOREIGN.

Burmah is declared to be healthy for all who avoid the bottle, but a very charnel-house for the drinker.

In Holland it is proposed to make the payment of wages in any other form than in current coin, and also their payment in public-houses, illegal.

Governor Beaver, of Pennsylvania, pronounces "unhesitatingly and unequivocally" for the Prohibition Amendment in his State. He believes in prohibiting the causes of crime as well as prohibiting crime itself.

Judge White, of Pittsburgh, U.S., under the new Brooks high-licence law, has resolutely cut down the number of liquor places to the minimum, licensing ninety-three, which is one for not less than 2000 people This has drawn upon him the most bitter attacks of the saloon element, but the righteous people of the city are sounding his praise.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

ELEVEN TAHITIANS, four of them women, represent their islands at the Paris Exhibition. These are all Protestants.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN BRAZIL, formed by the Union of the missions of the Northern and Southern Churches last fall, asks that twenty-six ordained missionaries may be sent to it.

A FRENCH Y.M.C.A. has been established at New York, No. 128, West Twenty-third-street. It is desirable that the fact should be known to French young men visiting America. The general secretary is M. James Leuba.

MARSEILLES.—A meeting of rag-pickers and their families was recently held in the McAll Mission-hall About 150 persons attended, and after tea earnest Gospel appeals were delivered. Copies of the New Testament were distributed, and in several ways devoted workers made the proceedings pleasant and impressive to the interesting audience.

THE MAHARAJAH SCINDIAH.—It is proposed to select shortly a child-wife for Scindiah, who is himself a mere child, and it is intended to celebrate the marriage during the next cold weather. It might be well, says The Times' Calcutta correspondent, in the case of a feudal minor, subject to direct Government influence, if the Government endeavoured to discountenance such a marriage. A case of this sort is used throughout India as the strongest argument for maintaining existing abuses.

FRENCH CARDINALS.—Three French Archbishops have just been raised to the dignity of cardinal. Our French contemporary, Le Signal, has published an article on the subject, entitled, "The Price of a Hat," showing that it is only by a figure of speech that the Pope is said to "give" the hat. What with fees, presents, and incidental expenses, the aspirants are involved in disbursements amounting to 52,000 francs each! In times gone by the cost was borne by the French Government, but now not a farthing comes from that source.

PROTESTANT PROGRESS IN PARIS.—On June 10 a temple was opened at Charenton, 10, Rue Guérin, to replace one which was destroyed in times of persecution two centuries ago. Bearing in mind the attempts at extermination which Protestantism has survived in France, there was appropriateness as well as great power in the dedication sermon preached by M. Eugène Bersier from the words, "I shall not die, but live, and declare the works of the Lord" (Ps. cxviii. 17). The Bible was placed on the pulpit of this interesting memorial church by M. Louis Vernes; MM. A. Gout and Th. Monod also took part in the proceedings.

THE REFORMED CHURCH OF PARIS has from 30,000 to 35,000 adherents, of whom only four or five thousand attend religious worship. The remainder remember they are Protestants when their children come to be married, or their friends have to be buried. The spiritual death which this state of things discloses is very sad, and a writer in Le Signal suggests the need for a Home Mission, under whose auspices the pastors may be supplied with qualified assistants, who shall stir up the people by house-to-house visitation and other exertions. Such an agency would, under God's blessing, increase the number of regular worshippers on Sundays, and help in training the rising generation more thoroughly to appreciate the Gospel and its institutions.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes.

SUNDAY, JUNE 30.—Deuteronomy XII.

VER. 1—4.—There was to be a ruthless destruction of all that would recall the idolatrous practices of the Canaanites. Their abominable rites, which were probably practised afterwards by the Druids, were always celebrated in groves of trees, every trace of which must be obliterated. We must abhor that which is evil, and put away everything that might excite evil desire, and lead us back to sin.

Ver. 5—15.—Great stress is laid upon the place where religious rites were to be celebrated. When they were settled in Canaan, God would certainly choose a place for his habitation (Ps. cxxxii. 13, 14). Thither were they to bring all their sacrifices (13), and perform there all their vows. This habit would promote the unity of the nation (Ps. cxxii. 4), would prevent idolatrous practices from creeping in, and would remind the people that their sacrifices were only acceptable when offered on that one altar which prefigured the work of Christ (Matt. xxiii. 19; Heb. xiii. 10). Our best gifts are valueless apart from Jesus. We live in a different dispensation; no locality is specially sacred, but we need to present all through Jesus Christ (John iv. 21; Heb. xiii. 15).

Ver. 16—25.—Blood was carefully prohibited as food. It was looked on as having sacrificial value, and as containing the life. It is very remarkable, therefore, that Jesus spoke of drinking his blood; it offended the Jews, but it is our privilege (John vi. 55—60; Matt. xxvi. 67). The tithes of ver. 17 were not the ordinary ones which belonged to the Levites, but extraordinary ones, on which the people might feast.

Ver. 26—32.—Once more it is enjoined to eat the holy things in the holy place, and a stringent prohibition is given against propitiating the local deities. The one demand throughout was to make God First and Last, and then all manner of prosperity and joy would fall to their share—joy (7), safety (10), blessing (15), success (18), prosperity (28).

MONDAY, JULY 1.—Deuteronomy XIII.

Moses here gives directions as to the treatment of any who might entice the people to idolatry.

Ver. 1—5.—False prophets who entice to idolatry.—We may fairly admit that bad men have been permitted to work signs and wonders. From the days of Moses, when the magicians mimicked his earlier miracles to the revelation of that wicked one, "whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders" (2 Thess. ii. 9). Doubtless spiritualism belongs to the same class. But we must always test wonderful and miraculous signs by their moral and spiritual tone. If they detract from the glory of Christ, or entice the soul away from Him, we may know that both they and their works are not of God (2; 1 John iv. 1, 2).

Ver. 6—11.—Relatives who entice to idolatry.—How often do hindrances arise in our own homes. There is a deep meaning in Matt. x. 36. And how subtle Satan is in presenting temptations through those whom we least suspect, or most tenderly love. It would need very great moral courage to follow out the stringent demands of this paragraph (9). And yet there is a sense in which it is still true (Matt. x. 37). Let us be more careful of our most secret intercourse with companions and friends; "entice thee secretly" (9; Prov. i. 10).

Ver. 12—18.—Cities which entice to idolatry.—Belial stands for the devil (2 Cor. vi. 15). How easily a few bad men lead a whole city astray. Are we equally in earnest to lead it right? Before we judge, we should inquire, make search, and ask diligently. Love hopes all things, till she is convinced sorely against her will. Would that all God's rivals were expelled from our hearts.

TUESDAY, JULY 2.—Deuteronomy XIV.

With what a marvellous description of our standing in Christ does this chapter open. We are the children of God (1 John iii. 1). All are not Israel that are of Israel. All real children of God are Israel (Rom. ii. 28, 29). We are chosen and called to be holy (Eph. i. 4), and to be God's people of possession (Tit. ii. 14). But our position naturally involves certain prohibitions and abstinence (1 Pet. i. 14, 15). (1) They were not to lament over the dead with the idolatrous practices of the heathen; and, perhaps, that excessive grief is prohibited to us which would conflict with God's will, and unfit us for the duties of daily life (1 Thess. iv. 13).

There were reasons for the exclusion of certain animals from the dietary of the people, which were far from being arbitrary (6—20); and, probably, those same sanitary and physical reasons would equally exist for us, did we live under the same conditions of climate. There is no law given us now as to food; we are free to eat as we will (Rom. xiv. 14; 1 Tim. iv. 4). But for health's sake, under certain conditions of life, we might learn some useful lessons here. We must also, for spiritual reasons, abstain from many things which others may do, just as Israel could not eat of some food which was not forbidden to others.

The regulation as to turning produce into money, and the money back again into produce (24), was a very wise and merciful one; and let us remark that joy was positively enjoined on them in their religious observances (26). In every third year this second tithe was to be spent in the home, so that those might share who were unable to go up to the distant city, and on the kindly treatment of these their own blessing depended (29). "He that loveth, knoweth God."

WEDNESDAY, JULY 3.—Deuteronomy XV.

The Jewish law was very merciful to the poor. The seventh year brought release from all debts between the children of Israel. Of course a debtor might pay money which he owed after the year of release had passed; but the creditor had no legal claim for repayment. And God promised that whatever they lost by obedience to this command should be made up to them by his blessing (4, &c.).

What a marvellous forecast of the special genius of the Jewish race is given in the sixth verse.

A provision was inserted next (7—11) to guard against the disinclination to lend money on the eve of the year of release. Men were bidden to lend or give, irrespective of any consideration of repayment, and God undertook to make good to them all such losses (10). Let us beware of the envious, or evil eye (9); the eye which would rather see the evil than the good of others, and grudges to part with its possessions. The spirit of these enactments has passed over into Christianity (Matt. v. 42). We, too, must give, except when we see clearly that our giving will do moral injury to those whom we would help.

Servants were to be released at the end of six years, as we saw, Exodus xxi. 1—6. But there is an addition, that the master was to give them a little stock to begin with (14): first, because God had blessed them; secondly, because they had obtained better service from their brethren than had been possible from strangers. The bored ear reminds us of Ps. xl. 6. How freely our Lord Jesus releases us (Luke vii. 41). Yet how closely He binds us to Himself.

We ought to give the firstlings of our time, and strength, and income to the service of God, giving Him only the best (19—23).

THURSDAY, JULY 4.—Deuteronomy XVI.

Three yearly feasts were appointed: of the Passover, of Pentecost, and of Tabernacles.

Passover (1—8).—The use of unleavened bread, which was general throughout the whole land, and not only at Jerusalem, had a symbolic reference (1 Cor. v. 8). We must never forget the price by which we have been redeemed, or the love of our Redeemer. This we commemorate in the Lord's Supper. "This do in remembrance of Me."

Pentecost (9—12) means fifty, i.e., just seven weeks. This feast was a glad acknowledgment of God's goodness in the gathered harvest. Our religion ought to be much more radiant with joy. How the very name of this feast thrills those who remember Acts ii. Surely the gift of the Holy Ghost day by day is a reason for unceasing joy.

The Feast of Tabernacles (13—15) recalls Neh. viii. 14, also John vii. 2, and the holy rites associated with it in the days of Christ, when the water was brought up with such gladness from Siloam. Let us see to it, when we rejoice, that we have set other hearts rejoicing also (Job xxix. 13).

The giving of the people was rigorously insisted upon, in proportion to their means (17; 1 Cor. xvi. 2; 2 Cor. viii. 12). We who owe so much to Christ are, for the most part, too careless of this; the Jews must have given nearly a third of their income. Some Christians don't give a tenth, which is the lowest sum mentioned in Scripture. We are not bound, but love should do more than the law demands.

The administration of justice was strictly controlled. Care was taken for preventing conformity to the idolatrous customs of the heathen; nor must they set up what God would hate. What is altogether just must be the law of all Christian living (Phil. iv. 8).

FRIDAY, JULY 5.—Deuteronomy XVII.

Ver. 1.—We must not give God anything which is at all blemished. This was the sin denounced by Mal. i. 6, 7, 8. The Old Testament sacrifices were types of Christ, who was without blemish (1 Pet. i. 19).

Ver. 2—7.—We have seen that it was a crime, punishable by death, to seduce others to idolatry (xiii.); but it was also a crime to be seduced, so much so that, whether male or female, no mercy was shown. Death was inflicted at the city gate. How solemn must have been the responsibility of the witnesses. We are reminded of Acts vii. 58.

Ver. 8—13.—In every city, courts of judgment were erected, which are referred to by our Lord in Matt. v. 22. But there was a right of appeal to the judge or high priest; and perhaps the ultimate decision would be given by the Urim and Thummim. We, too, must go for judgment and guidance to our Great High Priest, who cannot fail us. Presumptuous sin was unpardonable, hence the prayer of Ps. xix. 13.

Ver. 14—20.—The appointment of a king was not commanded, but it was foreseen that it would inevitably follow in the very nature of the case. And it did (1 Sam. xii. 19). Regulations are here given: he must be from among his brethren, that he might typify our King, who is our kinsman (Heb. ii. 14). He must not have horses, lest it should produce commerce with Egypt (Ps. xx. 17; Hos. xiv. 3). He must not have many wives (1 Kings xi. 1). He must not accumulate money (1 Kings xii. 4; Ps. lxii. 10). How beautiful was that provision which insisted on his writing out the law of God with his own hand, and the demand that he should read therein continually, "all the days of his life" (19; Ps. i. 2). But it is not enough to read; we must be careful to keep. The Scriptures correct pride and prolong prosperity (20).

SATURDAY, JULY 6.—Deuteronomy XVIII.

Ver. 1—8.—The priests and Levites were liberate from all the cares of this world, that they might bd free for their spiritual functions (Acts vi. 2; e Tim. ii. 4). Ah, happy are we if we can say, Lam2 iii. 24. The priests who served the altar had their share of the peace offerings brought, whilst they were waiting. And here there seems to be an augmentation in the firstfruits from any special precincts being brought to the priests residing there. If any Levite, out of his course, preferred officiating as a servant to the sanctuary to continuing in his own city, he was even encouraged by some addition to his private income (8).

Ver. 9—14.—The people were again warned against all the various forms of evil which abounded around them. This was Saul's fatal sin (1 Sam. xxviii.). The various terms used here include every form of seeking aid from invisible and wicked spirits. This surely forbids spiritualism in all its forms. We may seek for help from God, but we have no more right to seek wisdom from demons than strength for our daily work.

Ver. 15—22.—The thoughts of the people are directed to Christ, the true prophet (Acts iii. 22, vii. 37). Let us go to Him with all our hard questions, and let us be careful to keep our loyalty to Him intact. Oh, how serious is the sin of those who refuse Him! How awful the words, "I will require it of him" (19; Heb. x. 28, 29). The chapter ends with a caution against false prophets (Jer. xxiii. 25; Ezek. xiii. 6). Let us prove all things, eschewing the evil, holding fast to the good, not fearing any evil predicted by those who are not God-sent.

BULGARIA.—While the Greek Church and the Papacy dispute the "cure" of the souls of the Bulgarians, some zealous servants of God are exerting themselves on behalf of the simple faith of Christ. Dr. Long, of Constantinople, and M. Panateroff who has renounced the errors of the Greek Church, are at the head of the movement, which has the active support of many young Bulgarians who have enjoyed the educational advantages of that excellent institution, Robert College, Constantinople. It is reported that, as a result of vigorous endeavours, the south-western part of Bulgaria has become to a large extent Protestant.

WEST LONDON FACTORY GIRLS.

IN a booklet, entitled "Out of Darkness," Miss Meredith Brown, hon. superintendent of the Shaftesbury Institute, Lisson-grove, not only gives a deeply interesting account of the important work in which she is engaged, but sketches the life of a factory girl who, through her loving ministrations, came to know Christ as her Saviour and Lord. The fearful surroundings in which the poor girl's childhood was passed are given as related by herself, and the story is a sad illustration of the terrible results which sin in various forms inevitably entails.

It is to meet the cases of such neglected girls that Miss Brown and her helpers labour. She says: "There are Homes for quieter girls, and there are Rescue Homes, but ours does not belong to the rescue class. Our work is to give a helping hand to those whom other missions do not reach. Many of these girls are strong characters, intensely affectionate, and can be won for Christ." Reclaimed from a life of reckless wickedness, one of these girls wrote to her "mate": "I have got good news to tell you; I have given myself to Jesus to live for Him. I don't mind now where I go to service, because I know I have got one to go with me. I did feel so lonely, not having you to talk to, but I am so happy now. If you have not 'started,' ask Him to take you. He will make you good. Though you have often tried before, don't say He cannot keep you. He has kept Nellie and me one day, and I am sure He can keep us more. Just trust Him, M——; He will do it for you, and then how happy we shall both be! If far away, we shall meet again one day."

By evening classes and various elevating agencies, the hearts and minds of the girls are reached, although, like other such work, this has its many discouragements. As for the Home, which has twelve beds, it is pleasing to read that last year thirty-six girls were received as inmates; some were passed on to other institutions; fifteen are doing well in situations, and eleven remain in the Institute.

Realising the pressing needs of the lads of Lisson-grove, Miss Brown is anxious to extend work among them, and the concluding pages of her report are devoted to pleading their cause. A Working Lads' Institute is sadly required, and suitable premises might be secured at an outlay of £3000. More workers in connection with this endeavour are also called for. Communications to Miss Brown may be addressed to the Shaftesbury Institute, Harrow-street, Lisson-grove, N.W.

FEMALE SERVANTS' HOME SOCIETY.—The encouragement of faithful female servants is one of the primary objects of this Society. In furtherance of this purpose the fifty-third annual tea-meeting was held on Monday, June 17, at Morley Halls, Regent-street, the centre of Y.W.C.A. work. At five o'clock a good company of servants and others assembled to enjoy the social meal, and shortly afterwards the annual meeting of the Homes (205, Great Portland-street; 21, Nutford-place, Edgware-road; and 74, High-street, Camden Town) was held. The chairman was Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, who presented the Society's rewards for long and faithful service in a most hearty and sympathetic manner. These "rewards" included thirty-nine Bibles for one year's service in one family, three engraved and framed testimonials, together with handsome books for five years', and four gold medals for fifteen years' service. The report read by the secretary, Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe, of 79, Finsbury-pavement, E.C., referred to the number admitted into the Homes during the past year (1058), and hopefully anticipated greater usefulness in the future. Suitable and earnest addresses were given by the chairman, by Rev. W. Stott, of Abbey-road Chapel, Mrs. Bowen, Miss Beauchamp, of the Y.W.C.A., Mrs. Eynon (of the British Women's Temperance Society), and Mr. J. L. Stanley.

SAMUEL CALLED OF GOD.—1 SAM. iii. 1—14.

GOLDEN TEXT: ver. 10.

SAMUEL is supposed to have been twelve years old at the time of this lesson. His name means "Asked of God," and was given because his mother received him in answer to prayer (i.). From the time when he was weaned—probably at three years of age—he had been under the care of Eli at the house of God in Shiloh. Chap. ii. gives an awful picture of the wickedness of Eli's sons, and closes with a prediction of the downfall of the house of Eli. This lesson describes the call of Samuel to the work of a prophet.

Ver. 1.—It is to Samuel's honour that he was not corrupted by the example of Eli's sons. He preferred to follow the counsel of Eli rather than to imitate the conduct of Hophni and Phinehas. And his faithfulness aggravates their guilt. Though young, he was able to "minister unto the Lord," but he needed the direction of Eli, and submitted to it. The influences that tended to the formation of Samuel's excellent character were: (1) his godly parents; (2) Eli's instruction and example; (3) his early habit of devoted service; and (4) his resistance of the temptation presented by the example of Eli's sons. This last is by no means unimportant. "The word of the Lord was precious," &c.—God very seldom spoke to men by his prophets. Only two are named in Judges (iv. 4, vi. 8). This lack of communications from God is not surprising, considering the religious declension that then prevailed.

Ver. 2, 3.—Probably the sleeping apartments of Eli and Samuel were in the court of the Tabernacle, and not far apart, so that Samuel might minister to Eli if he needed it. The time was just before daybreak (3). It was a quiet hour, suitable for hearing the voice of God.

Ver. 4—10.—Several important suggestions are in this narrative: (1) "The Lord called Samuel."—He had often heard the voice of Eli; now he is called by God Himself. We receive but little benefit so long as we hear only the voice of the servants of God. We need to "hear the voice of the Son of God" (John v. 25; Mark iii. 13). Only the call of God can give men life, or make them prophets. (2) He called "Samuel." He knew him by name. This is no small favour (Exod. xxxiii. 12, 17; Isa. xliii. 1; Acts ix. 4). A Divine call is never general, but particular. (3) He called repeatedly (4, 6, 8, 10); no less than four times (Job xxxiii. 14). What a revelation of his patience and persistence! He is not less persistent still. He seeks until He finds (Luke xv. 4). Remember the hymn beginning—

> How long the time since Christ began
> To call in vain on me!

(4) Samuel's mistake.—He did not reject God's call intelligently. He erred in judgment, not in will. As far as he understood the call, he answered it. He was not accustomed to receive any message from the Lord direct (7). He had learnt the will of God through Eli, and took this for his voice (5). His ready, though mistaken, response is commendable.—He had been accustomed to minister unto the Lord, partly, we may suppose, in waiting upon Eli. And at that early hour he rose three times from his bed, and offered to serve Eli. This ready obedience to the authority God had placed over him was an excellent preparation for yielding equal obedience to God (6). The last call was distinct from the preceding. "The Lord came and stood"—or presented Himself (10). In some way He revealed Himself to Samuel, and repeated the name twice. The instructions given to Samuel (9) prepared him for receiving such a message. His mind was awake. He was quietly waiting for God, hence the fuller revelation and the urgent call (7). Now Samuel's response is at once given, "Speak, for thy servant heareth" (10). The attitude of soul these words suggest becomes not only the young disciple, but all who know God. We never get beyond the need of learning of Jesus (Matt. xi. 28—30).

Ver. 11—14.—Samuel's first commission as a prophet was a very difficult and painful one. No wonder that he feared to tell it to Eli (15). It would cause the ears to tingle when it was heard (11); it foretold certain and complete destruction (12), according to the word already spoken (ii. 30—36); it reproved for grievous sin, known yet not corrected (13); and by a solemn oath it established the judgment, so that no sacrifice could prevent its falling (14). Individual descendants of Eli would have the same opportunity of repentance and pardon that others have; but the removal of Eli's household from the priesthood was unalterable. To deliver such a message to Eli, to whom he was indebted for so much instruction and help, was a painful duty for Samuel. But God is early training him for his after work (Lam. iii. 27).

The lessons of this incident are—

(1) The possibility and the desirability of child conversion.—The Church to-day should find a place and a service even for the young. Under such conditions our most useful servants of God are trained.

(2) The frequency and variety of God's calls.—There are none who may not hear his voice—though not as spoken to Samuel—through his Word; his servants; his unfailing goodness; his providences, &c.

(3) When we hear we should be ready to respond, as Samuel did.—To learn of Him is our first duty. The opened ear is necessary, if we are to speak for Him (Isa. l. 4).

(4) Whatever his command, it is our highest wisdom to obey.—Even an unpleasant task may be cheerfully undertaken for God. Compare Samuel with Isaiah (vi. 9—12).

CEYLON'S GREAT NEED.

DEAR SIR,—In September last, I appealed through your columns for ladies to undertake educational and evangelistic work among the women of the Kandian hill country of Ceylon. A most encouraging response, both in the way of volunteers and funds, makes us hope that three ladies may go forth this autumn, two for a boarding-school, and the third to visit the women in their own homes, and so bring to those who are sunk in the thick darkness of Buddhism, the glad tidings of salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Two of the ladies are provided for, but we need £150 to pay the passage of the third, and to support her for a year as she carries on her important work. The Singhalese language is being assiduously studied by two of these ladies, and they are making such progress that we trust they may be able with very little delay to make known their glorious message to their Kandian sisters.

May I plead, also, for a medical lady, to take the place of one who was willing to consecrate her talents and her means, and to accompany our lady evangelists, but is kept back through family circumstances, so that our Master's direction be fulfilled, and that they may go two and two, as labourers in this most important field.

Yours gratefully,

(MRS.) FRANCES M. IRELAND JONES.

C. M. House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C.

A PRACTICAL WORK has been carried on by the ladies of the Zenana Medical College, 58, St. George's-road, London, S.W., among the poor of the surrounding districts for the last nine years. Nearly two hundred mothers have been attended during the year, and numbers constantly come for registration. One morning in the week is devoted to vaccination, and three afternoons are given to the dispensary for out-patients. Thus in this neighbourhood there is a centre of active work. From the College have gone forth many trained women to those countries where women only are allowed medically to attend women.

THE CONFERENCE HALL AND SERVANTS' INSTITUTE, 435A, Norwood-road, S.E., is the home and centre of many earnest endeavours, of which some account is given in the third annual report, just issued. The Servants' Institute was last year blessed to many respectable girls; in fact, some 122 found shelter therein while waiting for new situations. The kindly oversight and motherly care of the matron was as welcome as it was in many cases very needful. Moreover, no fewer than 985 girls passed through the books of the registry office, which is deservedly highly appreciated by mistresses and servants alike. An important work is done in the neighbourhood by house-to-house visitation; the poor are fed; there is open-air preaching; and many other much-needed operations are pursued for the glory of God and the good of men. Mrs. Woodford Fawcett is hon. superintendent of this singularly interesting work.

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER,

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CHRONIC PHTHISIS.—CASE of Miss E. CORBITT.

This patient first came to me in May of last year. She had been ailing for four years, but recently had been much worse. She had had hæmorrhage several times. She had been treated at St. Mary's Hospital without benefit, and had been for a change into Herefordshire, and since her return thence had been rapidly failing.

The usual symptoms of cough, expectoration, pains in the lungs, short breathing, failing appetite, with slow loss of flesh, and failing of strength, were present.

On examination, I found it to be a case of Chronic Consumption, a slowly progressing form of lung disease, but in general a difficult case to deal with, and requiring much steady perseverance. In this case the lungs had been probably touched with disease for nearly four years.

She improved in about six weeks, and came again. At this time a little sore throat and neuralgia required special medicine, which was prescribed by Dr. B. The neuralgia, &c., were relieved, and she went on slowly improving to recovery (as her father reported).

Mr. John Corbitt, writing me February 11 of this year, says: "My daughter quite recovered under your valuable treatment, and has taken a situation. She is stronger than she has been for many years. You can use this in any way you think proper.—J. CORBITT, Lancaster Mews, Hyde-park. My daughter's present address is 3, Kingsmead-road, Oxton, Birkenhead."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

THE UNSUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES.

LADIES' SAMARITAN SOCIETY,

National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen Square, Bloomsbury.

Contributions are earnestly solicited in aid of a special collection for the Unsuccessful Candidates at the election of Pensioners. There were 26 Candidates, and only 6 pensions to bestow; 20 poor sufferers were consequently disappointed, and it is hoped that sufficient money may be raised to send a small gift of money to each of them. Donations will be gratefully received by the Ladies' Committee, as above.

THE BENEVOLENT OR STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer, Ald. Sir R. N. Fowler, Bart., M.P.
J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman.
Clarence Smith, Esq., J.P., Hon. Secretary.

For 103 years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of over 240 Christian men and women.

Funds are urgently needed.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY'S MISSIONARY BOOKS.

ARE FOREIGN MISSIONS A FAILURE?

READ THE

MISSIONARY YEAR BOOK for 1889,

Containing Historical and Statistical Accounts of the Principal Protestant Missionary Societies in Great Britain, the Continent of Europe, and America. Crown 8vo., 2s. 6d., cloth boards.

Gospel Ethnology. By S. R. PATTISON, F.G.S., Author of "The Religious Topography of England," &c. With Illustrations. 2s. 6d., cloth.

"The idea is, as far as we are aware, new, and the working out is clear and telling. The object is to show the adaptability of the Gospel to all races from actual facts."—British Weekly.

"The first attempt to treat this subject from a thorough-going scientific standpoint. A very powerful argument for the truth of Christianity."—English Churchman.

"A book to refer to for information not easily to be obtained otherwise."—Church Missionary Intelligencer.

Christian Progress in China. Gleanings from the Writings and Speeches of Many Workers. By ARNOLD FOSTER, B.A., London Missionary, Hankow. With a Map of China. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d., cloth boards.

Mr. Arnold Foster has collected from many sources interesting and valuable facts all setting forth the great and varied progress which Christianity has made in China. The agents of all the societies have been pressed into this service, and the result is a very important and very encouraging array of facts. It will be found a capital book to read at missionary working parties. It also contributes its quota of evidence towards establishing beyond all cavil that Christian missions have not been a failure in the East.

Old Wang. The first Chinese Evangelist in Manchuria. A Sketch of his Life and Work, with a chapter on Native Agency in Chinese Missions. With a Portrait and Illustrations by JOHN ROSS, Missionary of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland. Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d., cloth boards.

Among the Mongols. By the Rev. JAMES GILMOUR, M.A., of Pekin. With Engravings. New Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d., cloth, gilt edges.

"No one who begins this book will leave it till the narrative ends, or doubt for an instant that he has been enchained by something separate and distinct in literature, something almost uncanny in the way it has gripped him, and made him see for ever a scene he never expected to see."—The Spectator.

Old Highways in China. By ISABELLA WILLIAMSON, of Cheefoo. Illustrations and Map. Crown 8vo. 5s., cloth.

"Mrs. Williamson writes naturally, and with ease. She has much that is interesting to say, and we have no hesitation in recommending her book to those who wish to read something new about an old subject."—Saturday Review.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Mr. George Stott, of the China Inland Mission.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, having concluded his chapters upon the Epistle to the Hebrews, hopes to contribute to our pages a new series of articles, probably upon the first Epistle of Peter, beginning in September next.

That a very wide-spread desire exists for the Sunday Closing of Public-houses is evident from the fact that no less than 2,258 petitions in its favour have been presented at the House of Commons. These represent a total of over 517,000 signatures, of which number the monster petition of the Salvation Army (which was about three miles long) contained 300,000. It may be contended that these are not necessarily "influential" signatures, but they are, at any rate, the signatures of the masses, who will most of all be affected by the measure, and the fact that they, of all classes, desire it, is a strong argument in its favour.

The liquor-selling question is becoming a burning one in Massachusetts. Nearly 1500 saloons were closed in Boston on the first of May; it was objected that 3500 persons were thrown out of employment, and five million dollars of invested capital made unprofitable. Such is the strength of the liquor power that has been allowed to grow up, and such are the elements of dismay and rage which fight against the prohibitionists. It is manifest, however, that the United States are shadowed by a colossal evil that must either conquer, or be in subjection to public opinion. It is asserted that one out of six divorces in America is directly traceable to drink, and cases of brutality to wives have been published which cannot be read without a shudder. The evil must be fought, and superhuman courage can alone sustain in the conflict.

It is satisfactory to note that the clause in the Cruelty to Children Prevention Bill forbidding the employment of children under ten in theatres and other places (whether licensed for the sale of liquor or not) was duly carried. To place children of tender years—sometimes mere babies of four or five years old—amidst the surroundings and associations of the theatre is physically injurious and morally poisonous. There are said to be ten thousand children employed in the English pantomimes every year: they are exposed on all sides to influences which, if they do not ruin them, unsettle them for the ordinary work of life. Many sad stories could be told of the subsequent careers of young girls who have been thus employed. The Bill might have gone a step further and provided for the regulation of their employment between the ages of ten and fourteen: but this, perhaps, is more within the province of a factory or education Act.

In an article on the "Great Turf Case," that has been filling the columns of newspapers, The Spectator says that the task of enforcing honesty on the turf is next to an impossibility. There is not a betting man who is not full to the lip of stories of roguery, and there is nothing in which roguery pays so well, and is so little liable to be found out. Such a fact has apparently little influence on those in all ranks of social life upon whom the passion of betting has laid hold, but it must be told again and again by those who have to do with young men.

The revelations made in Court will, however, be valuable, if they serve to satisfy those who are being led into gambling, that when they engage in betting upon horse-racing, they have not merely gambling chances to face, but the machinations of dishonest and unscrupulous opponents. We have heard much about "manly sport" in connection with racing; the other side of the shield has now been exposed, and a picture of sporting life has been revealed darker than anything hitherto painted.

The Star, in a friendly article, referring to an entertainment recently organised for the benefit of the Thimble League, says:—

> The only objectionable feature about the show yesterday was the roulette table, at which Lady Durrant was assisting, whereat undisguised gambling was the order of the day.

Setting aside the undesirability of the employment of such means in the collection of funds for charitable purposes, we are at a loss to understand why these illegal practices should be permitted at such entertainments. Gambling of this kind would not be allowed by the police upon any fair ground, and it does not seem just that it should be winked at when those who engage in it are people of position, who ought to set a better example.

The pastoral letter from the Presbyterian Church of England, which has been read in churches in Lancashire and Cheshire, deals with some of the pressing questions of the day in a very trenchant manner, and especially with the high strain of modern life "in its craving for excitement and amusement, and its engrossing affairs of business and politics." That such matters do pre-occupy, and almost monopolise, the minds of many professing Christians is a fact deeply to be deplored. We are glad to see that the degeneracy is being treated as it should be by those who are interested in the spiritual welfare of the people.

How little we know of the cost at which some of our comforts are provided. From a recent trade dispute, it appears that the men who in the gasworks have to clear the purifying boxes of the lime through which the gas passes are so affected by the foul gas as to be temporarily blinded, other men taking their places for a time with a similar result. If a waste of property rather than a risk to health and life were concerned, the aid of science would ere this have been called in with the view of remedying the condition of things. Cannot some of our Christian scientists give their attention to the matter?

The provision of healthy dwellings for the people is of such vital importance morally, socially, and physically, that no excuse is needed for frequently drawing attention to it. From a careful and exhaustive report lately published by Dr. Thresh, of Manchester, it appears that the death-rate in one district of Salford alone is over fifty per thousand; whilst in the courts and alleys it exceeds eighty, and in one street has actually exceeded ninety. The same authority avers that between three and four thousand persons are dying annually in Manchester from preventible causes. These numbers speak for themselves, and the mere recital of them ought to rouse the authorities to effective action—not a mere patching and tinkering here and there. Unfortunately, some of the death-traps are stated to be the property of members of the very public bodies which are morally responsible for such needless sacrifice of human life. There is no necessity for fresh legislation: let the existing regulations be rigidly and impartially enforced, and much will be done towards alleviating the miserable conditions under which so many of the poor live, rendering goodness, and even decency, well nigh impossible.

In connection with this subject, it is encouraging to note the statement made at the recent annual meeting of the Metropolitan Association for Improving the Dwellings of the Working Classes, to the effect that, under the stimulus of the Society's example, there has of late been an enormous increase in the number of dwellings for the working classes which fulfil every sanitary requirement, and that very large numbers of the population are now housed very differently from what they were when the Association began its work. That healthy dwellings mean decreased mortality is illustrated by the fact, as stated at the meeting, that the death-rate in the buildings erected by the Association is 15·6, as against 18·5 for the whole Metropolis, although the birth-rate in the former is four per thousand greater. Moreover, the balance sheet shows that, from the point of view of mere £ s. d., the provision of wholesome houses is no bad investment, a dividend of 5 per cent. having been declared.

According to the report of the Inspector of Fisheries, just issued, some 33,500 men and boys find regular employment, and 11,100 occasional employment, on the 15,692 fishing boats registered under the Sea Fisheries Act of 1883. The loss of life among these toilers of the deep is, the Inspector says, still unduly swelled by their own recklessness and want of care. Familiar with the dangers surrounding their calling, the men persistently neglect to take reasonable precautions. Last year 298 lives were lost; 153 are set down to the account of wrecks and casualties, and 145 to various causes, when no accident happened to the vessel. It is grievous to read of deaths due to sheer carelessness, but the report assigns several to this prolific cause of mischief.

The recent concession by the Sultan of authority to construct and to maintain for seventy-one years a railway from Jaffa to Jerusalem must be an important fact to all who are interested in the condition of the Jews in Palestine. It is stated that an English and French company has been formed to carry out the project, and in connection with the matter the British Consul in a diplomatic report has stated that the carriage road between the two places has been greatly improved, and that there is a great increase of traffic over it. He adds:—

The Jewish colonies in Palestine are greatly improving. All the colonists are good labourers, and nearly all the land is cultivated in an improved manner.

The idea of a railway to Jerusalem is at the first view somewhat incongruous, but it is easy to see that several difficult questions in regard to the colonisation of the Holy Land must necessarily be simplified by the introduction of so potent an agent.

It is still too true that the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty. Where the light of the Gospel has not penetrated, human life is counted as a very cheap commodity, and gross cruelties are not only perpetrated without compunction, but are deemed to be highly meritorious on certain occasions. Cruelties and human sacrifices of a most revolting and horrible kind are stated to have taken place, and to be still continued, at New Calabar, on the West Coast of Africa, in connection with the death of the old King of Eboe. There does not seem to be a spot on the face of the globe more in need of the kindly influences of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and we sincerely trust that these shocking occurrences will draw to New Calabar the serious attention of our missionary societies.

A correspondent resident in a well-known southern provincial town writes:—

I have lately been occupied in fixing the relative value of this year's local Scripture examination papers as issued by the Sunday-school Union. The place where this was done is one of decidedly average intelligence and piety. The answers of scholars showed an acquaintance with the facts and words of Scripture, and a knowledge of the circumstantial surroundings of New Testament events, which were in every way admirable. But—and the exception was as painful as it was obvious—there was a deplorable ignorance of the spiritual teaching that underlay the narratives, and which was referred to in the questions. The external was known well; but of the real and internal much less than was hoped for.

Whether the statement of our correspondent be exceptional or otherwise, all our readers must realise the great desirableness of daily prayer for the World's Sunday-school Convention, being held in the Memorial Hall this week. Such an important Convention, or one which will witness the presence of so many American and foreign representatives, has rarely been held.

The introduction of the educational work of Dr. Duff in Calcutta into the Missionary controversy calls for a reminder. It may be conceded that Dr. Duff did not in India adequately use his great power as a fervent preacher in setting forth in the vernacular the Gospe lwhich he loved. But these things must be considered: he saw that young Hindoos, influenced by the prestige of the British Government, were learning English, and were largely imbibing the poison of English atheism; his advocacy of high-class institutions was to preserve them from these waves of scepticism. It was the special relation of the people of India to Great Britain that largely influenced Dr. Duff's action, and there is no evidence that he advocated the teaching of English where no such relations existed. Nevertheless, the arguments in defence of preaching rather than teaching are in every way timely.

The article on "Cheap Missionaries" in the July Contemporary Review will be read with interest, but not with the conviction that it adds much to the controversy that has been carried on. Mr. Meredith Townsend raises an able protest, both against reducing the payment of missionaries in India and against sending a number of European celibates there. He maintains that the notion that poverty will bring a man closer to the natives is a delusion, and that an unmarried man will really be regarded with distrust. He proposes so to re-organise the missionary system that in India the active agents in the way of preaching shall be native converts, and the European missionaries their superintendents, or bishops, as he terms them. Patience, candour, adherence to Scripture, and prayer, seem to be our proper attitude at present in relation to this important controversy.

There are few parish churches in England more attractive than that of Handsworth, near Birmingham. It has long been known as a centre of English Protestantism, and rich and poor alike have loved to worship within walls around which, in picturesque grounds, the remains of their ancestors lay. The vicar has lately resigned. The first thing to indicate what the new vicar would be was the arrival, a fortnight before his appearance, of a jewelled processional cross. Then came the demand that every time they sang the "Gloria," the choir should turn to the east; then the lighting of candles; then the substitution in the communion service of wafers for bread; then the requirement that the choir, after marching through the church, should kneel in the middle of the chancel to receive the blessing of the clergy. The gentlemen who formed the choir have resisted further commands; the whole parish is disturbed; and the seat-holders are aggrieved. Surely such arbitrary assumptions are a grievous wrong to Christian people, and must form a theme of rejoicing to Birmingham infidels. How far are these things to proceed without let or hindrance?

In commenting upon the recent utterances of the President of the English Church Union, The Record firmly says:—

It is the Mass, the Mass pure and simple, that Lord Halifax openly confesses himself to be striving for. The other matters must, in his view, be only important so far as they group themselves around his great central idea, and assist or retard the consummation of his wishes. Proposals for peace are clearly out of the question. Lord Halifax must have the Mass; Protestant Churchmen must resist it. These are the two sides; they have the field to themselves, and compromise is impossible.

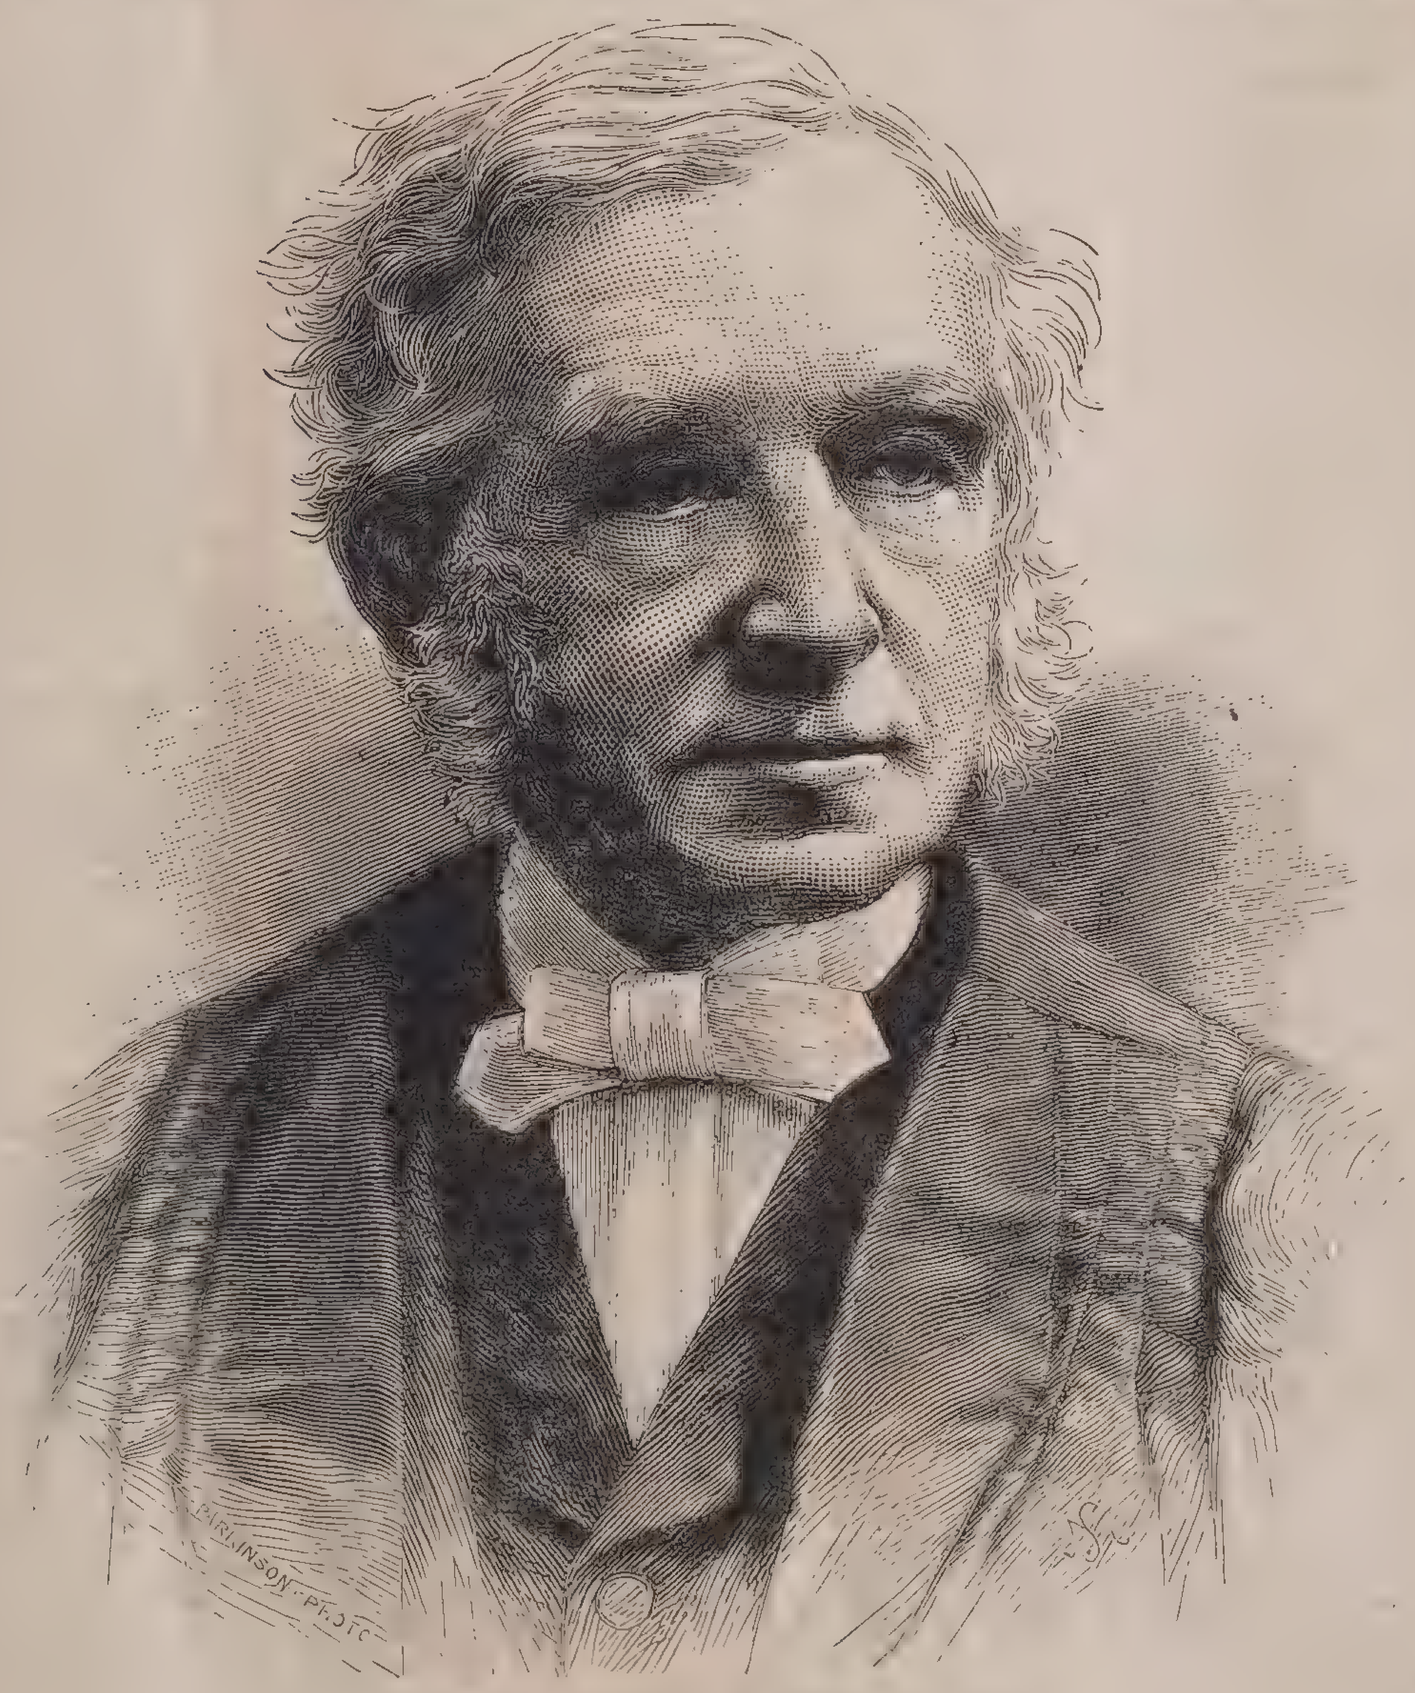
The removal of uncertainty on this supreme point is an advantage, and justifies Sir Arthur Blackwood's plea in the same paper for comprehension. He objects to the formation of a society, consisting only of Protestant Churchmen. The danger calls for a union of Protestant Christians. We are not, on various grounds, very sanguine about this. Nevertheless, nothing is more demanded than that Christian Englishmen, as Sir Arthur contends, should stand shoulder to shoulder in defence of the Reformed faith and should remember the motto of William III., "The Protestant religion and the liberties of England."

The unsatisfactory and unsatisfying character of Unitarian teaching was made abundantly evident in some of the utterances at the recent anniversary of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. One speaker complained of lack of enthusiasm amongst the members, and that the life of Christ was imperfectly recognised. Another lamented the want of earnestness and warmth in Unitarian services, and the absence of a missionary spirit. Can this be wondered at, when we consider the "cold negations" which are made to do duty for the full and perfect Gospel of Christ? "Where there is ice in the pulpit there cannot be fire in the pews"; a congregation fed upon the dry husks of doctrine, which denies or explains away the fundamental truths of Scripture, cannot be expected to show much spiritual vitality. The blessing of God cannot rest upon a diluted or distorted Gospel.

Nor is the solution of any of the "Modern Difficulties" (which formed one of the topics of discussion at this meeting) to be looked for from a body which "has no creeds, no dogmas, no finalities, no standard of appeal, and in which every teacher is a standard to himself alone, with absolute freedom." And if we are to judge from the words of Dr. Martineau, the literature of Unitarianism is unable to satisfy even the intellectual desires of its followers. He says:—

I am conscious that my deepest obligations are in almost every department to writers not of my own creed. In philosophy I have had to unlearn most that I had imbibed from by early text-books, and the authors most in favour with them. In Biblical interpretation I derive from Calvin and Whitby the help that fails me in Crell and Belsham. In devotional literature and religious thought I find nothing of ours that does not pale before Augustine, Tauler, Pascal. And in the poetry of the Church it is the Latin or German hymns, or the lines of Charles Wesley, or of Keble, that fasten on my memory and heart, and make all else seem poor and cold.

It will add materially to the enjoyment of those who are about to take their annual holiday if they will remember that for the small sum of five shillings the Children's Aid Society can maintain a city child at a pleasant country home for one week. To give these drooping plants a week of healthful surroundings is true charity which "blesseth him that gives and him that takes."



EASTBOURNE.—A very earnest, devotional meeting was recently held at the Fishermen's Bethel, to dedicate the building to the work of God. A week later a meat tea was given to the men and their wives, followed by short, pointed addresses by various friends. The workers are looking for great blessings to follow. The secretary is Mr. Reuben Wood, 45, Longstone-road, Eastbourne.

MR. J. W. C. FEGAN is suffering from the effects of long continued care and toil. He says:—"I am forbidden to expect a speedy recovery from the severe strain of the last four years; but, notwithstanding, I cherish the hope that, through a few weeks' perfect rest of mind and body, I may be able to take up all my duties again." With regard to his several Homes, he adds:—"It would lift quite a load off my heart, if I could wipe off every liability, and know that there were no arrears accumulating in my enforced absence, to weigh me down with anxiety on my return."

REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.,

Lafayette Avenue Church, Brooklyn, U.S.A.

THERE are few Christian ministers whose influence is more world-wide than Dr. Cuyler, the highly esteemed Brooklyn pastor. He is one of the most popular of preachers in the United States, through every part of which his voice has been heard. He ministers regularly to one of the largest congregations in America, and his teaching is enjoyed by multitudes who have never seen him in the flesh, through those articles from his busy pen which appear in the American religious papers, finding their way to the remotest corners of the land, and which, reprinted here, are widely circulated in Great Britain, besides being translated into foreign languages.

(From Photograph by Mr. Parkinson, New York.)

THEODORE LEDYARD CUYLER was born at Aurora, in New York State, in 1822. His ancestry were from Holland on the one side and from the Huguenots on the other. He came of a family of lawyers. His father was a successful one at the age of twenty-eight, when he died, leaving Theodore at the age of four years, to the guardianship and training of his mother. The lawyer's firm, which flourished under the care of his grandfather, had a large practice, and the family naturally desired that the child might inherit the labours and position of his predecessors. But from his birth the mother's prayer had been that he might become a preacher of the everlasting Gospel. In her heart she dedicated her infant to the Lord, desiring for him the honour of being a faithful minister of Christ in however humble a sphere, rather than of occupying any other position, however lucrative and distinguished. Her first gift to him was a pocket Bible, which he was able to read at four years of age.

When nine years old he attended some protracted prayer-meetings at school, after one of which he said, "Mother, I've decided for Christ," and soon made his public confession by membership with the church. At sixteen he entered Princeton University, where he took honours after three years' study. At nineteen he visited Europe to enlarge his mind by foreign travel. Bearing good introductions, he was received by various men of eminence, who were charmed with this vivacious youth, overflowing with cultured curiosity and Yankee wit. Among others, Thomas Carlyle and Charles Dickens showed him no little kindness which is fondly cherished in his memory.

On his return he was still undecided as to his future career. His father's family urged him to study law, and take his place there, sure of honour and financial prosperity. The mother, as wise as godly, refrained from urging her long-cherished desire, feeling that every true minister must be called of God; so she simply said, "The Lord will lead you." A few days after this conversation he went to a neighbouring village on business, when an elder of the church eagerly addressed him: "God has sent you, for we want help at a meeting this evening for Christian conference with inquirers." He had never taken part hitherto in any meetings of the sort, but his words on this occasion were so fervent and judicious, and the impression on the hearers so manifest, that the elder said to him, "If you have not decided, God has." Eleven out of sixteen inquirers yielded themselves to God that night, saying, "That young man made the way so plain." How truly the poet's words have been verified: "The child is father of the man." What thousands since then, hearing or reading his counsels, can say, "He made the way so plain!"

The mother, filled with joyful thankfulness, no longer restrained the expression of her earnest desires, and said, "My son, doubt no longer; God has called you to preach the Gospel." Then he went to Princeton Theological Seminary for the study of divinity, where he remained three years; and in 1846 was invited to the Presbyterian Church, Burlington, New Jersey. In 1849 he removed to a church at Trenton, N.J., where he was so successful and manifested such pulpit power and Christian zeal that it was felt that he ought to aid in the more arduous work, and in the larger sphere of the populous and ever-growing city of New York. So in 1853 we find him installed as pastor of the Reformed Dutch Church in Market-street, where he at once gathered a crowded congregation, and was acknowledged to be one of the most attractive preachers to the young men of the metropolis.

But New York was moving over the water, and Brooklyn became the scene of much Christian energy in providing for the wants of the new settlers. In 1860 a small company of earnest Presbyterians was organised as a church, and invited the city pastor to come over and help them. Difficulties attracted rather than repelled. He left a mature, strong church for one in its infancy: a building capacious and free from debt for one existing only in idea. Here the "happy few," the "band of brothers," strong in faith, although weak otherwise, and led by the brave young pioneer they had invited to be their chief, erected the church which has been the scene of Dr. Cuyler's ever increasingly successful labours during nine-and-twenty years. In the course of this pastorate he has delivered to his own people 2700 sermons, besides some 1200 addresses. He has admitted 4350 members to fellowship; the present number is upwards of 2000.

In reviewing his pastorate in a memorial sermon recently preached, Dr. Cuyler said: "My first text was: 'I determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ and Him crucified.' When my tongue ceases from the music of that heavenly message, may death make it cleave to the roof of my mouth." This has been his predominant theme throughout his long ministry. He is a man of culture and refinement, but has never been so refined as to think it bad taste to refer to "the precious blood of Christ," which the glorified spirits before the throne are not too refined to extol in the hallelujah chorus of heaven: "To Him that loved us and washed us from our sins in his blood, be glory for ever and ever."

In that memorial sermon Dr. Cuyler mentioned, as among the principles that had actuated him and his congregation, the Bible the sole rule of faith, new progress in old paths, and Christian philanthropy in the advocacy of temperance, freedom, and evangelisation. He has always been prominent as an opponent of slavery, denouncing it fearlessly when such protests were not popular. As a temperance advocate he has been indefatigable and uncompromising. He thus spoke of his personal obligation to total abstinence: "In forty years I have never lost but two Sabbaths from sickness. If any minister who believes in using alcoholics for his stomach's sake can show a cleaner bill of health, he is welcome to produce it." His long-continued labours and eloquent advocacy have been recognised in his being appointed President of the National Temperance Society of America.

Dr. Cuyler thinks highly of special missions for the revival of religion. These are held at frequent intervals in his church, with great blessing. At one of these, in 1866, 320 members were added, of whom one hundred were heads of households. A large machinery of Christian work is in constant operation, including Sunday-schools, two mission churches, and a young people's association for active service numbering more than seven hundred members. Three other churches have been established, which look to Lafayette-avenue as their mother.

The Doctor never preaches without diligent study of his theme. He is always at the call of the afflicted, and visits his flock as if he had no sermons to preach. Moreover, as if he neither preached nor visited, he sends forth articles, through the medium of the weekly religious press, which are read by multitudes who do not generally look at such publications. There is never a week during which some pungent, practical address of his does not find its way into the homes of crowded cities and far-off prairie settlements. The total number of these articles amounts to about three thousand, and above one hundred millions of copies have been distributed. Some of these are collected in small attractive volumes, entitled, "Heart Life," "Wayside Springs," "God's Light on Dark Clouds," "Pointed Papers," "Thought Hives," "Newly Enlisted," "The Empty Crib," and a great number of temperance tracts. These are reprinted and widely circulated in Great Britain as well as America; and are translated into several Continental languages. A handsome volume has appeared in Dutch, and four volumes in Swedish.

Dr. Cuyler's style is peculiarly his own. It is racy, direct, clear, sparkling, condensed. One is never wearied by repetition or enlargement. Before one has time to criticise, a new thought is expressed. Old truths are presented in new lights. Too much of our religious literature is dreary, soporific, and sometimes repulsive. Dr. Cuyler makes the most solemn themes attractive by his pungent phraseology and the remarkable freshness of his metaphors and illustrations. His loving heart endears him to his flock, and to all who know him; and this love, fed by the love of Christ, which flows out in his daily life, breathes in all his writings, and gives them their chief charm.

Dr. Cuyler has ever been a lover of the old country, and his influence has always been exerted to cement the bonds of international brotherhood. He has often visited us, and is now with us again as the guest of his intimate friend, Rev. Newman Hall; for whom he preached on the last two Sundays. He will again preach at Christ Church, Westminster-road, next Sunday morning, July 7; and in the evening, for the National Temperance League, at Rev. J. McNeill's church, Regent-square.

Mildmay and other Conferences.

ANOTHER Mildmay Conference has come and gone with its hallowed associations; and the eager crowds that thronged the noble hall and adjacent grounds have melted away, each going to some corner of the Master's vineyard to work with quickened zeal until He shall come. The blessing does not stay with those who were able to be present, but percolates into many a sick-chamber and mission-hall and service, as the notebooks are produced, and the words of blessing and cheer are passed on? Who shall estimate the blessing of the world-wide circulation of the utterances through the public Press?

A generation has passed away since Mr. Pennefather issued an invitation for the first Conference at Barnet; and it is now twenty years since the removal to London. During this interval as many smaller Conferences have arisen as there are weeks in the year, and Keswick annually draws increasing numbers to her Convention, and yet the mother of the whole movement seems as vigorous and popular as ever. Certainly there were no signs last week of any falling off in numbers or interest.

Sir Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B., continues, in accordance with Mr. Pennefather's request before he died, to preside at the morning and evening meetings; and the Conference owes very much to his wise, gracious, and graceful conduct of it.

Many things conduced to the success of these gatherings. The weather was superb; day after day of unclouded blue sky, and calm exquisite nights, so that there was ample opportunity for enjoying the lovely grounds, some enlargement of which has been made on the north side by the throwing down of a wall, and the enclosure of a pretty grass plat, on which a marquee was erected. There was the usual crowd of familiar faces, clergymen and ministers of all branches of the Church, evangelists, philanthropists, prominent evangelical teachers and workers, writers, and donors, from all parts of the United Kingdom and the world.

The scene to be witnessed between the sessions was very animated and interesting—one vast réunion of friends, meeting after months or years of separation, and eagerly inquiring after each other's welfare. This social element is one of the charms of Mildmay, and it must be a source of inspiration to many isolated workers to realise that they are members of a vast Christian brotherhood, whose words and sympathy linger as a refreshing cordial and precious memory for many a coming day of depression and weariness.

There was a decided increase in the attendances in the Large Hall for the afternoon meetings. The audience which listened to Mr. Wilkinson's recital of God's work among the Jews; and that presided over by Mr. Hudson Taylor, and addressed by Mr. Macfarlane concerning New Guinea, and Dr. H. Grattan Guinness relating to the Congo, were full of interest, and filled the area of the building. This is a good sign. The benefit of these conferences to the Church, when they directly conduce to the stirring up of the missionary spirit, cannot be overestimated. The reality of the spirit of consecration was practically tested and approved by the voluntary raising of a fund to meet a deficiency of £1500 which had arisen in the Mildmay treasury.

One of the most noticeable features was the presence of Mr. Spurgeon on Thursday morning. This is the first of these Conferences which has been honoured by his presence. He seemed thoroughly at ease, and spoke for fifty-five minutes to the crowded audience with inimitable simplicity and beauty. It is remarkable how thoroughly he is appreciated by evangelical Christians of every name. And the suppressed enthusiasm of his reception demonstrated that the old truths are still tenaciously held by those represented at the Mildmay Conference.

The subjects were well selected. Many of the addresses were above the average. But it has been objected by some that there was no climax, no definite dealing with souls, with the view of bringing them to take a definite step forward in Christian experience. The after-meetings also, held on the two last years, were discontinued, so that there was no special opportunity for the impressions made to crystallise into permanent form. We are not prepared to endorse this view. The Mildmay Conference was not begun on the same lines as the Keswick Convention, and we do not know that it is desirable that it should become a second-hand imitation of it.

Some have also questioned the wisdom of tying the speakers to a set of subjects, and would like to see the effect, for one year at least, of announcing generally that there would be a series of addresses on the Christian life, leaving the selected speakers to determine their subjects for themselves. We certainly think there is either too much or too little arrangement in this respect. Mr. Moody's plan at Northfield is to ask the speakers whom he invites to give the best they have; and this on the whole works well. If, on the other hand, as at Mildmay, subjects are selected, we venture to think it would be possible so to arrange the speakers that the second should be the complement of the first. Indeed, the Methodist method is a wise one—that the first should preach and the second exhort—the first teach and the second apply the teaching.

But better still, we think that the purpose of these meetings should be to lead to definite consecration of heart, and to definite work as Christ's witnesses. And, therefore, that the first address at each session should give such instruction as to lead to personal devotedness, and the second follow with practical counsel as to work. For example, the very racy, suggestive, experimental, and interesting talk under the mulberry tree by Rev. J. McNeill, on open-air preaching, would have stirred and edified the great assembly, and have produced far more impression than a second doctrinal address.

These remarks apply to the approaching Convention at Keswick still more than to the Conference just concluded at Mildmay. It has been well that a missionary meeting should conclude the Keswick gatherings; but is it not time that, with the great missionary charter before us, the substantive purpose at all such conferences, conventions, and congresses should be the accomplishment of the Lord's last command: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature"? This, however, would lead to the assembly most of all to be desired, one for confession, humiliation, and prayer, in which the ablest teachers and the men fullest of the Gospel of God would lie the lowest on account of past disobedience to the great commission, and present themselves in the front rank to be thrust forth whithersoever the Lord of the harvest should please to send them.

A SCHOOLMASTER'S WORK.

A GOOD and useful work continues to be carried on in, and connected with, the "New Hall" in the town of Wellington, Salop. A special interest attaches to it, inasmuch as this was one of the first mission-halls erected in this country, if, indeed, not the first, and most blessed results have accrued.

The founder and director of the work is Dr. Cranage, M.A., of the Old Hall School, who, in the midst of many and onerous duties, labours for the salvation of souls, and, during the long period in which he has been thus engaged, many have risen up to call him blessed. It is particularly gratifying to know that amongst those who have found the Lord in the mission-hall not a few have been pupils in the school, who are now, many of them, occupying prominent positions in professional, commercial, and Christian work.

The Sunday evening evangelistic services in the "New Hall" are usually conducted by the Doctor; but many well-known evangelists, such as Messrs. Richard Weaver, Henry Thorne, &c., as well as a large number of old pupils, have from time to time ministered the word therein. There are various well-organised branches of the work, in which the Doctor is efficiently assisted by his vice-principal, Robert Weston, Esq., M.A., his eldest son, and his secretary, Mr. J. E. Paynter.

Dr. Cranage has always made special efforts to gather in the children, and with very encouraging results. But the development of the adult work has necessitated, for the children's services, a separate building, which, it is hoped, will shortly be commenced. Towards this end some three or four hundred pounds are still required. The burden of the current expenses rests largely upon the Doctor himself; but for this new development he is seeking outside help, as the work lies amongst the very poor.

The Question of the Hour:—Foreign Missions.

ON THE HIGHER EDUCATION.

DEAR SIR,—I have just read your article on "Missions and their Friends," in your issue of May 3. Will you permit a few remarks on it?

There evidently is in England a good deal of misconception as to what is called "Higher Mission Education," and the letter of Mr. W. S. Caine, and the articles in The Methodist Times, have helped to increase it, "darkening counsel by words without knowledge." I have personally never engaged in education work, and therefore write as an unprejudiced outsider.

(1) Only a small proportion of mission strength is devoted to the Higher Education. People talk as if Dr. Duff had revolutionised, in a retrograde direction, mission work, whereas all he did was to add a new agency to the previously existing ones. The Principal of one of the mission colleges told me the other day he did not think more than one-tenth of the Indian mission staff are engaged in education. That is, for every educational missionary, there are nine who still work on the old lines. And out of the fifty or sixty educational missionaries at least half belong either to the Established or the Free Church of Scotland. Other churches do not devote more than a twentieth of their strength to higher education, if so much.

(2) It is a mistake to suppose that the educational missionary is what has been called "a mere schoolmaster." He spends a short time daily in direct Christian teaching; but, besides this, in teaching Milton, Cowper, Wordsworth, History, Philosophy, he does all in a Christian spirit and from a Christian standpoint. A missionary may even teach mathematics "as unto the Lord," bearing with his pupils' dullness, and winning their confidence, so as to make them the more ready to receive Christian teaching from him. A true missionary will make his influence continually felt by his students, whatever he is teaching; he will make them feel that he is their friend, and will watch for every opportunity, in class or in private, to point them to Christ.

(3) The number of actual baptized converts from the colleges has not been large, but it has been larger than many think. Especially was this the case when Dr. Duff's plan could be thoroughly carried out, because the whole course of study could be regulated by him. The introduction of the University system has materially altered the case, but still there are conversions from time to time. And converts must be weighed as well as counted. One wintry afternoon a lad was converted in a small chapel; only one soul saved, but that lad was C. H. Spurgeon, and that one conversion meant the conversion of thousands. So in regard to the college converts, their number is not large, but their influence is great. One of them, Narayan Sheshadri, has been the means of bringing a thousand heathens into the Christian community. Others have become missionaries, teachers, magistrates, merchants, and many of them have nobly served Christ in the positions in which He has placed them, and have exerted a wide influence on those around.

(4) The indirect influence for good which the college work produces is also very great. It is said that mission college students are the bitterest opponents of street preaching. No doubt they sometimes are, because the truth, when not received into the heart, often makes the man more bitter than he was before; the Gospel is often "a savour of death unto death." In South India there has recently been a marked increase of opposition; one of the ringleaders in the late Madras Christian College revolt, who has been since then converted, explains it thus: "There is a growing conviction that Christianity is true, and the natural mind rebels against it, hence the growing bitterness of the opposition; it is just what I felt a year ago." So, many Mission College students become embittered against the truth; but many others become more or less believers in it, and exert their influence in its favour. The latter class are much more numerous than the former.

(5) If the missionary societies give up their educational work, there is no Christian agency to take its place, and the result would be that while India is now awakening from its sleep of ages, and the question is whether it will become Christian or infidel, the whole higher education of the country would be non-Christian or distinctively anti-Christian. Could the result be anything but disastrous? I believe the whole Church of Christ owes a debt of gratitude to the Presbyterian Churches of Scotland for the grand Christian educational work which they have for so long carried on.

As for the second article in The Methodist Times on "the evils of a false position," it is utterly misleading. It says: "Every missionary landing in India finds himself at once received into 'Society.' In Calcutta he is presented at Court, and makes his bow to the Viceroy....He must dress in a certain style, cannot go about in the towns in any less fashionable vehicle than a phaeton," and so forth. I have been a missionary in Calcutta for thirteen years, and I say that these statements are absolutely false. A few missionaries have been presented at Court, but the great bulk of them never. Whether I could be presented at Court if I liked I have not cared to inquire, because from the missionary point of view the thing is so utterly unimportant. We dress as we like, go in what carriages we like, ride in the trams with the natives, or walk, just as we please. So far from being "compelled to live in a certain style," we are free to do whatever we deem best. In a country station, where there may be six European officials, a missionary is so far in "Society" that he, or his wife, makes a formal call round once or twice a year, and is occasionally invited to dinner, with no obligation to return the invitation. To act otherwise would be discourteous; and the missionary often finds the friendship of the officials useful, especially for the relief of the native Christians from injustice. But let the missionary and the magistrate be both transferred to Calcutta, and, though the latter will be friendly if he meets the missionary, he will never think of inviting him to a "Society" dinner, simply because in Calcutta, I am happy to say, the missionary, as a rule, is not in "Society."

AN INTERESTING RETROSPECT.

In common with many others, I have been deeply interested in the valuable papers on "Foreign Missions: The Question of the Hour." The reference made by Mr. Eugene Stock to the prayers and labours of pioneer workers, and especially to the early female missionaries, induces me to bring before you a few almost forgotten names. Our Lord Himself says, "Herein is that saying true, One soweth, and another reapeth. Other men laboured, and ye are entered into their labours." Is not this especially true of China, that vast country once so hermetically sealed? Every Christian heart must rejoice at the blessing which now rests upon all, whether societies or individuals, who are telling the Gospel story in China.

Will your readers go back in thought to the year 1834, when a few ladies of all sections of Christ's Church met in the house of the late Countess of Gainsborough, formally to inaugurate a woman's society for sending women to their heathen sisters in China and the East? One of that number, the late Miss Aldersey, a lady of position and means, had for years been studying Chinese under her friend, Dr. Morison, in the prayerful hope that the way might be opened for her to devote her life to the work. Delays and difficulties arose; but in 1837, in company with Dr. and Mrs. Medhurst, she sailed. Being unable to enter China, they made for the island of Java, where Chinese emigrants were numerous. Arriving there, an order was issued forbidding either English or Dutch missionaries to land. In a letter now lying before me, Miss Aldersey wrote thus:—

"I am experiencing at this moment that my weakness is my strength, it being thought that a solitary lady could not be capable of either much good or harm. I spent the first six months in the house of a Dutch watchmaker who had married a native. My object in choosing this humble accommodation being the speedy acquisition of the Malay language; afterwards I ventured to take a house in the midst of the Chinese and Javanese population. A Chinaman, who belonged to the Dutch Church, to whom I gave a small salary, was very helpful in inducing his acquaintances to send their daughters for instruction. He accompanied me to the surrounding villages to distribute tracts, and encouraged me to believe that he would assist me in every way, his house being separated from my garden by only a bamboo fence. Alas! he proved to be a complete deceiver. By this man Sion I was robbed, and from what I heard I commenced the night on one occasion not expecting to see the light of the next morning. Some gentlemen felt it their duty to inform me that if not on my guard in accepting presents of eatables, they would succeed in poisoning me.

"In my morning walks I often called on the sick, and thus dispensed a quantity of medicine. The success God was pleased to favour me with led the Javanese Regent, earnestly to request my attendance when suffering from a distressing attack of asthma. He was greatly and permanently relieved, and ever after was ready to render me aid, though not favourable to the truth. His occasional visits also tended to protect me, as the Javanese were utterly afraid of him. I had only fifteen boarders, and about the same number of day scholars, many of whom were much interested in the subject of religion. On Sion's bad conduct being detected, he set himself to break up my little school; so, after five years' residence in Java, I was urged by circumstances to move northward, and on the day of my arrival at Hong Kong peace was proclaimed. This was indeed an answer to my prayer for guidance."

After eight months' detention at Hong Kong, and twelve months in Chusan, Miss Aldersey settled in Ningpo. Here she laboured for many years under very great difficulties. At first, the worst motives were ascribed to her. At one time it was stated that she purposed to pick out the eyes of her pupils; at another that she was about to ship them off, and sell them as slaves; but when it was asserted that she had murdered all the children in the school, and the parents coming, and finding them well and happy and unwilling to leave, a change gradually took place. Her family increased to seventy, many of whom became decided Christians and fellow-helpers in her work. Her two earliest Javanese converts, Ati and Kit, wrote thus to the Committee in England, on hearing that two other girls had become Christians: "We are so interested in C. and H. We knew both before they were converted, and, when we heard that they had become disciples of Jesus, it was as news from heaven, for we are so lonely because there was not one of our sex who are Christians besides us two. As we too were heathen, we can sympathise with them."

FOREIGN GOVERNESSES.—Dear Sir,—May I once more ask you kindly to inform your readers that we are ready to receive applications from families requiring foreign governesses for the holidays.—Yours truly, C. F. Ryffel, Directrice.

HOP-PICKERS' MISSION.—The season will soon be here when thousands from all parts of the country will visit this district. Six large marquees were erected last year, and well filled by some of the lowest class. We are willing to do the work again, and are wishful to erect the same number of tents, if not more, this year. Will friends think of us early? S. Chinn.

Alton, Hants.

CHESTERFIELD.—The anniversary services of the Ragged School and Mission here were recently held. Mr. J. R. Mackenzie, secretary of the Monthly Tract Society, conducted three services on the Sabbath, and his pointed addresses were much appreciated. At the public meeting a good report was given of the work of the past year. There has been a larger attendance at the Ragged Schools, and fruit of the work has appeared.

OXFORD.—An important meeting was recently held in the Mansfield Rooms, Oxford, when a large number of representative Free Churchmen of all denominations were present. Dr. Fairbairn said it was proposed to create at Mansfield a Free Church pulpit, whereby it might be possible for representative spiritual teachers of many churches to deliver their message. It was also proposed that a communion service should be held once or twice each term. Several well-known graduates and undergraduates spoke, highly approving of the various proposals.

NEWFOUNDLAND'S FISHERMEN.—There is no people more deserving of a place in the hearts of God's children. I spent twenty years there as a missionary, and so can speak from experience. They deserve our sympathy because they are of our own flesh and blood, and because they are poor and needy. They are most liberal with the little they possess. They are always ready to make personal sacrifice rather than lose an opportunity of hearing the message of life, and joining in united prayer. During the fishing season every man is out, catching fish as fast as he can pull them in. Hoist the flag in token that Divine service is going on. Every boat will come in, the men will change their clothes, attend the service heartily, and thank you warmly. I have a large number of Bibles and books to distribute. A whole-hearted Christian brother is willing to go out and settle there, and I purpose going out with him. I ask the prayers of Christians that God will remove all difficulties now in the way, if it be his will that we should go.

HOLY WRIT CONFIRMED.

At the annual meeting of the Victoria (Philosophical) Institute, held on Monday last, at the Society of Arts House, under the presidency of Sir George Stokes, P.R.S., Rev. Dr. Wright read a valuable paper by Professor Sayce, describing the important cuneiform inscriptions which were discovered the winter before last at Tel el-Amarna, Upper Egypt.

The tale of these tablets is a truly wonderful one, showing that in the fifteenth century before our era—a century before the Exodus—active literary intercourse was going on throughout the civilised world of Western Asia, between Babylonia and Egypt, and the smaller states of Palestine, Syria, Mesopotamia, and even of Eastern Cappadocia. This intercourse was carried on by means of the Babylonian language, and the complicated Babylonian script. In fact, Babylonian was as much the language of diplomacy and cultivated society throughout those regions, as French has been in modern times. This influence explains, among other things, the existence of Babylonian names in Palestine while "the Canaanite was still in the land." The newly-found tablets confirm the conclusions already arrived at by Egyptologists, that Palestine was Canaanite at the close of the eighteenth dynasty, the founder of the nineteenth dynasty being "the new king who knew not Joseph." The towns of the country were, moreover, garrisoned by Egyptian troops, and, though its governors bore Semitic names, they were officials of the Egyptian king.

One of the most interesting passages in the paper dealt with the question of the antiquity of writing. It has long been tacitly assumed by the critical school that writing was not only a rare art in Palestine before the age of David, but was practically unknown. Little historical credence can be placed, it has been urged, in the earlier records of the Hebrew people, because they could not have been committed to writing until a period when the history of the past had become traditional and mythical. This assumption is now triumphantly shown to be opposed to facts. Long before the Exodus Canaan had its libraries and scribes, its schools and literary men. The annals of the country, it is true, were not inscribed in the letters of the Phœnician alphabet on perishable papyrus; the writing material was the imperishable clay—the characters those of the cuneiform syllabary. A new light is thus thrown on royal lists like that contained in Genesis xxxvi. Why should not this be an extract from the chronicles of Edom, originally written in the cuneiform syllabary of Babylonia? In what is asserted by the critical school to be the oldest relic of Hebrew literature—the song of Deborah—reference is made to the scribes of Zebulon "that handle the pen of the writer" (Judges v. 14), and we have now no longer any reason to interpret the words in a non-natural sense, and transform the scribe into a military commander.

Professor Sayce's paper concluded with some words on the rich reward which still awaits the explorer's toil beneath the soil of the Holy Land. Workmen and funds are found for exhuming the buried history of Greece, but little or nothing is done to secure the treasures that lie beneath the surface of the sacred land of our faith. The tablets of Tel el-Amarna are, Professor Sayce holds, an earnest of what is yet to be unearthed in the Holy Land.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL MUSIC.—Sir,—May I beg space to say that I am collecting information about Sunday-school music, with a view to writing upon the subject? I shall be much obliged to any superintendents or leaders who will send me programmes of anniversary services, or of any new departures in Sunday-school music. Letters containing statements of defects and suggestions for improvement will also be welcome.—Yours very truly, J. Spencer Curwen.

More Leaves from my Notebook.

BY REV. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.

Author of "From Death into Life. An Autobiography."

XV.—"I'M ON FIRE."

I WAS invited upon one occasion to conduct a mission in a fashionable watering-place. As the invitation came altogether unsolicited by me, I had but one answer; this was in the affirmative—there was no reason why it should be otherwise. I confess a kind of dread and misgiving haunted me, for report said that the Vicar who had invited me was not much in sympathy with my kind of work; and that the people of the place were exceedingly proper and respectable. I prayed much that I might be guided into wise proprieties, so as not to give unnecessary offence, but otherwise do all I could to win the people.

On my arrival at the place, my worst fears were realised. I found the Vicar cool and unsympathetic, the congregation exceedingly well satisfied with their propriety, and the atmosphere of the church as dead and cold as a garden in winter.

My first appeal on Sunday morning fell very flat on me, if it did not on my hearers. It seemed as if I could not get the edge of the sword to bear at any point; not that I intended by any means to flash the glittering sword in the eyes of the people, and hit very hard with the flat side of it, for fear of hurting anyone. Far from that, I wanted very much to do deadly hurt; but it was like a nightmare—the sword would not cut.

In the afternoon I was not much happier; but in the evening I thought the atmosphere, spiritually, was warmer. The after-meeting, however, in the schoolroom, was a failure.

Nevertheless, I determined to go on. I had had as discouraging beginnings as this before, and things had changed.

The Vicar said to me the next morning, "Did you see a great tall woman in the congregation yesterday?"

"Yes," I said, "I think I know the one you mean. I noticed her standing up without a book, but she appeared very attentive."

He said, "She is a Roman Catholic—a most ignorant woman; I do not think she can read a word. I cannot imagine what brought her to church; I am sure she has never been there before. I have known her in the parish for a long time as a notorious character. She drinks and swears like a man, and has been seen to knock down with her fist a man who disputed with her. She is to be heard about the streets all day long, shouting fish or vegetables."

At the afternoon instruction, the woman in question presented herself again, and sat looking the picture of attention. Whether she understood anything that was said, I do not know; but there she sat. In the evening she was at church again, and came also to the after-meeting in the schoolroom. At the conclusion of the opening hymn I asked the Vicar to pray; and while he was engaged in a quiet and silvery utterance—(it was anything but exciting)—the Roman Catholic woman suddenly rose to her feet, and, uttering a loud piercing shriek, cried out, "I'm on fire! I'm on fire!" Then, shaking her clothes violently, she shrieked louder and louder.

The Vicar was dumb with amazement, and the respectables thoroughly scared. I rose up from my knees, and walked quietly towards the woman. As I went I gave out the words of a hymn, "How sweet the name of Jesus sounds," and commenced to sing it to a well-known tune. This was taken up and carried on by some few of the congregation.

The poor affrighted woman, after stamping with her feet, and shaking her clothes again and again, as if she really was in flames, made a leap all at once, and bounded over the feet of others who were kneeling between her and the aisle. Here she continued shaking her clothes as if to extinguish flames.

"Come here with me," I said to her; "come to the end of the room; we will see about putting out the fire."

"Oh!" she cried, with a louder shriek than ever, "I'm sinking into hell! Oh, save me, save me!"

"Come here," I continued, "and we will see about that too."

The singing of the hymn was still going on at the other end of the room, by those who were not quite terrified. Poor people, they could not make their escape, for the "dreadful" woman and I were in possession of the only way of exit from the building.

At length I persuaded her to kneel down, and I knelt by her side, and prayed softly, until she became calm. Then I put before her the way of salvation.

"Oh, but it's a sinner I am; yes, I am—that I am."

I said, "I am glad you feel your sins; Christ came to save sinners such as you. He can save you direct. You ask Him for yourself. Say, 'God be merciful to me, a sinner.' He wants no priests to help him in this work; He can save without them; only believe on Him."

The poor creature was still trembling and panting with the terrible fright she had been in, and was willing to do or say anything. I urged her again to repeat the prayer, "God be merciful to me, a sinner." I said, "The Lord Jesus has taught us sinners to make that prayer, and He has in his love told us the answer to it before we begin. You shall go home justified—saved, you know. He loves you—He died to save you."

The same Divine Spirit who had convicted her in this remarkable manner, was present to guide and teach her. She found peace and pardon, and in a short time (I cannot tell how long) she returned quietly to a seat in the prayer-meeting.

I was led to say a few words about the work of the Spirit; how the wind bloweth where it listeth. We cannot tell whence it cometh, or whither it goeth. So is everyone that is born of God the Spirit. I added, "The Lord has brought our sister in a remarkable way to pardon and peace. Shall we sing again and praise God?"

"Yes," said the Vicar; "here is a hymn I have found:—

"O God, our help in ages past,
Our hope for years to come;
Our shelter in the stormy blast,
And our eternal home."

"Yes," I replied, "let us sing that—it is more of a prayer than praise. However, begin."

After singing this hymn, I prayed, and then dismissed the meeting. I must say I felt as if I had dismissed the mission, too.

The people went out quietly one by one; but, as I had beckoned to the Irish woman to stay behind, she did so, and I had a long talk with her.

She told me that she had had a dream, in which she was told to go to church. She went as she had promised to do; but she could not tell why she came again and again.

I found her very ignorant; but, as she said, one thing she knew, that once she was lost, but now she was saved, and that made her happy.

The Vicar was very suspicious, and doubted very much about this woman's change. He dwelt continually upon what she had been in the past. I could not help saying to him, "You are like those people who call poor fallen women Magdalenes—the true Magdalene is the person who is saved, and out of whom the devils have been cast."

However, I could not help thinking, "It is all up with the mission"; and, although I greatly rejoiced over the poor woman in question, still I went to bed feeling much depressed.

Somewhat to my surprise, the next morning the meeting was well attended. In the afternoon still more were present; and in the evening, though a week-day, the church was full. My worst fears were dispelled. The atmosphere was changed from winter to spring, and, like springtime, new life was visible all around. Living souls were revived, and dead ones were beginning to move.

We had a good after-meeting, and several persons, without shrieking, found peace with God. By the time we reached the second Sunday the church would not hold the people who desired to come. Many had to go away, being unable to get in.

My Irish friend grew in intelligence marvellously, and actually was seen in the after-meeting talking to anxious persons of her own acquaintance. There was no mistake about the change wrought in her, and if she had gone back after the mission was over, I feel sure that I should have heard of it with vengeance. That lioness had become a ewe lamb; though, as she said, "I'll never forget that awful fire I was in. Oh, it was just awful—that it was!"

A RESCUE HOME IN BRIXTON.

DEAR SIR,—A good work is being carried on at 143, Brixton-hill, S.W. About two years ago the very sad case of a young girl, who was entrapped into a life of sin, came to the knowledge of some Christian ladies. They were determined to rescue her, and in doing so their eyes were opened to the terrible fate of many others in like pitiable condition. A small house was taken, and a number of girls gathered in. The plan of family life was adopted. The training of the girls in household duties is carried on under the superintendence of ladies. A small laundry has been commenced, and is a healthy employment as well as a means of income. Many of the girls have proved that they mean to lead henceforth a womanly, useful life; some have been placed in service, and are giving satisfaction to their mistresses.

The work has grown quickly, and it is imperative that an advance be made, else all concerned will suffer. Every new girl, fresh from evil surroundings, brings an influence with her most unhappy in its effect upon those who have been under training, often undoing the good which has taken weeks of patient toil to accomplish. We wish to separate these two classes; and to this end another small house must be taken. The next house to our present Home has become vacant, and we would gladly take it, if funds were forthcoming; £150 are needed at once, or the chance of the house will be lost. I shall be pleased to give further information if required. Our treasurer is Mrs. McArthur, 79, Holland-park, W. The work is unsectarian, and cases are received from any part of the country.—Yours truly, (MRS.) EMMA BASS.

WHAT AN UNMITIGATED NUISANCE racing and betting and loose living connected with them are getting! The newspapers, to meet daily demands, not only contain racing intelligence to satiety, but the miserable quarrels of horse breeders and horse riders and betters on horse-racing must occupy our law courts, and obtrude themselves on public attention. John Bull will have to put his foot on the neck of this growing evil, or this growing evil will put its foot on the neck of John Bull. The nation, just now, on account of the increase of the betting spirit, is becoming demoralised, and demoralised nations must, and ought to, fall.—The Echo.

HOLIDAYS IN THE COUNTRY are beyond the reach of many who would greatly enjoy them. There are persons who, through family responsibilities, or owing to other causes, are very poor, although passing in genteel society. Feeling for this class, which numbers many clergymen, Mrs. Herbert, Pembroke House, Bedford, on leaving for the seaside last year, kindly lent her house to a needy family, whose expenses from London were defrayed by some of Mrs. Herbert's friends, who were also about to leave for the seaside. This was a case of welcome help being rendered to persons who were quite out of the scale of those who are eligible to receive assistance from charitable institutions. Thinking that many of our readers will be glad to benefit others in this way, Mrs. Herbert informs us that she will gladly advise inquirers as to the best way to go to work.

ON HERMON'S HEIGHTS.

A visit to Mr. Moody's Schools for Boys, Mount Hermon, be it ever so often, never fails to reveal to us its real moral grandeur. The students seem to breathe in the spirit of study and religion. Science here is woven into the very fibre of a manly Christian life. As we looked to-day into the faces of the twelve who received their diplomas, as we saw the earnest purpose stamped upon their features, our thoughts went back 1800 years, to the day when earth's grandest Teacher called to Him twelve disciples, and sent them into the fields white for the harvest. May there be no Judas in this band of sincere workers! They go out, bearing the motto, "Ereuna" (search). As true students, they feel that now they are only at the threshold of study, and go forth with a brave ambition to better work. Among the number to receive the honours of the day is A. McGaffin, of Ireland; Joshua Everett and S. B. Fleet, of England; and A. S. Hawkes, of Utah.

The exercises of the day were of special interest. The boys had daintily trimmed the hall with mountain laurel blossom, maidenhair fern, and the pure water lily, emblematic of strength, delicacy, purity. The singing, under the leadership of Professor Phillips, was only such as Mount Hermon can give. He is drilling the students on both sides the river with great success. Among the guests were Rev. Mr. Driver, of Oregon, a new man in this region, but one of marvellous Biblical knowledge; Rev. Dr. Pierson, whose tour in England last year was so much of a success; Mr. Sankey, benign and gracious as ever; and others who came here from different parts of the States. Professor Henry E. Sawyer, the president of the institution, with his grand corps of assistants, were evidently well pleased with the progress of the School, as shown by their radiant faces. The address, "Duty set to Music," by Rev. L. T. Chamberlain, D.D., of Brooklyn, was very apt and inspiring. Duty performed, though it may lead to the lion's den, or into the fiery furnace, brings Divine fellowship, and into contact with the angels. Paul and Silas, with bruised and broken body, could sing praises at midnight. We have rarely heard on such an occasion an address so helpful to those about to face the great problem of life.

The previous night ten of the students of the school contended for the two prizes awarded to the best elocutionists. When the two young men came up to receive the money, there was a deafening round of applause, showing that the award of the judges was approved. But Mr. Moody shouted out "Every aspirant should receive a prize for such honest work," and called for prizes for the other eight. After much merriment at this dissent from the decision of the judges, who, for once were determined that they would have their own way, the matter was compromised. Speedly eighty dollars was raised and given as "a compliment to high scholarship." So the judges' award was sustained, while Mr. Moody had his own way—in part!

The students now scatter for a time, seeking by selling books, or by hiring out to farmers, or by some service, to earn a little in vacation days for future need. They all seem ready for any work which may make them self-reliant and independent. Close upon the graduating exercises, at Mount Hermon, came the tenth anniversary day at the seminary over the river. There are now twenty-five instructors. Miss A. F. Pettee has been acting-principal during the year, in the absence of Miss E. S. Hall, who has returned just in time to note the efficiency of her associates in her absence, and the honest work performed while she was away. A cordial, affectionate, Biblical address was given to the graduating class and the army of friends present, by Rev. Edward Judson, D.D.; his theme was, "The Love of Christ, the Christian's Motive Force."

This was followed by addresses of tender earnestness. Mr. Moody giving the final words. He clinched the thoughts of his predecessors in his own inimitable manner. At home with these "his children" he shows a peculiar pathos and tenderness in his talks. No wonder that everybody loves this earnest, sincere soul. His large heart and tender interest are shown in the invitation given to all the teachers to spend a week at the new and charming hotel, when daily they are to have his presence and the presence of other invited guests. Recreation and religion will go hand in hand in these grand days of rest.

The twelve days (August 1 to 12) of Bible Conference will be of deep interest; several noted speakers and singers will be present from both sides of the sea. S. E. B.

ZENANA MISSIONS.

A thanksgiving meeting, in connection with this Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society, was held on Monday week, at Morley Halls, 316, Regent-street, W. Lord Kinnaird presided, and briefly described the object of the meeting. One of the chief things the Society's friends have especially to thank God for is the number of suitable agents it has been enabled to send out to India—ladies who have devoted their lives to the service of Christ, whose self-denying efforts have been the means of much good result among the women of India. Another cause of thanksgiving is the manifest blessing which has rested on the work of this Society. God has been ordering things in a wonderful way, and has heard and answered prayer. In conclusion, he mentioned that many of the members of the Y.W.C.A., connected with Morley Halls, were much interested in the Society, and had handed in that evening about £6 collected in boxes.

Miss Louise Marston, from Lucknow, spoke of the joy of her life as a missionary in India for six and a half years, and said that it was indeed true that God had opened doors everywhere, and that now we have to pray that He will open hearts. The Lucknow Mission had been open twenty years. In 1869 there were only twenty pupils in zenanas to whom the missionaries could go to tell of Christ; now there are about six hundred. Everywhere there is a readiness to listen to the Word of God. In the villages the women will crowd around to listen, and in the schools and houses there is an evident desire to learn. Miss Marston mentioned one or two touching incidents of women who had really given their hearts to Christ. She had received a letter from one since her arrival in England.

Miss Aitken, from Lahore, told of the causes for thankfulness which she and her fellow-workers had had during the past six and a half years. When she began there were only three schools; now there are twelve. One of these is in a village five miles from Lahore. Another is under the minaret of one of the city mosques. The work in the houses has also been steadily increasing, and the pupils are much more advanced than formerly.

The villages are opening to receive the missionaries. The women are asking why the ladies have not come to them, as their husbands have heard of Christ from the missionaries from Ferozepore. Thus, working hand in hand with missions to men alongside of those to women, we may hope to see whole families coming out on the Lord's side.

Mr. W. T. Paton added a few words, and the meeting was closed with singing and prayer.

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for July 10 (Ps. cxxv. 2): "As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people from henceforth, even for ever."

CHRIST SLEEPING IN THE STORM.

Matt. viii. 24—26.

"Half deafened by the screaming wind,
Half blinded by the rain,"
The struggling crew, like men of might,
Engage the hurricane.
With strength of heart and strength of hand,
Each bends his might and breath
To overcome the tempest's power,
And grapple hard with death.
Did ever night seem darker,
Did e'er such waves before
Surge round the helpless fishermen,
With such relentless roar?
And yet, while all the elements
Of wind and water leap,
The Lord of all the winds and waves
Was peacefully asleep.

He saw the gathering danger,
The darkening of the clouds,
Which closed around the mountain-tops,
And round the vessel's shrouds;
As, with prophetic silence,
The elemental gloom
Gave promise of a tempest, and Perchance a watery tomb.
And He knows all the danger
Which human souls beset;
And He has all the knowledge
How the danger must be met.
'Tis not for us to struggle
With futility of skill,
For He alone can rescue us,
And bid the waves be still.

And when the fierce temptations
Which often wrench the soul
Away from human anchorage
Amidst the waves to roll;
And all the hellish forces
With unity of might Seek to wreck us in the darkness
Of doubt's tempestuous night;
And when our oars are broken,
Our sails and rudder gone,
And all the power of human skill,
Our hopes relied upon;
Oh, then the prayer of helpless men
On Galilean sea,
With fervency and hope ascends,
And wins the victory.

'Tis here we feel the warfare
Of the sea's remorseless strife,
And meet the tribulations
Which precede the better life.
'Tis here the storm-drops patter
Against the window pane;
'Tis here that sorrow overwhelms,
Where sin has left its stain;
And hurricanes go sweeping on,
Urged by the breath of hell;
And souls are caught within their grip,
And swept into the swell.
But we're looking for a country
Where the sea shall be no more,
Where sorrows, tears, vexations,
And partings will be o'er.

Thus, having hope in Jesus,
And his presence in the boat,
The sobbing of the tempest wild
Seems but the muffled note;
And the pealing of the thunder
But the diapason roar
Of the deep-toned organ, firm and strong,
From the hallelujah shore.
As the chorus swells from voice divine
In yon celestial throng,
And the breath of heaven bears to us
The cadence of the song,
That seems to echo back to earth,
From heaven's orchestral hall,
"Bring forth the Royal Diadem,
And crown Him Lord of all."

PROGRESS IN BASUTOLAND.

IN recent letters, dated the middle of April, our venerated and devoted brother, Rev. H. M. Dyke, of Morija, Basutoland, South Africa, sends the following deeply interesting notes :—

The annual Conference of the missionaries in Basutoland, of the Paris Society, has lately closed its session. I was unable to attend the meetings, which were held about thirty miles from here. From the accounts which have reached me, I am rejoiced to learn that the week spent in reading reports, in fraternal intercourse and in arranging plans for more effectually carrying on the work of God, was a time of gracious refreshment and strengthening for the soul.

There was, however, one great reason for regret, in the necessity for some of our band withdrawing from the work, either on account of illness in their families, or from other causes necessitating their return to France. Three will be leaving at once, and it is to be feared one, if not two, will also leave in a few months. We can ill afford to lose their services at this time, when several openings for carrying the Gospel to new centres are presenting themselves. It is true two young men will shortly arrive from France to help to fill up our ranks, but it always requires some months before young missionaries can enter fully upon their work; they must acquire a knowledge of the language before they can take the direction of stations. One of these new comers is a son of the venerable M. Casalis, till lately director of the Mission House in Paris, and the surviving founder of the Mission to Basutoland in 1833; the second is a grandson of M. Casalis, and the son of my nephew, Dr. E. Casalis, who has laboured in this land since 1864 as a medical missionary; his son is also a doctor of medicine, and has been ordained.

At the meeting of Conference there was a most interesting ceremony on last Sabbath day. It was the ordination of Dr. E. Casalis, to whom I refer above; while acting as a medical man for five years past, he has done much in the evangelistic work among the Basutos, but for some time he has been feeling the call of the Holy Spirit to enter more fully upon the work of the ministry, and he, therefore, applied for ordination. With him a young man, a son of M. Germond, one of the oldest missionaries on the field, was also set apart to the work of the ministry. This ceremony attracted a very great number of Basuto chiefs and headmen who do not generally attend the services, and it is calculated that at least 3000 people were present; the services were held in the open air, and a solemn feeling appeared to rest on all.

I commend our Mission to the earnest prayer of the Lord's people. In many respects we are abundantly blessed, and by the means of this Mission a great influence for good is exerted on other tribes of South Africa. With the wonderful discoveries of gold and diamonds, it would almost appear that the white man will soon dispossess the poor natives; therefore, work must be done with redoubled vigour. The Lord grant that zeal and vigour.

Although it has unfortunately been the fashion with many critics to oppose missionary efforts by casting doubt upon the statistics of missionary societies, I will venture to extract a few items from the report of the Conference which is now being sent to Paris to our directors:

Missionaries in active service in Basutoland	19
Young ladies having special direction of certain branches of the work.....	8
Native agents, evangelists, or schoolmasters, the most of whom received grants from Government or from the Mission	192
Annexes or out-stations (supplied with resident evangelists), and mostly having day schools ...	111
Members in actual communion	6543
Persons seeking admission to church, attending classes as catechumens	3332
Scholars on the roll	5317
Average attendance of scholars.....	3500

I know that every little note of what is being done for the advancement of the kingdom of our Lord will be of interest to your readers. Again I would beg a continued interest in your prayers.

ALDERSGATE ST. PRAYER-MEETING

THIS gathering, held daily from 12 to 1 o'clock at the Y.M.C.A., 186 Aldersgate-street, has lately been marked by much interest. Rev. JACOB FRESHMAN one day gave a brief account of his visit to Jerusalem, recalling, as he narrated his journeyings from place to place, many interesting Scriptural associations. For instance, Jaffa (Joppa), where Peter's house is said still to stand; Lydda (Acts ix. 32—39), Valley of Sharon; Ajalon, where the daylight was prolonged; Kirjath Jearim, where the ark abode for twenty years; Mizpah, with the tomb of Samuel; the Mount of Olives, &c., &c.

Mr. Freshman stated that there are twenty thousand Jews in Cairo, with no missionary amongst them, while there are only between one and two thousand in Alexandria, with one or two working amongst them. There are three times as many Jews in Jerusalem as there were ten years ago; 8,000 then, more than 30,000 now out of a total population of 45,000. In other cities of Palestine, 50,000—making 80,000 Jews all told, 30,000 more than in the days of Ezra and Nehemiah. He gave a very interesting account of the work of the London Society's agents amongst adults and children, and closed by stating, as an instance of the blessing attending Jewish Mission work, that there are to-day amongst the clergy of the Church of England one hundred converted Jews.

ON Friday week Mr. ANDERSON, of Ardrossan, (editor of The Reaper) introduced a party of three missionaries proceeding to

NORTH AFRICA,

Miss Reid, Mr. Richmond, and Mr. Muir. Mr. Anderson stated that these friends were going to Mogador to join Mr. E. F. Baldwin, whose letters on Missions recently appeared in our pages. Referring to the testimony therein contained, he said there was room for difference of opinion, but his friends had been led according to the light they had received. They desired to follow in obedience to the Lord and to help on His work. They will have difficulties and need Divine grace; they earnestly crave the prayers of Christian brethren.

Each departing worker gave a few words of testimony stating how they had been led to proceed. Miss REID had felt a great desire to go to China, but the way did not open. When she heard in a meeting that Miss Nairn at Mogador required a missionary companion, the message went to her heart "like a dart." She committed the matter to the Lord, and presently all was made clear. There were three considerations which kept her heart true. The love of Christ constrained her, the need of the souls in Africa, and the conviction that the Lord needed her there "to do the will of Jesus, that is best."

Mr. RICHMOND, of Ayr, realised the call to Africa when reading Stanley's description of the condition of the people on the Congo. Then he offered himself for the work, but was not accepted till eighteen months ago, when again the impression was renewed in a very special manner. It was not, however, until fourteen days back that the last cord binding him to Scotland was snapped. Mr. MUIR stated that before his conversion he had warm thoughts about Missions. Three years after that event, he resolved that he must go if God opened the way. He too had offered for China, and had learned valuable lessons in waiting.

At the same meeting a most affecting letter was read by Mr. Stoughton containing from Rev. E. Vanorden, so well known in this land, earnestly pleading for prayer. The scourge of yellow fever had broken out in their midst. The plague was so malignant that hundreds had already perished around them, men dying while talking to one another in the street. The letter was full of faith and pathos.

Mr. LAMB, of the Kabyle Mission, who had just arrived from North Africa after six years' labour, spoke of the real and urgent needs of that region. He dwelt upon the exceeding preciousness of God's presence as realised by the isolated labourer abroad. He added some burning words concerning the prevailing lethargy of the Church at home in the matter of interest and of gifts for the furtherance of the work. As the result of six years of labour he could as yet point to no manifest fruit. He had been pioneering and clearing, and sowing, and hoped yet to reap; but if not privileged to do so, he was relying on the faithful promise that he who sowed and he who reaped would one day rejoice together.

WORK IN JAPANESE PRISONS.

Two interesting letters have just been received from Christians in Japan by Mr. William Tallack, secretary of the Howard Association, London, in reference to successful efforts for the general and moral improvement of prisoners in that country. Mr. Taneaki Hara, of Kushiro, Kangsku, Hokkaido, writes:—"I am teaching the prisoners in this prison. The light of Christ's truth now shines upon these poor people, and many from among them have been led to repentance. Prison reform is of the greatest importance in this country. Hence I translated your last letter and sent it to some of the higher officials, and also published it widely in the papers. Constrained by the love of Christ, I have consecrated my life to this great work of reformation."

Miss M. J. Barrows, of Kobe, Japan, writes respecting Mr. Hara, that "he is doing a noble work and has sacrificed much for it. He took his family from a pleasant home and circle of Christian friends in Kobe to his present isolated situation, that he might be the better able to carry out his plans and prove to all that the Gospel of Christ is able to change the hearts of even the most hardened, and that it must be the basis of prison reform. I am glad to tell you that his is not the only work that has been done in Japan in that line. In the city of Matsuyama, in the island of Shikaku, the Christians have free access to the prison, and a great work has been going on there during the past year. Many Bibles are bought by the prisoners and others are given to them."

ANGLO-INDIAN EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.—The directors have offered the Indian secretaryship of the Society to Rev. J. Forgan, late of Bombay, now of Simla, as Rev. Isaac F. Row desires to give himself entirely to evangelistic work. We understand that Rev. J. Fordyce, general secretary, has left Sutherland-place for "Simla," 124, Kensington Park-road, Notting Hill, London, W. Address for telegrams, "Fordyce, London."

HOLIDAY HOME AT FOLKESTONE.—A party of friends from London interested in ragged-school work, visited Folkestone on Friday for the purpose of opening a new Holiday Home for poor children in the Dover-road. At a prayer-meeting held in the Home the Hon. Lionel Ashley read a portion of Scripture and gave a brief address. Mr. Ashley also presided at a meeting in the Town Hall at seven o'clock. In the course of a very effective address, he showed that the work commended itself, and appealed to the head as well as the heart of the statesman and the philanthropist. The Ragged School Union had now 200 schools and 4000 teachers in London, and no nobler body of men and women existed. The merits of the Holiday Home system were also pointed out, and those present were asked to support the work both by gifts of money and sympathy. Mr. John Kirk, secretary of the Union, read a statement showing that the new Home had accommodation for seventy beds. Addresses were given by several local ministers and others.

THE TUFT OF CLOVER.

BY EVA TRAVERS EVERED POOLE.

"OH, dear! I'm afraid I am not a flower at all! I believe I am only a common weed!" sighed a pretty tuft of white clover, stretching itself upwards to peep through the paling near which it grew, and gazing enviously at the garden flowers that filled the beds and borders within. How trim and neat the walks looked, how smooth and velvety the soft, green lawn, and how well kept and cared for seemed every flower! Just outside the palings grew grass and weeds, tall thistles and dandelions, pretty little pink and white convolvuli, and wild geraniums in profusion.

"You silly, little thing!" growled out a short, sturdy dandelion, whose broad yellow face looked contemptuously down upon the clover bloom. "You're every bit as good as those stuck-up flowers who have surrounded themselves with a paling out of sheer pride and exclusiveness. If I had my way, I would level the whole and teach them they were no better than their neighbours, except in their own opinions."

The dandelion was noted in that neighbourhood for his democratic opinions, and was fond of airing them before anyone he could find willing to listen. Finding the modest clover bloom was too humble-minded to argue with him, he grew more eloquent still, and rated the flower-aristocracy in no measured terms and in a very loud fashion. But Clover Bloom could not pay as much attention to him as she would have wished, for a friendly bee chose that time for paying her a visit; and, knowing his fondness for honey, she hastened to empty her pretty pink-tipped horns before him, and was pleased to see him enjoy his feast. He rose, lazily, to leave, after a hearty supper, and, humming a contented farewell, went on his homeward way.

Clover Bloom had just begged the dandelion's pardon for the interruption, and composed herself once more to listen, when a sound of children's voices arrested their attention, and, stretching herself upwards once more, Clover Bloom looked through the palings.

Four bright, happy-faced children had come out of the house into the garden, and were clustering round their mother, chatting and laughing.

"See, mother," cried Stella, the eldest, "there are plenty of flowers to-day. We shall be able to take a nice lot to the hospital. May we take it in turns to pick?"

"If you like," smiled back the sweet-faced mother, "only pick carefully, and with some thought, my children. Remember flowers are God's messengers, and pray as you pick."

Was that true? thought little Clover Bloom. Oh! if she had only been a flower, and not a weed as she began to fear—then, perhaps, she might have been picked, and prayed over, and used by the great God.

But there was no such happy future for her, she whispered to herself with a sigh.

She watched while the bright-faced children passed from bed to bed, filling their baskets with roses, white and red, sweet mignonette, and purple heliotrope, delicate lobelia, and great velvety pansies with hearts of gold. Sprays of star-like jasmine and sweet-scented clematis were freely cut, and graceful fern-fronds of softest green cunningly mingled themselves with the more brilliant-hued flowers, and toned them into harmonious beauty.

"Why, baby, you've picked nothing!" exclaimed Stella, turning to the smallest of the party, a little sunny-haired, blue-eyed darling, whose pink and white loveliness made her look like a flower herself. The little maiden shook her golden curls, and answered—

"I'se coming wis' my p'itty f'owers."

Then Clover Bloom watched her make for the garden gate; saw the dimpled fingers undo the latch, and the tripping feet pass through—closer, closer came the little, neat, black shoes and spotless socks, and then—

Oh! What was that? Why the light grasp of a baby hand around her stalks, a sudden upheaval and uprooting that was agony to her tender heart, and then she found herself held triumphantly aloft, while a childish voice rang out—

"I'se coming! I'se coming! I'se got the p'ittiest f'owers of all."

What a chorus of laughter greeted little Muriel as she came up the garden walk again with her tuft of clover bloom tightly clasped. The little one pouted, and her big eyes filled with the ever ready tears as sisters and brothers made fun of her choice; but mother—gentle mother! always the peacemaker—came to the rescue, and hushed the elder ones, pointing out the delicate perfume and beautiful blossoms of the little clover plant, and telling Muriel her flower should certainly go with all the others in their baskets and find its way to the hospital.

"Would my little pet like to come and give her flower herself?" asked mother, tenderly, kissing the pure, white brow.

"Isn't it too far for her, mother?" echoed Sybil, the wise head of the party. "She will be so tired of the long drive."

But Muriel stoutly denied the possibility of being tired by any amount of driving, and, mother being inclined to take her, the matter was decided in her favour.

Clover Bloom presently found herself lightly laid on the top of a large basket, full of garden flowers. They were not very well pleased at her position, and moved uneasily under her plebeian weight, although their good breeding forbade them to make personal remarks.

The shaking of the carriage, combined with the movement of the flowers, very soon shook Clover Bloom right out of the basket, and she fell into a dark corner, where she gave herself up for lost.

"I shall die now," she said, "and I shall not be God's messenger after all."

But for little Muriel, this sad foreboding might have been fulfilled. As the carriage stopped at the door of the hospital, and the baskets were handed out, the little maiden missed her clover bloom, and was so distressed at its loss, that Sybil, to quiet her, searched far more carefully than she would otherwise have done—and Clover Bloom was found—down in her dark, dusty corner.

Half dead? Yes, and rather the worse for dust and soil, but still fragrant.

Muriel clasped her Clover Bloom triumphantly, and marched up the stone steps after her mother. Her little, bright face was a perfect sunbeam in the long wards of the hospital. Strong men smiled in spite of their langour and pain, as they met her merry blue eyes; women, pale-faced and worn, uttered a faint "God bless her pretty face!" as they looked after her, and the children lay too astonished for words at the dainty beauty of her tiny face and form.

In one of the long, white beds, lay a woman, with such a thin face, drawn with pain, and fever-burned, and a restless grey head that tossed from side to side in a vain search for a cool spot on the pillow! "How hot it is," she murmured, "how stifling it all is! Oh! for a breath of air. Oh! for a sweet breath from the country. Can there be a God?" and she laughed wildly and bitterly.

"I could believe there was one anywhere but here, in this wicked, stifling city, where I've learned to sin so grievously," and again she tossed restlessly to and fro, moaning as though in mortal agony. Her wild, black eyes were half closed, and her thoughts so deeply occupied, that only when a childish voice broke on her ear did she notice little Muriel standing by her bedside.

"I'se brought you my f'owers, my p'itty, p'itty f'owers," cooed the little one, laying the tuft of clover right upon the sick woman's breast, and handing her the accompanying card with its clearly written Scripture text—"GOD IS LOVE."

The woman gazed from the flowers to the child, and then back again to the flowers.

She drew a deep, heavy breath.

"'Tis clover," she said, "sweet, sweet clover; 'tis from the hayfield. I can smell it. O Lord, I wish I was back there 'mongst the buttercups and daisies and clover bloom of days gone by," and her wild eyes softened and grew misty as her bony fingers clutched the blossoms. A little frightened, Muriel gravely regarded her, and pointing to the text-card, she said, "God is Love," and then slowly retreated to her mother's side, casting now and again a furtive glance back at the woman, who, with eyes closed once more, lay quietly, the clover bloom upon her breast.

The children went home in a little while, and Muriel fell fast asleep on her mother's lap long before the return drive was ended.

The clover bloom felt herself drooping and dying; but with all her failing powers she sent forth her sweetest fragrance. "For who knows," she said, "but that I shall be God's messenger before I die."

When morning dawned, a bunch of dead clover blossoms lay upon a dead woman's breast.

Upon the dead woman's face a strange, sweet smile lingered, like the after-glow of sunset. The tender message of God's love had pierced her dark heart with a sunbeam's power, and on the breath of a clover bloom was borne to her soul the sweet message of a Father's welcome for his sin-stained, wandering child.

How it had been done, no one can say; for God's work in a human soul is mysterious and inexplicable. Whether memories of a holier, happier past had brought back long-lost faith in God and his Christ, or with the Divine words, "God is Love," came the Spirit's quickening, converting power, I know not. All I know is, a humble flower, prayed over, and given in God's name, became God's messenger of hope to a dark and weary soul.

Little Christian! God can use you, insignificant though you feel yourself to be. Do not envy the greater gifts and wider influence of others. Do not fancy you could serve God better in different circumstances or with different talents. Be content to be yourself, and your best self for Jesus' sake. The fragrance of your homely life and consecrated influence may, in God's hands, prove a richer blessing than your heart can conceive.

MILDMAY PARK CONFERENCE,

JUNE 26, 27, and 28, 1889.

SUBJECT.

WITH CHRIST:

(1) In Death and Resurrection. (2) In Service and Suffering.

(3) In Glory Here and Hereafter.

THE thirty-third annual Barnet-Mildmay Convention of Christian workers took place last week, under very favourable outward circumstances. The elements have not a little to do with the comfortable and undistracted enjoyment of this three days' feast; as many experienced last year, when at afternoon meetings in the tent umbrellas had to be used beneath the canvas. This year, it was matter for much thanksgiving that the glorious summer weather which prevailed throughout enabled all to attend and hear, besides facilitating greatly the social intercourse in the garden during the intervals. The attendance was very large, especially on Thursday morning, when Mr. Spurgeon spoke, and when an overflow meeting had to be held under the time-honoured mulberry tree. There was a longer list than usual of afternoon gatherings, and an additional tent was erected in the North Grounds, so as to increase the accommodation in this respect. These subsidiary gatherings were marked by good attendances and eager interest. It is a very hopeful feature of the numerous summer conventions that the department for considering active work is bearing an increasing proportion to the time given to a merely receptive hearing of doctrinal teaching.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, JUNE 26.

With Christ: In Death and Resurrection.

PUNCTUAL as the strokes of eleven died away, Sir ARTHUR BLACKWOOD, who presided each morning and evening, began the proceedings of the hour. In doing so he said: I do not think I can do better in opening this Conference than repeat words that have just been given to me from one who through long-continued weakness and suffering still lies upon a sick bed near by; one who has known more of the history of Mildmay than any of us, and has known more of its hidden springs of action—beloved Mrs. Pennefather. Visiting her for the few moments she is permitted to see anybody (and only one person a day, I believe), she told me that these words had been laid upon her mind. I give them to you:—"Jesus Himself drew near, and went with them." That is true still. It is so not only in the Emmaus walk, but at Mildmay gatherings. Eighteen hundred years have not altered his character or affected his conduct towards those who seek Him and speak of Him. "Jesus Himself drew near (and He does it now), and went with them." His presence will annihilate both our weakness and our fancied sufficiency. May we see Him! Every eye shall see Him. May that be fulfilled in our experience now, and throughout our Conference days.

Prayer was offered by the Chairman, after which the hymn was sung:—

"Jesus stand among us
In Thy risen power."

Prayer was offered by Rev. W. H. BARLOW (vicar of Islington). The whole of the company repeated the Lord's Prayer, and another hymn was sung. The Chairman then read the portion of Scripture referred to by Mrs. Pennefather—the journey to Emmaus—and proceeded with his Opening Address.

This is in harmony, I think, with the message we have already received. How blessed to think that the same Lord renews these mercies year by year and day by day, and comes in his infinite condescension and grace to commune with such stupid, ignorant, helpless people as they were—and we are. Such, I am convinced, is the view of every spiritually quickened soul within these walls to-day. Surely, if we want anything it is communion with the Lord; for it is that and that only that makes our Conferences times of true blessing, and sends us away refreshed.

It is not my business to touch upon the great subject which our brethren will bring before us, as appointed for to-day's consideration. But in opening to-day's proceedings, I cannot do less than ask you to remember the good hand of our God upon us in the past. Mr. Mathieson reminded us in prayer this morning that a whole generation (measured by the average standard) had passed since the first Barnet Conference. Thirty-two years have elapsed since then, and those who know even a little of Mildmay work and Mildmay Conferences must have their hearts filled with gratitude, as they think how our gracious Lord has guided, and shielded, and helped, and supplied, and blessed the work which began so small, but has extended so widely. Time would fail indeed to attempt to recount these mercies, but many of us can think of them—dangers averted, dissensions prevented, unity maintained, love shed abroad, hearts touched, lips opened, hands and willing feet set to work to the very ends of the earth—surely we ought to praise God that in all the changes (some very trying ones), in all the difficulties which have surrounded those upon whom the oversight and control and direction of work emanating from Mildmay has rested—that God Himself has been a power and defence to them, and has blessed them far beyond what was ever expected. We are not to forget his benefits, and that we now meet for our thirty-third convention.

Our subject, some have thought, is an old one. I am very glad it is. We cannot always be having so-called new subjects. It would be difficult for anyone to say truly new things, for whatsoever is new is not true. We like to stand upon the old ground, and to walk in the old paths; and if people think we are a little too conservative at Mildmay, in our old-fashioned ways, we would ask them to bear with us. Our doctrines are not new; they are as old as Calvary, and we shall have them dealt with this morning; and what we desire is that old truths should come to us with fresh dew upon them, upon hearts anointed with fresh oil, and then we shall see that "the old is better."

Some have passed away from our midst; and, as year after year, these Conferences in God's goodness recur, we miss well-known and well-loved faces of those who have gone to join the innumerable company around the throne. Many might be mentioned; but surely we shall not place least amongst the many, dear Denham Smith. From the very beginning he was one who delighted in our Conferences, with his largeness of heart and spirituality of mind. We praise God for the grace vouchsafed to him in life and in suffering, and for the glory he beholds and enjoys. Then there is that grand old veteran, Archdeacon Phillpot, who was here last year, and spoke words of kindly counsel, waiting for the coming of the Lord, whom he hoped to see without death, but whom the Lord has called to Himself in his ninety-ninth year but a few weeks ago. "He being dead yet speaketh." There are others of whom we cannot speak now. All I desire, occupying this place, is earnestly to ask that both you and I may indeed have our hearts, our attention, our eyes, lifted above earthly instrumentalities and human channels; above brethren however gifted, however earnest, however spiritual; and that we may have to do with the Lord Himself.

Last night we were thinking of that sweet and glorious promise, where we are told that to them who called upon Him He would give an answer, and would show them great and mighty things, incredible things, inacessible things, hidden things. What are those things? They are "the things concerning Himself." That sums them all up. We like to hear sound doctrine, but we want the doctrine illuminated by the presence and person of the Lord. It is Himself. Oh that he may fulfil that promise, though the exposition comes through his servants; that He may be the Expositor, and we may sit at his feet and hear his word. It is not merely notes in our Bibles that we want to make (though these are good), or to get doctrines into our heads; it is the sight of Him and the realisation of His presence that will illuminate the notes and give life to the doctrine. If our heads are weak, and our intelligence limited, and we cannot carry away in the regular order all that we hear—well, if we get a touch from the Lord, we shall all say: It has been good to have been at the Mildmay Conference.

The Life of Christ in the Believer.

By Rev. EDWARD W. MOORE.

I am thankful that to-day our subject takes us back to truths which, as we have been reminded, are "as old as Calvary"—truths about which I can say nothing new, but which, if the Holy Ghost shall use them, will bring new life to every one of us. I cannot this morning get away from the key-text which is placed upon the paper in illustration of the subject of death and resurrection with Christ. I will ask you to turn with me to Gal. ii. 20:—

"I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me."

Here we have an epitome, short but comprehensive, of what constitutes a Christian. Here we see what Christianity is — not a creed to be adopted, not an ordinance to be observed, not a scheme of theology to be embraced; all these things accompany salvation, but do not ensure it. Christianity, before all else, is a life to be lived.

A MYSTERIOUS LIFE.

I want this morning to engage your attention with some main features and characteristics of this life. First of all this life is mysterious—all life is. No man can understand life, even though it be the life of an insect or a plant. Some of our modern philosophers have written upon the beginnings of life, but only to display their ignorance in dealing with such a subject. Life is a mystery. The scalpel of the anatomist cannot lay it bare, the experiments of the philosopher cannot unveil it. God keeps it in his own hand.

You may object, if you will, to Christianity and the life of the Christian on this ground; but remember that if you do so you object in the same breath to all manifestations of life whatsoever. No doubt there is a mystery here. This, as old Bishop Hall puts it, is a text "full of riddles." Here is "living and not living, a Lent of mortification and an Easter of resurrection." But, secret though it be, it is the open secret of the Gospel. It is a paradox, but it is all plain to him who understands it. It can baffle the sage, but it is revealed to the child who is willing to be a learner in the Divinity School of the Holy Ghost.

NOT ARTIFICIAL.

Again, this life is spontaneous—all life is. It is just this which makes the difference between the real and the artificial; between the true and the feigned, the spring and the syphon, the man and the machine. Lay figures are not men. They may be dressed to represent men. They may by clever mechanical contrivances be made to perform some of the movements of the living man. But go nearer to them; put your hand upon their hearts, there is no pulse there; there is no reality there; there is no breath there. They are but counterfeits after all.

I am afraid that, tried by this test, a good deal of what passes for Christianity in the present day would fail. It looks well at a distance. It passes muster in a crowd. But when you come near to it, when you try to lay your hand upon its heart, you find it is a lifeless thing. It has a form of godliness, but it denies the power thereof. It is not a spontaneous, it is an artificial life. But the external performance of religious duties will never make a Christian. A man may be baptized, like Simon Magus, and yet be in the bond of iniquity. A man may preach, like Balaam, and yet die among the enemies of God. Such men are legalists. They seek to perform the actions of life before they have received the principle of life. They work from without to within. God works from within to without. Nor is legalism confined to formalists only. Christians are guilty of it. The man who seeks by his own struggles, by dint of his resolutions, by his earnest efforts, to conform himself to the image of Christ, is unconsciously a legalist. He forgets that life is spontaneous. He is endeavouring to do by "a constraining power from without what Christ undertakes to do by an inspiring power from within."

OUR ESTIMATE OF CHRIST.

Again, this life is precious—all life is. Satan was quite right; "Skin for skin; all that a man hath will he give for his life." The instinct of self-preservation is in every man. Now if we would have any evidence that we are living the Christ-life, let us ask ourselves what is Christ to us? How do we estimate Him? Is He precious? Is He to us what David was to his men, better than ten thousand, nay, the chiefest among ten thousand, the altogether lovely? How have we shown our estimate of Christ? Are we willing to part with all things for his sake? Have we ever hazarded anything for his sake? Have we ever suffered in our person, in our substance, in the esteem in which others hold us, for the sake of Jesus? Can we say as one of old said:—

"As the bridegroom unto his chosen,
As the king unto his realm,
As the keep unto the castle,
As the pilot to the helm,
So Lord art Thou to me.

"As the fountain in the garden,
As the candle in the dark,
As the treasure in the coffer,
As the manna in the ark,
So Lord art Thou to me.

"As the ruby in the setting,
As the honey in the comb,
As the light within the lantern,
As the father in the home,
So Lord art Thou to me.

"As the sunshine to the heavens,
As the image to the glass,
As the fruit unto the fig tree,
As the dew unto the grass,
So Lord art Thou to me."

If we do not value Him above all, do we in his judgment value Him at all?

LIFE IS POWER.

Once again, this life is powerful—all life is. Trace some of the aspects of this power of life. It has uplifting power—all life has. It is amazing what power even low and mischievous forms of life possess; even the lowest and most mischievous. I remember, some time ago, hearing on good authority a curious instance of this uplifting power of life. A flagstone at the threshold of a cottage door by some unaccountable means was so raised as to prevent the door from closing. When it was upturned a fungus was found beneath it, which, weak as it was, had power enough to lift up this massive weight above the level of the floor. A still more remarkable illustration I read, I think in a Continental paper, some years ago. There was a Continental prince, a man who neither feared God nor regarded man. He had always scoffed at the idea of the resurrection of the body. In his last illness, when his end drew near, he had a coffin made of unusual size and strength, weighted with ponderous clamps and bars. When it was finished, he said, "Lay me in that, and I will defy the power of Christ to raise me from the dead." His orders were obeyed. Years passed away. The vault in which he was laid was opened, and what was seen? Had God sent a thunderbolt to rebuke the madness of this man? No; but a mushroom springing from the corpse had had the power to rend asunder the iron panels, and leave exposed to view the mouldering dust. Thus did God laugh to scorn the pride of man, and thus wonderfully, too, did the lowest form of life exhibit uplifting power.

We speak not to-day of the lowest but of the highest form of life; not of the weakest, but of the mightiest Life—the life of Jesus Christ, the Son of God; a life which has raised, not a flagstone, not a coffin alone, but has lifted the stone which earth and hell laid upon the Redeemer's tomb, has pierced the bars of Hades and the grave, and soared upwards to the skies. What can that life not do if you will yield yourself to it? It will lift you above your sins, your fears, your cares. What difficulties will it not vanquish? What advances will it not enable you to make in the knowledge of God, seeing that it is the glorious life of Him who is at the right hand of God for you?

POWER TO OVERCOME.

Again, this life has overcoming power. Watch yonder fish swimming against the stream. Why does it breast the tide? Because it is alive. See that log floating with the current. Why does it drift down stream? Because it is dead. If you are dead, that is all you will ever do—"Go down like Niagara." But it is a mark of the Christ-life, that it enables a man to run counter to the tide of this world's approval. We remember in our Church history the time when one man, Athanasius, stood alone as the champion for the true and proper Deity of Christ. "Do you know," said one to him, "that all the world is against you?" Then replied the saint, in words which have rung through Christendom, "I am against all the world." Yes, this life will enable a man to run counter, not to the world's opinion only, but to the Church's opinion, also, when she is out of sympathy with her Lord. For it is easier to walk before the Church than before the Head of the Church. Have we this overcoming power in us? Do we overcome the world? Can it be said of us, "Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome the world: because greater is He that is in you than he that is in the world"?

Then this life has an expulsive power—all life has. It is one of the properties of life to expel everything contrary to itself. Hence it is that a robust and vigorous frame oftentimes escapes an illness to which weaker constitutions succumb. The mischief perhaps assails both alike, but in the one case the vital powers are strong enough to throw off the infection; in the other they fail to do so. We see the same principle illustrated in nature. You see a tree in winter. Some of the old leaves, in spite of the winter's storms and blasts, cling with a strange tenacity to the boughs; but wait for the genial warmth and sunny days of spring; wait till the tides of sap rise out of the root into the boughs; then see what happens. Do the old leaves need to be torn from their place? No, they drop off themselves! The old order gives place to the new. The new life displaces the old. Oh, the old leaves of sinful tastes and habits that linger in the soul of the Christian! They defy your best resolves. How are they to be met? Only by the inflow of "the expulsive power of a new affection." Would that that blessed life might flow into every heart to-day.

Again, this life has an attractive power—all life has. It is marvellous what attention is paid to living things. I recollect Pastor Theodore Monod saying once that he could observe this even in the nursery. If only a mouse runs across the floor, the children leave their toys and chase it. Why? Because it is alive! Why is it that the infidels cannot leave our Lord and Saviour alone? Why is it that they are for ever writing books and delivering lectures to refute his claims? If He is dead beneath the Syrian hills, why not leave Him alone? People do not concern themselves about dead things. But no; they cannot leave Christ alone, because they know He is living. They say, "If we let Him thus alone, all men will believe on Him, and before long Christianity will take away our place and influence." Depend upon it wherever Christ really lives, He attracts; He cannot be hid. Do you want to make your services more attractive, your sermons more attractive? This is the way—

HAVE MORE OF CHRIST IN THEM.

Let Christ live in them, and they will soon be attractive enough. I do not say they will always attract admiration; they may sometimes attract opposition, but never mind. When the Gospel is preached in the power of the Holy Ghost, one of two things will happen, as Mr. Brownlow North said: Either men will be pricked to the heart, or they will be cut to the heart. If Christ does not attract allegiance, He will provoke opposition. Let me ask: Does your life attract admiration to you, or admiration to Christ? Do your service and life draw men after Him, or provoke opposition against Him? If they neither draw men to Christ nor provoke opposition against Christ, are they worth very much? Is there enough of Christ in them to make them valuable? Wherever Jesus Christ is, He attracts. "I if I be lifted up will draw all men unto Me."

Once more, the life of which we speak has an enduring power; all life has. It is remarkable what tenacity there is in life. I recollect years ago being very much interested by a lecture delivered by Mr. Macgregor at Willis's Rooms, in which he showed a stalk of wheat grown from a corn of wheat taken from an Egyptian mummy at least two thousand years old. Two thousand years had passed away and yet the vitality of that seed corn remained, and this living stalk of wheat had grown from it. I know not how long the vitality of a seed corn may last, but I know that the vitality of the true "corn of wheat" that fell into the ground and died, and is communicated to His people, is the power of an endless life. Blessed be God, this life can never die, for it is the life of Him who is "alive for evermore," and who Himself has said, "Because I live ye shall live also."

A CLOSING QUESTION.

As I close I ask this question: If this life, so mysterious, so spontaneous, so precious, so powerful, so attractive, so enduring, is ours, how is it that it is not better known and enjoyed? The answer comes in the last characteristic of this life which I will name to-day. Brethren, this life springs out of death. It would be almost true to say, all life does. At any rate, the Lord enunciated it as the principle underlying the order of nature when He said, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." Many are asking for more life, but what they should be asking for is more death.

This life springs out of death legal. The Apostle deals with that in the verse before our text. He says, "I through the law am dead to the law, that I might live unto God." But also out of death mystical, for "Law and sin loose their hold together." Looking back at Calvary, Paul beheld himself crucified with Christ. While he lived in the world, he lived a crucified life. What a renouncing of self there was! What a forsaking of ambitions, what an embracing of the cross! His cross was not a little trinket dangling round the neck; it was a heavy rugged cross like that of his Master. What toil, what hardship did he gladly go through that he might seek and save the lost and win the world to Christ. How he took the place of death, and how in that place of death he went through the world, "always bearing about in his body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in his mortal body." Ah! here is the great reason why the power of the indwelling Christ is so little known. It is unwillingness to die.

Are we willing to die—to die to our self-will, to our selfish ends, and to our self-interests; to die to the pleasures, the lusts, and the passions of the world around? As the crucified man becomes insensible to surrounding objects, so, over the man crucified with Christ, sin and Satan lose their power. "Faith is the hand that grasps the hammer, drives the nails," and deals the deadly blow. Let us have faith in the inward efficacy of the cross to-day, and say, with those of old, though with a deeper meaning, "Let us also go, that we may die with Him." Amen.

A Plea for Mildmay.

The CHAIRMAN: The needs of Mildmay are embraced by a sum of about £25,000 per annum, of which only one half is its dependable income. A vast amount of work radiates from here, only a very small part of which you can see, unless you come to inquire more closely into the facts. I have here a letter sent to Mrs. Pennefather by some working men, on the relinquishment by some of the deaconesses of a work deleterious to their health; not that they have in any way shrunk from it, but it is deemed, on all grounds, better to abandon this field for the present. These working men write:—

> We desire to return thanks for sending us during this last nineteen years the help and teaching of your good helpers in the work of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. Many souls have been won through the faithful teaching of God's word. Many that were weak have been strengthened, and many that were deep in sin have been brought to the feet of the Saviour. We all regret your having to withdraw your teachers from the Mission, but we must look to Him who ordereth all things rightly. We have much pleasure in sending through our teacher £1 13s. 6d. in aid of the Bethnal Green Hospital, and as a token of our gratitude to our heavenly Father for mercies and blessings received.—Yours faithfully, THE BIBLE CLASS.

The class is composed of about one hundred men. There are applications from thirty parishes that cannot be complied with for want of funds. Pray remember Mildmay work in your donations and in your prayers.

One with Christ in Death and Life.

BY MAJOR D. W. WHITTLE.

Having read Heb. ii. 9—13, the speaker proceeded:—The truth concerning "Christ in death and resurrection" is brought out in these beautiful verses. This union with Christ is something of God. God purposed and planned it and God perfects it. We were chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world. Christ came down from heaven to be united to us that we might be united to Him. The nature of this union is brought out in these verses. There are four points—Identification, Representation, Substitution, and Satisfaction.

IDENTIFICATION.

"Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also Himself likewise took part of the same." Here we have the Son of God becoming man, made of a woman, identified with us; as in Gal. iv. 4, 5: "In the fulness of time God sent forth his Son, made of a woman (made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law)." "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory—the glory as of the only begotten of the Father" (John i. 14). "Who is antichrist but he that denieth that Christ has come in the flesh?" (1 John iv. 3). So, we have this important truth very clearly brought before us—the eternal God made manifest in the flesh; and made manifest for the purpose of redeeming us. The spirit of antichrist is the same to-day as it was in John's time, when it denied the manifestation of the Son of God in the flesh. Oh that we might see what it means, and be filled with the thought of Jesus as the God-man manifested to us in all that this wonderful truth signifies.

We have read a good deal in the papers about that heroic man, Father Damien, whom we believe to have been actuated by the spirit of Christ; who identified himself with the lepers, and became a leper in seeking to minister to them. I read once of a doctor who had a passion for curing idiots. He felt a call to that work. He would take a boy and spend days in coming down to where that boy was. He would roll on the carpet with him, would play with him, and do everything possible to attract his attention by getting down to where he was. At last he succeeded in getting his attention, and then he would gradually brighten his mind and lift the boy up. So Christ came to be identified with us, that He might lift us up from the degradation of sin.

REPRESENTATION.

He is called "the Captain of our salvation." The word "captain," "leader," or "prince," occurs in Hebrews xii. 2, where Jesus is spoken of as "the author and finisher of our faith." "Him God hath exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour to give repentance to Israel and remission of sins" (Acts v. 31). The Rabbis said that when the Messiah should come, He would never be conquered or die, but would be victorious for ever. Paul proved from the Scripture that Jesus was the Messiah and the Captain of their salvation, made perfect through suffering. The Jew could not see that, and it was to him a stumbling-block. As the Captain of our salvation, we are identified with Him in his death—He representing us as "the author and finisher of our faith," and as our leader. Moses, Aaron, Joshua, are introduced in the Scripture as types—all representative men—representing Israel before God, fighting for them, and also acting in intercession.

Here, in verse 17, He is brought out as the High Priest. He is called "a merciful and faithful High Priest." "But Christ being come an High Priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood, He entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us (Hebrews ix. 11, 12). Israel's High Priest, representing the people, bore upon his breastplate and shoulders the names of the twelve tribes. When He was accepted by God, He was accepted as their representative. So, in Jesus, as the great High Priest, we are accepted, and are one with Him in his death. The identification was for the purpose of representation. He had to be identified with us before He could represent us; so He was made flesh that He might be identified with us, and represent us both before the law and before the throne of God. "For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins: who can have compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way; for that He himself also is compassed with infirmity" (Heb. v. 1, 2). So He became man that He might represent us; and in his representation of us before God we are united with Him in all his finished work. We read of the Roman, Curtius, who sprang into the gulf to save the people. He could do it because he was a Roman, and the noblest of the Romans. So Jesus Christ had to become man in order to become our representative.

SUBSTITUTION.

In becoming our representative, Jesus Christ had to become our substitute. If He represented us before the law, He had to satisfy the law. In Heb. ii. 9 "we behold Jesus crowned with glory and honour; that He by the grace of God should taste death for every man." And again, "That through death He might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil" (ver. 14). And again, "To make reconciliation for the sins of the people" (ver. 17). He died because He represented us; and this word "reconciliation" (propitiation, R.V.) we must attach to his death.

'With Him in his death." What was it?

The death of an ordinary man? No; but to make reconciliation. In Heb. ix. 5 we have it as "the mercy-seat." In Rom. iii. 25 it is "propitiation." In 1 John ii. 2 we read that He is "the propitiation for our sins." In 1 John iv. 10 the word is again introduced: "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and gave his Son to be a propitiation for our sins." We have the same word again in the prayer of the publican, "God be merciful to me a sinner." The word "merciful" is from the same root. We are, therefore, one with Christ in his death.

What then? His death was appointed by God "to make reconciliation for the sins of the people," and so He was our substitute. We died with Him, before the law, as He satisfied the law, and fulfilled all its claims. The Lamb slain was the substitute for Abel, and the substitute for Isaac; the passover lamb the substitute for the people; the scapegoat the substitute for all the sin and all the iniquity of the people. So Christ in his death bore away the penalty due to sin. And for us, as associated with Christ in his death, there is the blessing. Note the words "For us," as occuring in the Scriptures. "Christ hath given Himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God a sweet smelling savour" (Eph. v. 2). "For He hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him" (2 Cor. v. 21). How can we be made righteousness in Him unless we first know that He is made sin for us? "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us" (Gal. iii. 13). What a wonderful verse; this blessed one, this God-man, the spotless one, made a curse, the Lord laying upon Him the iniquity of us all. It is said that when the high priest laid his hand upon the scapegoat he leaned upon it with all his weight. Oh! that to-day everyone in this vast company might lay both hands upon the head of Jesus—might lean their whole weight upon Him, and thus have reconciliation with God. Let us to-day be satisfied with what satisfies God—Christ Jesus on the cross our substitute. "God commendeth his love to us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us" (Rom. v. 8). "Christ our passover is sacrificed for us" (1 Cor. v. 7). Are you willing to be saved in God's way through the appointment of Jesus Christ to take the wrath of God, and to bear the penalty?

A minister in Minnesota told me this incident. A man was in prison, and he told my friend that he was there for a crime he had never committed. He was a postmaster, and letters were missing. They were traced by detectives to his office. He was arrested, confessed himself guilty, and went to prison for a term of years. It was a wonder to everybody who knew him. He told my friend that his wife and daughter assisted him in the post-office, and that they, tempted by love of dress, had taken this money. To shield them he had pleaded guilty, and was bearing their sentence. He satisfied the law, and they escaped. I have often thought of the ingratitude of that wife and daughter, because after he was dead they allowed the stain to remain upon his memory and the cloud to rest upon his name. But what shall be said of the ingratitude of any here to-day who have heard that the Son of God died upon the cross to bear their sins, who yet have never thanked Him and have never received the truth into their souls?

SATISFACTION.

We read of the bringing of many sons unto glory through this offering by Christ of Himself to God. God was perfectly satisfied with the work and death of Christ. "For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us. Nor yet that He should offer Himself often, as the high priest entereth into the holy place once a year with blood of others; for then must He often have suffered since the foundation of the world: but now once in the end of the world hath He appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself" (Heb. ix. 24—26). He hath entered into heaven. The price is paid, the curse gone, and all to the satisfaction of God. Heaven's doors swung wide open, and He entered into heaven for us, the righteousness of God satisfied with the expiation effected by his death. That, and that alone, has satisfied God for our sins. We have to come to the end of what we are in the flesh, and see ourselves dead in Christ, before we can ever have life in Christ. In Scotland I came across a man who said to me, "How can it be that one can die for so many?" I took out of my pocket a gold piece, and said, "What is this?" He said, "A sovereign." I asked, "How many pennies does that represent?" "Two hundred and forty." "Then that is the equivalent of 240 pennies. Well, Jesus Christ was the equivalent of a world of sinners. It is a little piece of gold, not so heavy as a penny, but it is the full equivalent of 240. So this death is of value to God because of Him who died." Oh, the infinite, priceless value of this death of Jesus in atoning for us! I suppose the Kohinoor diamond would be worth £100,000, or 24,000,000 pennies. I suppose you could get a negotiable piece of paper from the Bank of England that would be the equivalent of as many pennies as there are souls living on the earth. So we read in Col. ii. 3 that in our Saviour all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge are hid. I said to this young man, "Suppose one hundred men were condemned to die, and the Prince of Wales were to give his life that they might go free; because of the dignity of the position which he occupies his death might be accepted before the law as equivalent."

THE SINFULNESS OF SIN.

If we are with Christ in his death, we have clearly before our minds what his death was. It was death as a sinner; as we read in Is. liii. 10, "When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin." The testimony of the Scripture is clear and unmistakable that the death on Calvary was the offering for sin. How it teaches men the vileness of sin. How God shows that in substituting Christ this flesh is utterly set aside. It could not be otherwise. As sure as Jesus Christ came to be my substitute, so everything in me and about me is obliged to be set aside. I have a view of what sin is in the flesh, and of what the awful condemnation of God's law is upon it—"For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh" (Rom. viii. 3). If that means anything it means that the condemnation due to me as a sinner in the flesh was met by the death of Jesus Christ. Thus I see the measure of the condemnation that was due. How awful it was. Eph. ii. 1 describes me as "dead in trespasses and sins," and if I am with Christ in in his death, then my sins deserved wrath to the uttermost.

There is the law of equivalents that works both ways. If I reject Christ's atonement, what is the equivalent to me of that which He suffered for me, should I stand before the Lord God to have Him judge me as a sinner. What will it mean? In the light of this truth, we stand in the gathering gloom of Golgotha and hear the agonising cry, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" We read the solemn words of Jesus, "These shall go away into everlasting punishment," and "He lifted up his eyes in hell, in torment," and "There is a great gulf fixed, and they that would pass from thence cannot," "Shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power." We dare not modify the meaning of these solemn utterances, or take anything from their awful import, lest we pervert the Scriptures, and lest we do dishonour to the death of that Saviour who shed his blood for us. If you want to know what you are as a sinner, and deserve as a sinner, think of yourself with Christ in his death. Then think of God's attributes of holiness, justice, and love, as set forth by the Apostle. God spared not his own Son, that He might be just, and yet the justifier of the ungodly that believe in Jesus.

In Aberdeen a young man eighteen years old said, "I am saved by the justice of God. By the justice of God I was condemned; by the justice of God, Jesus Christ becoming my substitute, I died upon the cross, and I am forgiven—I am saved by the justice of God." Is there anything that so reveals God's holiness, his justice, and his love, as to stand and look at Jesus upon the cross? There we see what God's love led Him to do, and what God's justice required to be done, before we could be saved.

FRUITS OF IDENTIFICATION.

In uniting with Christ in his death we are dead to the law, to the world, and sin—"Dead to the law that ye should be married to another" (Rom. vii. 4). Death and resurrection are always coupled in the Gospel. You cannot be married to another until you are first dead to the law. Dead to the world—"God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified to me and I unto the world" (Gal. vi. 14). You cannot get down into the world unless you go past your Saviour; and the world cannot get to you unless it goes above the Saviour. It can never get to you if you keep on the right side. What a shame it is that we should ever get to it by passing Christ. Dead to sin, as in Rom. vi. 11—14. "Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin" (Rom. vi. 6). "Sin shall not have dominion over you, for ye are not under law, but under grace" (14).

SHOOTS AND ROOTS.

In Scotland I met a man celebrated for cultivating beautiful roses, and I asked him how he did it. He said he took care of the roots. Then, after he had grafted in the rose wanted, he kept the shoots from the old root cut down. The great difficulty is the shoots that keep coming up from the old root. That is a good illustration. The flowers of our spiritual life are not very bright to-day, and the fruit of the Spirit in us is not very great. We come to this annual gathering, and perhaps we cannot rejoice much over the past year. How poor the fruit! What has been the trouble? We have been letting these shoots come up from the old root, and its strength has gone into them. We have been living in the world, and to gratify the flesh, instead of living in the power of the resurrection life. Dead to the old slave-master—sin. I would like to be able to get rid of the root.

> I sigh from this body of sin to be free,
> That hinders my joy and communion with Thee.

I cannot see in the Scriptures, nor in my own experience, that this, in the present life, will be done. I see there is a great blessing in taking the sword of the Spirit, cutting off the shoots, and letting the strength be given to the Lord, our Redeemer, our Saviour. If it is God's will that we suffer awhile in this body of corruption, with the root remaining, at least it lets us know more and more of the awful thing that sin is in the light of increasing holiness and nearness to God. We are thus kept humble, and magnify what Christ has done, in which case we shall learn that we have to be content to be discontented with ourselves, until God gives us a resurrection body. But that is no justification for you to let the shoots spring up, because the old root is there; and because you have cut off the shoots close, that is no justification for you to say that there is no root there. That would be the big shoot of spiritual pride, that may come up and hide the fruit from your eyes and the eyes of others.

HEIRS OF THE PROMISES.

United with Christ in his death and in his life, we are made partakers of the Divine nature.

"Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these ye may be made partakers of the divine nature" (2 Peter i. 4). We must magnify the promises. Men tell us that if we hold fast to the verities of the faith it does not make much difference what part of the Word is true, but it is a bad principle in law to commence by admitting that there is a flaw in your title-deed. We would rather hold fast to the title-deed as being proved out and out, and sealed by the blood of the covenant. Let us not tamper with the title-deeds. A lady said to a fisherman in Scotland, "If I only just get into heaven, I shall be satisfied." "Well, ma'am," said the fisherman, "would that satisfy the Lord?"

THAT IS THE QUESTION FOR US.

Then we are married to Christ in resurrection, raised from the dead, to bring forth fruit. We are not married to Christ on the cross; we come to a living Christ. Our life is from Him. United to Christ in resurrection we shall be filled with Him. "He that believeth on Me as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. (But this spake He of the Spirit, which they that believe on Him should receive: for the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified)" (John vii. 38, 39). Brethren let us be with Him that we may be filled with the Spirit. Let us take our place in resurrection life close to the Lord Jesus—in fellowship with Him. Let us ask Him to fill us anew with his Spirit, which we need specially in these times of declension, and amidst all the errors of Ritualism, Rationalism, and Romanism. Let us show that we do believe in the death and resurrection of our Lord and Saviour, and in the fulness of his redemption; and let us wait upon God for the Holy Ghost. Are we not with Him in resurrection for this purpose—that He may fill us with his Spirit? Oh, for an increase of faith to take that which the grace of God has given, and to accept what we have in our gracious Lord. In some parts of Scotland they have a custom every year of "riding the marches." The whole of the community in one place give themselves up to it with a shameless degree of sin and iniquity, I am sorry to say. Still I was inspired by what it signifies. Going out on horseback they ride the bounds of their town; the land given them centuries ago by some king or chieftain of the clan. They claim it and ride round the borders of it every year to assert their claim. Oh that we might "ride the marches" and claim for ourselves all the promises, through Jesus Christ, our precious Lord.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

Chairman's Remarks.

LET me ask your attention briefly to one or two passages from the Word of God which seem to me to bear very closely upon the general subject of our Conference—"With Christ." The first of these is in Mark iii. 13—15, where we read concerning the Lord, "He goeth up into a mountain, and calleth unto Him whom He would: and they came unto Him. And He ordained twelve, that they should be with Him, and that He might send them forth to preach, and to have power to heal sicknesses, and to cast out devils." Then He said to his disciples, "And ye shall bear witness because ye have been with Me from the beginning" (John xv. 27). Again, in Malachi ii. 6 it is said of Levi, "The law of truth was in his mouth, and iniquity was not found in his lips, and he walked with Me in peace and equity, and did turn many away from iniquity."

Here, then, we have in the first passage the purpose of the Lord Jesus Christ in calling us into fellowship with Himself—abiding fellowship. It does not mean, of course, that they were to be with Him only on the mountain, but during his earthly life and ministry. And the purpose of calling them to be with Him—what was it? That He might send them forth. We meet here, we are thankful to think, as a large army of Christian soldiers; a number of professed workers for Christ; as those who desire, where He appoints the way and indicates the direction, to be sent forth to do good in the world, to heal sicknesses, to overcome the evil one and cast out devils.

But what is the indispensable preliminary? It is to be with Him. In vain shall we go forth unless we are sent forth, and we shall not be sent forth unless it is from his presence. It is then only we have the power and prerogative; that we are made plenipotentiaries according to our sphere and measure to do the work that He appoints for us to do. How wonderful that He should call us to be with Himself in order to fit us for service! They were a strange, an uneducated, an ignorant—we may say a rough—company of men whom He thus called to be with Him. And what are we? Just about the same. Such is his purpose—to be with Him. What a privilege! What a position!

Then in the second passage I refer to we have his promise; "Ye also shall bear witness, because ye have been with Me from the beginning." We can only bear witness of what we have seen and heard. No other witness is accepted as of value. But we have not to bear witness of things that we have seen and heard. He says, "Ye shall be witnesses unto me." We have to bear witness to a person; we must know Him, and to know Him we must be with Him. Their testimony is effectual indeed who abide with Him. "Ye shall bear witness because ye have been with me." And does not that indicate to us much of the cause of failure in testimony in the present day—that it is so often second-hand testimony, learned by rote, caught up from another, gathered, it may be, from the Scripture, its doctrines and illustrations, but not coming from the hearts of those who have been and are with Christ? That is what we need. I am sure I do, and I am under the impression that my need is your need. Oh, to be so with Him that we cannot fail to bear witness to Him!

In the third passage I read we have the blessed results: "He walked with me in peace." It is peace to walk with Jesus, "and equity," too; and the result, "He turned many away from iniquity." There is the blessed result—doing his work which only can be done in the measure, and to the extent, to which we walk with Christ. May such be the characteristic of this Conference—may such be its blessed and glorious outcome! Oh, if everyone of us 3000 here so abode in his presence, so walked with Him in daily life, that our testimony, conscious or unconscious, direct or indirect, should be ever to Him in the power of the Holy Ghost. If Mildmay—or rather, if the Lord from Mildmay—at this time sent forth the 3000 servants He has got here this evening in power as those who have been with Him, then the world would take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus.

Dead, Buried, Quickened, Risen.

BY REV. EDWARD A. STUART.

I would ask you to turn to Colossians ii. and iii. First of all in chap. ii: "Dead with Christ" (ver. 20), "Buried with Him" (ver. 12), "Quickened with Him" (ver. 13), and in the first verse of chap. iii., "Risen with Christ." Those four short sentences bring before us our subject this evening. The chief subject of this Epistle to the Colossians is "the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ." But running side by side with that was the union of his people with Him. You must not suppose, however, that this epistle lends any countenance to that emasculated Christianity which is so common in the present day which imagines that the Christian has everything to enjoy and no fight to sustain. Although it is quite true you may link together the glory of Christ and the union of his people with Christ, yet these four short sentences give to you the four steps which we must tread if we wish to be glorified with Him. It is only if we suffer with Him that we shall be glorified together.

THE HISTORIC FACT.

I feel it necessary at the outset to throw out two warnings. We are speaking about the spiritual results of the death and resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ, but there is a very great tendency in the present day to think only of spiritual results, and pass over the historic fact. We have a number of people who are very much enamoured with the flowers of the Christian life and they try and graft the flowers of the Christian life upon some infidel stock. It will never grow there. You may cut off the flower of a Christian life and put it in some specimen glass, but it will soon wither and die. It will certainly not bring forth other flowers and fruit. If you want to have the flowers of the Christian life, you must have the root of the historic Christian fact. Whilst we are speaking of the spiritual lessons of the death and resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ, I am quite sure that all the conveners of this Conference and every speaker upon this platform would lay stress upon the actual historic facts of the death and resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ.

There is a great cry in the present day against everything that is miraculous. Men say that so long as we learn from those old myths, as they are accustomed to call them, what they are intended to teach us, we may afford to let the old myths go. We venture to think that they are no myths, but real facts; and that Jesus Christ died according to the Scripture, and that He has risen again.

I feel also that it is incumbent upon me to throw out a warning upon a second point. There is a very great danger lest we should imagine that the Lord Jesus Christ has done everything for us, and therefore there is nothing left for us to do. It is quite true Jesus Christ died for us, as we heard this morning, but it is also true that Jesus Christ died in order to show us how to die. Our Lord Jesus Christ bore all the results of sin. He bore that result of sin, the wrath of God, in our stead. But there are other results of sin which we bear whenever we commit sin; and the Lord Jesus Christ, though He has Himself tasted the cup to its very lowest dregs, yet, nevertheless, does not excuse us—for instance, from shame, if we do wrong—does not excuse us from any of the other results of sin.

SEPARATION THE FRUIT OF SIN.

Our Lord Jesus Christ bore another great result of sin—namely the awful isolation of the human soul. It is a very extraordinary thing that when man fell, He was not only separated from God, but from his fellow man. You know that if you take some mercury and dash it down upon the table—not only is the mercury separated from the hand that sustained it, but it is all in separate globules. When Adam fell, there came a separation from Eve as well as from God; and the extraordinary thing is this: whenever a man begins to think about himself there comes this awful isolation—an isolation at the same time accompanied with a yearning for sympathy. It is a very extraordinary thing; but it is universal—man yearning for sympathy; and yet the deeper he gets into the recesses of his own soul the more lonely he is. Our Lord Jesus Christ tasted that result of sin; and it is a result that I have not seen sufficiently dwelt upon, and I believe it is one of the eternal results of sin. I believe, if you want society, you must go to heaven; but, if you want isolation, you must go to hell. One of the awful results of sin in hell, I believe, will be the awful centrifugal power resulting from sin. Every soul will be rushing away from other souls; every soul will know that it is naked, and will be ashamed. But in heaven everything will be opened. We shall not be afraid to open up the hidden heart-secret, because all who see us in heaven will judge us with the eyes of love. There is a grand centripetal power in heaven; there is an awful centrifugal power in hell.

HOW TO DIE WITH CHRIST.

But I want you to remember this—that our Lord Jesus Christ has not only died for us, but He has shown us how we are to die; and therefore we have this as our subject to-day—death and resurrection with Christ. You must remember that our Lord Jesus Christ was made sin for us, and therefore what He suffered, He suffered not as the eternal Son of God, but as the Sin-bearer, because of sin. If you want to know how to die, you must learn it from Jesus Christ, and you must look upon the Lord Jesus Christ as bearing our sin, and suffering the punishment because of that sin. It is all very well theorising upon this question, and it is all very well singing about it; but what we want to-night is to come practically face to face with the question—How am I to die with Christ? We hear people vapouring about it, wondering whether they have ever attained it, exhorting others to attain it; but I want us to come definitely to the subject to-night, and I think if you will follow with me the Gospel story, and see how the high priests and Pharisees dealt with the Lord Jesus Christ, you may learn there somewhat how we are to die with Christ. The high priests treated Christ in the way they did because they were executing the judgment of God upon sin; in the same way you must execute the judgment of God upon sin. They executed the judgment of God upon sin in the person of Christ Jesus who bore the sin; you must execute the judgment of God upon sin in your own person. The only difference is this, that in Christ Jesus the sin was imputed, whereas in ourselves it is a terrible reality in the life.

How did the high-priests and the Pharisees deal with our Lord Jesus Christ? We read in the first place that they called a conference. In John xi. we are told they came to this decision, "that one man must die for the people, and that the whole people perish not." They came to the conclusion that they must put the great Sin-bearer to death. We have met together here for a conference to-night, and I think we may say this is our first conclusion—

WE MUST PUT SIN TO DEATH.

But the Pharisees were not satisfied with having passed the sentence; they proceeded to carry it into effect. How, where, and when? They carried it into effect in the solemn still hours of the night; not in the conference, but in the quiet of Gethsemane, when they were alone with Christ. "Not on the feast day," they said, "lest there be an uproar among the people." In the same way we must deal with our sin. It is all very well our coming to conclusions here in the Conference; but we want to go to the privacy of our own chamber. You will never crucify self by singing about it, or by hearing addresses about it. You can only crucify self by going into your own chamber and there dealing with sin.

The first thing the Pharisees and rulers did was to search for Jesus. They lit their lanterns, gathered together their servants, armed them, crossed the brook Kedron, and penetrated into the recesses of the garden in order to find Him. We must do the same thing. If you are going to crucify sin, you must first of all light your lantern—the lantern of God's Spirit, the lantern of God's Word—and track the sin into the very inmost recesses of the heart. Do not be satisfied with Peter, James, and John outside; you want the great master sin itself. Do not be put off by any streams; you want to get at the fountain source. You need no preacher to tell you where the sin resides; each one of us knows the plague of his own heart, and you know just where your sin is lying—down in the very inmost recess of the garden. "He ofttimes resorts thither." Track it, find it, bind it!

THIS NEEDS HONESTY.

You may put yourself off with some minor peccadillo; you may deal dishonestly with yourself; but, if you want really to be "dead with Christ," you must deal honestly with your own soul. Where is the sin I have to crucify; where is my own shortcoming that I have now to kill?

Next they dragged Him to the judgment seat. Our Lord Jesus Christ was judged before three different tribunals, and so I would say we must judge our sin. In the first place they hurry Him off to Pilate. Pilate is the great world governor, and he may represent to us the judgement of the world. I know the world is no infallible judge. The world may very often acquit when God's law would condemn; but at the same time if you and I are honest, we ought to bring ourselves and our sins and selfishness up to the judgment seat of the world. What would the world say if it knew what was taking place in your own room? You who have great pretensions to sanctity, you who are looked up to as a leader in spiritual life—what would the world say if they knew what was taking place in your own study, in your own chamber? What would the world say if they knew what was in your own heart—the envy and malice that are there? The world, now in ignorance, may praise you; but you know quite well, if you were to bring yourself naked up to the judgment bar of the world, the world would condemn you.

But there is another judge—they took Him off to Herod. Now Herod was the local judge. Pilate sent him to Herod because he heard He was a Galilean; and so very often the world does with ourselves. They think every man must stand or fall according to his own conscience, and conscience is very like a compass on board ship.

IT NEEDS CONSTANTLY TO BE ADJUSTED.

It is apt to lose its true balance, especially when it comes in contact with iron—with the world. But still conscience is the judge, and if you want to be dead with Christ be honest in the matter, and judge yourself by your own conscience. "What would I say if I knew that So-and-so had done what I have done myself." For instance, someone has come to you with a very earnest plea for an urgent case of necessity. You say, "I cannot afford it," and so you excuse yourself," and refuse to give. Change places; supposing that you came to ask for that urgent case of necessity, and supposing the person you came to was exactly in the same position as you are yourself as regards means, how would you judge him? Let conscience decide.

But, after all, the court that really condemned our Lord Jesus Christ to death was not the court of Pilate or Herod, it was the court of the high priests. When the world would have let Him go, and when Herod would have let Him go, they said, "We have a law, and by our law He ought to die, because He made Himself the Son of God." My brethren, as they treated our Lord and Master, so we must treat that which Christ Jesus was bearing in his body at that time. He was made sin for us. We have a law, and by that law sin ought to die. Why? Because sin has made itself the very equal with God. This is the charge that the law of God brings against sin. That sin aims at the very authority, nay, at the very being of God. Have you not often traced it in yourself? "Oh! I wish it were not wrong to do this." That means a wish that God should change his moral character in order that you might sin. I say, judge sin before these three courts, and condemn it.

In the next place they stripped Him, and, as they stripped our Lord Jesus Christ, took his own robe off Him, and crowned Him with thorns, so we must do the same with that which He represented.

STRIP SIN OF ALL ITS BEDIZENED GARMENTS,

see it in all its naked hideousness, and then bring it out and say "Behold your king." Oh! I wish I could bring this home to every man or woman. If there is a man here who has been a slave to the intoxicating cup I would strip that intoxication of all its bedizened garments, and would show him the sin of drink in its native hideousness. I would show him the weeping wife and the fearful children, and would say, "There is your king." If there be a Christian here who has felt jealousy and malice against a fellow-Christian, I would say to her, "There is your king," despise it, spit upon it, crown it with thorns if you please; see what a hideous, shameful thing your sin is. Look at that envy, that gossip you think so little about. If you strip it of all its dress it is an utter lie. There is your king. There is the naked sin which has been ruling over your hearts.

And then what are you to do? Condemn it to death. Pilate said, "I will scourge Him and let Him go." That is always the world's way of dealing with sin. Some of us have perhaps felt the world's scourges very hard, but the world is content with a mere reformation. We Christians cannot be content with that. You may scourge the sin if you please, but you must condemn it to death, utter death, and then you must TAKE IT AWAY AND CRUCIFY IT.

They did so with our Lord. They nailed his hands and feet; they even pierced his heart. You must do the same with sin. You must nail all the activities of sin. You must reach the very heart of it, and crucify it, writing up over it its accusation, "This was my king; this is what I once served and bowed down to."

What do we mean by crucifying sin? Crucifixion is a real death; it is not being buried alive, with a chance of resurrection at a future time; it is a real veritable death. This crucifixion is a voluntary death. It was so in the case of our Lord Jesus Christ. "No man taketh it from Me; I have power to lay it down and power to take it again." And so it must be with your death. At the same time, whilst it is a voluntary death, it is a violent death, for sin does not die willingly. You must take the sin and nail it and crucify it. It is a very shameful death. I cannot bear to hear people speaking of what they used to be. I think if we have true Gospel feeling with regard to our own past sin we shall count it a very shame even to speak of those things which we used to be and do. We must realise that crucifixion is an ignominious death. People sing about dying with Christ as if it were a thing that they could go through without any sigh or tear.

It is an extremely painful and lingering death. Death by crucifixion lasted sometimes for three days. So it is with us. As we heard this morning—there is the root; what we have to do is to be continually cutting down shoot after shoot, as it arises from that root. It is a lingering death. This is the death with Christ, the death to sin, death to the world—death with Christ. How? "Ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body" (Rom. viii. 13). It is not undertaken in our own strength, but in the strength of God the Holy Ghost. It is only as God the Holy Ghost energises us and empowers us that we shall be able to go through this death. As Christ offered Himself through the eternal Spirit, so we must crucify self through the power of the Spirit.

BURIED WITH CHRIST.

But this is not all. If you look at the second chapter and thirteenth verse you read, "Buried with Christ." What does that mean? You remember in the first burial that we read of in the Bible the reason for it is given: "Abraham said of Sarah, Give me a place that I may bury my dead out of my sight." So you must not only die with Christ, but your sin must be buried out of sight. When by God's grace we have been able to kill sin, we still seem to cherish it. Like Elisha, we stretch ourselves upon the dead body, and warm it back again into life. You want to bury it out of sight. Is it a book? Burn it. Is it a picture? Destroy it. Is it an occupation? Relinquish it. Is it a friendship? Forsake it. There must be the burying of it out of sight altogether. Do with it as they did with our blessed Lord and Master.

MAKE IT AS SURE AS YOU CAN.

Bury it, roll upon it a great stone, set upon it the seal of God's Holy Spirit, and keep a watch that there be no resurrection hereafter.

Now comes the change—in the tomb, mark you, not on the cross. Buried with Christ. Yes, not only is my old sin and self and world-life to be buried with Him, but my new life is to be buried with Christ. This ought to be the description of every Christian—buried with Christ, hid there in that "Rock of Ages cleft for me," wound round about with the fine linen of his righteousness, buried with Him out of sight. That tomb is in the garden. That tomb is scented by the flowers, the harbingers of a coming resurrection. The Christian who is really buried with Christ will soon go on to be

QUICKENED WITH CHRIST.

How? We cannot say how. As we heard this morning, the new life is a mysterious life. There may be outward signs accompanying it. There may be, as in the case of our Lord Jesus Christ, an earthquake. Sometimes it is so with us; as we rise to the new life there seems to be a veritable earthquake, a shaking of all the old things. There may be, as in the case of our Lord Jesus Christ, some heavenly messenger. Thank God for the heavenly messenger! It may comfort the mourner, for there are mourners mourning over our dead sin. The heavenly messenger may watch us and roll back the stone; but one thing it cannot do—it cannot give the life. As to how the life came to our Lord Jesus Christ we have no means of knowing; all we know is that the new life of our Lord Jesus Christ is attributed to Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. All had their part in this new life. We read of God the Father that "He hath declared Him to be his Son with power by the resurrection from the dead"; we read of our Lord Jesus Christ, "I have power to lay it down and power to take it again"; and we read in 1 Pet. iii. 18 that our Lord Jesus Christ was "quickened by the Spirit." All three Persons of the Divine Trinity had their part in the resurrection. It is mysterious, but there are certain things which must come if we are thus risen with Christ. Turn to 1 Cor. xv. We read there of the resurrection of the body (and what is true of the resurrection of the body is true of the spiritual resurrection): "It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption." What a corrupt thing our old life was! We used to pride ourselves that we did nobody any harm; but now, looking back upon that old life from the standpoint of the new, we see what a corrupt thing it was; we see what harm we did. Our very influence was like a deadly upas tree, spreading death on every side.

There is no corruption in the new life. That wondrous law of influence by which the universe of God's Spirit is bound, whilst it is an iron law in the old life, becomes a blessed golden talent in the new; that power of influence by which we were corrupting others now becomes a blessed power by which we may lead others to the Lord Jesus Christ. "It is sown in dishonour; it is raised in glory." Dishonour! ay, indeed, what a shame that old life was. Now, as we see it, stripped of all its glamour, what a shameful thing it was. It is raised in glory, for it is the reflection of his glory. It is sown, too, in weakness. We never could do the things we wanted to do; there was always the fight going on in our life. "It is raised in power." "I can do all things through Him who strengtheneth me."

RISEN WITH CHRIST.

This is the practical result of the quickening. If we are quickened with Christ we must not stay in the place of death; we must rise; we must not only leave the tomb, but leave the old grave clothes behind us. God will give us new garments, and we must remember that in this risen life (it is only a pilgrimage) we are constantly ascending to our Father. The very moment Christ Jesus stepped out of the tomb the ascension was before Him. So it must be with us. The moment we rise in this newness of life our thoughts must be fixed on this ascended life, ever upward; then this risen life will show itself just in the same way that the life of Christ did.

RESULTS OF THE RISEN LIFE.

Look at John xx. and xxi., and you will see these four results of the risen life of Christ. He first of all met Mary Magdalene in the garden, and He dried the tears of the mourner. The resurrection of Christ does dry the mourner's tears; for we know that "they that sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him." Next, He comes to his disciples gathered in the upper chamber, and the risen Christ speaks peace to the troubled hearts, as the risen Christ always does. Then, lower down in the chapter, He comes to Thomas, and dispels all his doubts; and just in the same way the risen Christ dispels our doubts and fears. If we are risen with Christ, there will be joy instead of sorrow; there will be peace instead of terror; there will be firmly established faith instead of this miserable wavering which we have so often to lament.

In chap. xxi. you see the power of the risen Christ in the daily life, for the risen Christ is not only for the solitude of the garden, not only for the sanctity of the upper chamber—the risen Christ is also for the lake side of Galilee, to teach the fishermen on which side of the boat they must cast their nets.

So it will be with you. Risen with Christ, there will be a power which will manifest itself in the house of business, in the drawing-room circle, in the counting-house, or in the office. Risen with Christ, there will be a power which all your adversaries will not be able to gainsay or resist. What we want is the practical carrying of this out for ourselves. We might have a moment's silent prayer. Let us try and track our sin; bring it out to the light and judge it; condemn it, crucify it. Let us lose sight of all the other people here, and think only of ourselves to-night in the very presence of our God.

Christ and the Church.

BY MR. C. RUSSELL HURDITCH.

Having read Rom. viii. 21 to the end of the chapter, he said: It has come to my mind to read these few verses, not in order to expound them, but to have the weight of their testimony bearing on our minds and hearts in connection with the subject under consideration to-day. I desire to restate some of those Divine testimonies that bear upon this fundamental truth of Christ's death and resurrection and our identification with Him therein. I desire to view it in connection with its evangelistic bearing upon our souls' present welfare and future hope. We cannot forget that this doctrine of the believer's death and resurrection with Christ is a doctrine that is denied and ridiculed by the world, and lightly esteemed by many professing Christians. Nor is this to be wondered at, since the artillery of scepticism is just now concentrated upon the glorious person, work, and teaching of our Lord Jesus Christ, the import of his death, and the fact of his resurrection. Now if Christ be not what He declared Himself to be, the Divine Son of God, and his work is not what it has been affirmed to be, a work in which He accomplished the redemption of the world by the sacrifice of Himself—then it is sheer folly and nonsense for us to talk of any union with Christ in death or resurrection. For, if Christ be not raised, we are yet in our sins; and if Christ has not died for our sins, what possible benefit could we derive from his death at all? But

WE KNOW WHOM WE HAVE BELIEVED.

We know his Word, and we know that we have not followed cunningly devised fables in believing and making known the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, the triumphs of his cross, in the accomplishment of our redemption and his resurrection power. Nay, we are "not mad," as Paul said to Festus, "but speak forth the words of truth and soberness," when we affirm that every believer is identified with Christ in the wondrous death he died, and in the power of his resurrection.

Again, it is no wonder that this mysterious and glorious doctrine should be misunderstood by the world who seek to judge of it in the light of their own reason; for are we not distinctly taught by the Holy Spirit in 1 Cor. ii 6—16 that spiritual things can only be spiritually discerned? Therefore we need the teaching of God's Holy Spirit in order to understand this great doctrine of Christ's death for sin, our union with Him in that death, and Christ's resurrection for our justification, and our resurrection in Him, the blessed risen Christ.

Oh! how much is suggested by this short sentence—"with Christ in death and resurrection." We seem to stand, when these words are uttered, on the shores of a boundless ocean. We do at best but gather a few shells thrown up by its wavelets, and draw in the cups we cast into the ocean the few drops that have gladdened our hearts. But who in the Church of God has ever fathomed the depths of this divine truth—Christ in death, Christ in resurrection? None! Surely we must wait till that day when the whole Church of the redeemed shall be gathered home from every shore, and they shall stand where "with all the saints" they may comprehend "what is the breadth, and length and height and depth, and know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, and be filled unto all the fulness of God." How expressive, I say, the words—"With Christ in death and resurrection." What do they bring before us? They bring before us Christ the Immanuel, Son of man yet Son of God. Holy One in the place and on behalf of sinful man. This weighty sentence expresses more than tongue can tell. It means

CHRIST AT HIS LOWEST, AND CHRIST AT HIS HIGHEST,

It means Christ in his weakness and Christ in his might. It means Christ in his poverty and Christ in his riches. It means Christ in his humiliation and Christ in his exaltation. It means Christ in the sowing (when He sowed Himself), and Christ in the reaping (when He rose, bringing forth fruit many hundredfold). It means Christ in his soul travail, and in the joy of the wondrous result, who for the joy that was set before Him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and hath sat down at the right hand of the throne of God. It means Christ in the darkness of death, and in the brightness of everlasting life. It means Christ at the gates of hell, and Christ on the throne of the universe; Christ as the emptied man, obedient unto death, and the One whose name is declared to be above every name; in short it is an expression of the fact that in Christ's death and resurrection we have the theme of the book, the theme of the ages, the theme of time, the theme of eternity—

THE SUFFERINGS OF CHRIST AND THE GLORIES THAT SHOULD FOLLOW.

It means nothing less than this. It means vastly more—a thousand things more. Oh! when we take up our hymns do we not sometimes express our worship in these words—

> "Man of Sorrows! what a name
> For the Son of God, who came > Ruined sinners to reclaim!
> Hallelujah! what a Saviour!"

And ere we finish the service we sing—

"Look, ye saints, the sight is glorious;
See the Man of Sorrows now
From the fight return victorious:
Every knee to Him shall bow!
Crown Him! crown Him! angels crown Him!
Crown the Saviour King of kings!"

In all this we are associated "with Him" in that death and in that resurrection—that is, in the counsel of God and in the reckoning of faith—for the reckoning of faith is the acceptance of the Divine counsel—worshipping, wondering, loving, adoring, before a great mystery of godliness, without any ability to apprehend its full meaning. We lose our souls in the great sea of the Divine mystery, and with a simple "Amen, Amen," take God at his word, and rejoice in his everlasting love. God help us to launch out into the deep, and let down our net for a draught. But it is only in that counsel of God and in the reckoning of faith we are identified with Him in all this, for as to actual fact, like Peter, and James, and John, the Lord has to say to us, "Stand ye here and watch while I go and pray yonder." In to that "yonder" we do not go with Him We had to stand at a distance, for only the Son of God could stand in that place for us.

"His be the victor's name,
Who fought the fight alone;
Triumphant saints no honour claim;
The conquest was his own.
He hell in hell laid low;
Made sin, He sin o'erthrew:
Bowed to the grave, destroyed it so,
And death, by dying, slew."

If the beloved Apostles could not endure with Him Gethsemane's sorrow, which was the shadow and forecast of the cross, much less could they follow Him to those deeper, darker shadows of Golgotha! He went forth alone to bear the judgment of God against our sin. He went forth alone where He alone could stand. He went forth to bare his breast to the sword of judgment.

"There Christ suffered for my guilt:
This through faith may be believed;
But the horrors which He felt
Are too vast to be conceived.
None can penetrate through thee,
Dark and dreadful Calvary."

What saint in this hall will move his tongue to claim any part of Christ's great victory? The whole multitude in heaven sing, "Not unto us, not unto us;" but "unto Him that loved us, and loosed us from our sins, and made us kings and priests unto God, to Him be the glory and the dominion for ever and ever. Amen.'

"Alone He bore the cross,
Alone its load sustained;
His was the shame, the loss;
And He the victory gained!"

Alone He stood there for us, and cried, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" Are there any unconverted hearers? Then let your eyes be lifted to that Divine Saviour, for you have an interest in this matter. He stood where you could not stand—where you would have been consumed with the fierceness of God's displeasure. Christ bore our sins in his own body on the tree, and now, through God's mighty grace, we look back and say He died for us. We were, everyone of us, dead in sin. Behold Christ there dead for sin. That was the world's midnight hour; that was the moment from which life and immortality were to spring forth to our sin-bruised souls. As we look at Calvary, we know that there He bowed beneath the load, and bridged the gulf between God and man, and there opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers. We were one with Him in this sense, that the curse he bore was for our sins. "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us" (Gal. iii. 13), and every believer may say, "I have been crucified with Christ, nevertheless, I live" (Gal. ii. 20). We were identified with Him once and for ever; we were furthermore with Him in all the

which we have indicated early in the history of God's dealings with man. You remember how it is written in Gen. ii. 21—23: "And the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept: and he took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh instead thereof; and the rib, which the Lord God had taken from man, made he a woman, and brought her unto the man. And Adam said, This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh: she shall be called woman, because she was taken out of man." In this we see a picture of our union with Christ—how in that great sleep of death God brought about the creation of his Church from out of the sleeping Christ.

In Eph. v. 23—32 we are told how Christ "loved the Church, and gave Himself for it," and giving Himself for it He provided that by which the whole Church was fashioned, formed, and perfected, as the sharer of his throne and the partner of his joys for ever. If we "have been planted in the likeness of his death, we shall be also of his resurrection" (see Rom. vi. 5—11); if He died for all (2 Cor. v.), then all have died. Our death hath passed away. The curse of a broken law is gone. Our darkness and death are gone, and we are dead to sin, and to the law, and to the world, and oh! that we might be dead to self, for we as well as our sins were judged in Him,—and so go forth with Him from under that judgment, clean as He is clean, clear as He is clear.

And, through God's grace, what do we find? We find that in his resurrection we are associated "with Him," as the subject for the day declares, we are raised in complete justification; our sin is gone and gone for ever, so that we leave the court without a stain upon our character. Christ having "died unto sin once," and "being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over Him." The question has been eternally settled, so that to-night there is the Gospel of a free and full justification proclaimed for the guiltiest of men that may be within these walls, or elsewhere, through this Man who "was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification."

But with Christ in resurrection we have also full acceptance and Divine favour. The Apostle teaches us this in Eph. i: "Wherein He hath made us accepted in the beloved." Is Christ accepted of God? So is every believer in Christ—the weakest, the youngest, the most ignorant, the most inexperienced; and the measure of his acceptance is nothing less than the measure of Christ's acceptance. In Christ, the Son of God,

WE ARE MADE THE SONS OF GOD.

Is Christ before God in Divine righteousness? Then we are before God in righteousness. And if, with all the measure of Christ's acceptance, we are accepted of God, what does it mean? It means that we have a righteousness such as our beloved friend, Mr. Denham Smith, whose voice has so often been heard in this place, exalting Christ his Lord and Saviour, wrote—

"Just as Thou art, how wondrous fair,
Lord Jesus, all thy members are;
A life divine to them is given,
A sure inheritance in heaven.

"Just as I was, I came to Thee,
An heir of wrath and misery;
Just as Thou art, before the throne
I stand, in righteousness thine own."

Which of us have plumb-lined the ocean depths of this love of God? He stooped down, and upon the vilest repentant sinner He put the best robe, and the shoes upon his feet, and rejoiced. It strikes me that many of us have lost our first love as to these Divine realities. We have gone after our favourite teachers, and theories, and dogmas, and churches, and parties, and conferences; and our souls are not living in the great sea of the Divine love that can take a sinner out of his sins and give him acceptance—not with an earthly monarch, but with the King of kings and Lord of lords, who makes us sons with his Son, joint-heirs with the Heir of all things—places us before Him in Divine acceptance, in righteousness, such as the very angels look upon with wonder and delight. Yet further: "with Him" we are associated in the bonds of a closer and more intimate relationship. We are the bride and He is the bridegroom. How easily spoken the words, but oh! the profound meaning at the back of them! You hang out all your bunting, keep holiday, and rejoice when a princess comes from Denmark to be united to England's royal prince. What do you do when you consider that the Son of God, before whom the angels veil their faces, the Son of God who lends brightness to the throne on which He sits, the light and life of the universe, the joy and delight of his Father's heart, has elected, not to have angels share his throne, but sinners redeemed by his blood, raised and presented faultless, without spot or wrinkle, before the throne of his glory with exceeding joy?

May God bring us on our faces confessing if a dignity so marvellous, a blessing so stupendous, a gift purchased at such cost, has been received by us as though it were a trifling gift, such as we would give to a poor needy beggar. O God, forgive us! When shall the eyes of our hearts be opened to know what is "the exceeding greatness of his power toward us which He wrought in Christ, when He raised Him from the dead, and set Him at his own right hand in the heavenly places"; that in the ages to come He might shew the exceeding riches of his grace, in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus (Eph. i. 11). And that time is soon coming, brethren. I do not know whether you will have another conference; but I know this, that the moment is coming, when the angels shall stand back, and all the harpers who are now rehearsing shall be prepared for the grand oratorio that shall swell forth over the ransomed Bride about to be led home by Him who shall present us to his Father without spot, wrinkle, or any such thing. Yes, Denham Smith did well to sing:—

"Soon, soon 'mid joys on joys untold,
Thou wilt this grace and love unfold,
Till worlds on worlds adoring see
The part thy members have in Thee."

The poor wretched waif of St. Giles shall be given a suit of respectable apparel, and invested with all the wealth of a Lombard-street banker or a millionaire. And will he then live at the poor, wretched, starving rate he lived at before? Call him not a fool; we are the fools. We live like beggars and starvelings, and are proud as peacocks, picking each other's feathers and putting one another down so nicely. God forgive us! We play with Divine truth. Yet, oh! amazing Grace, our relationship is with Him who meanwhile is not ashamed of his poor relations. He is

NOT ASHAMED TO CALL US BRETHREN.

He does not drive us into a corner, but acknowledges us before an assembled universe as those for whom He gave up his throne and embraced the cross, gave up his heaven and had our hell. We cannot penetrate Calvary, my friends; it is beyond our poor feeble conception. But, on the other hand, who shall describe the joys that shall arise when God brings home his elect Church in all the glory of her relationship with the Lord Jesus Christ! It strikes me there are three things mightily impeding the spread of this glorious Gospel—cash, caste, and culture. In these refined days, men desire to hear "refined preaching" from those who do not speak of the blood of Christ, nor talk of hell, and do not utter the word "damnation," who tell us that we have a life that only needs developing. No, no; the pride of the world is its ruin; and the preaching of the cross, in the judgment of the world, is foolishness. And the pride of pocket keeps men strutting along in self-satisfaction, indifferent to the charms of the Gospel or to the welfare of others. These, my brethren, are, in some cases, the little flies in the ointment, even with the people of God. The Lord be praised for culture; the Lord be praised for cash; the Lord be praised for position. I am not for abolishing any of these, but for holding them all for God; realising the great relationship that obtains amongst God's people, being united with Christ in the inheritance that is undefiled, that is "reserved in heaven" for us, and of which Christ has said, "Father, I will that they whom Thou hast given Me may be with Me where I am, that they may behold my glory, for Thou lovedst Me before the foundation of the world."

THIS INHERITANCE WILL BE OURS.

We have got the title-deeds in our possession, and when we "come of age" we shall be manifested as the sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty, and with one sweep of his heavenly hand He shall say: "All things are yours; and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." And if this be the case, I call every unsaved one here to come and take this great salvation which Christ has purchased—this priceless possession which Christ in resurrection has secured; and, if you have done that, let that other phase of the union be yours, as our Lord Himself said: "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly of heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls." And thus yoked with the Lord Jesus Christ for practical service, we shall be able to do his bidding, and go wherever the Master sends us, to St. James's or St. Giles', Belgravia or Bethnal Green, or even to the ends of the earth. We shall be willing to leave all the pleasantries of Conferences like this, and say: "Here, Lord, am I; send me."

THURSDAY MORNING, JUNE 27.

With Christ: In Service and Suffering.

Chairman's Address.

THE CHAIRMAN read Exodus xxiv., and in a few words urged the need of continual communion with God. It was on the mountain top that Moses saw the God of Israel, but the vision was preceded by the altar in the valley. There was first the shedding and the sprinkling of the blood of atonement. Only after that could there be ascent into the hill of the Lord. It is, continued the speaker, this freedom of access and this consciousness of acceptance, that we desire to experience. We must, therefore, begin at the same place, at the blood of sprinkling. We read that under the feet of God there was "as it were a paved work of a sapphire stone, and as it were the body of heaven in its clearness." In the song we have it "paved with love," and I imagine it is the same. It rests upon the love of Him who is love. This corresponds beautifully with what the prophet Ezekiel saw. In chapter i. of his prophecy we read that above the firmament—the pavement—there was the likeness of a throne. God's throne is founded upon his character; love and truth, mercy and justice, all meet in Him, are welded together in the "paved work."

Moreover, we read that over the firmament was the appearance of a sapphire stone, and this takes us back to Exodus. To continue: "And upon the likeness of the throne was the likeness as the appearance of a man above upon it." We know that Man. Blessed be God, He is the Man, the Second Adam—Jesus the Mediator. He is in our presence this morning, and we are in his. He comes to meet with us, and to cause us to sit down in his presence, and, like the nobles of Israel, we "eat and drink" under his shadow. "And as the lifieness of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about. This was the appearance of the brightness of the glory of the Lord. And when I saw it, I fell upon my face." Ah, we may well, indeed we must, take that place. Those who stand on this platform to speak would rather lie in the dust. In spirit we must lie low down, by the blood of sprinkling, in order that on the mountain we may be in the enjoyment of the presence of the living God.

It is for communion with God, for worship, for getting into fresh touch with the living God, and thus into real and true touch with one another, that we have assembled. God will help his servants to minister to us that Word upon which we must feed if we are to eat in his presence, and He will also minister unto us of that living water of which we must drink if we are to be refreshed—even the power of God the Holy Spirit. May we be taught a little more of what service means, and learn a little more of the privilege of suffering, for unto us it is given, not only to believe on Him, but also to suffer for his name's sake. The words in Exodus as to the blood of sprinkling take us to Matthew xxvi., where we read of the blood of the New Covenant, which is shed for many for the remission of sins. It is as cleansed sinners, sprinkled with the precious blood of Christ, that we now desire to fall on our faces and worship, and then, in the conscious acceptance of beloved children, to sit down and wait upon our Father, to hear his Word, and to learn his will concerning us.

We with Christ, and Christ with Us.

BY REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

I am to speak concerning being with Christ in service and suffering. If you take Christ you must take all his belongings with Him. Make it a Christian proverb, "Love Me, love my cross." You cannot entertain Him, if you say at the door, "I will not be his servant; I will not be his witness." If in this great throng there should happen to be any who have entered the service of Christ, but who would not be willing to bear any suffering for Him, you have an empty Christ. You have made a mistake. He comes to save you, and the one token of your being saved will be your willingness to endure suffering for his name's sake. You are not, and you cannot be, saved from selfishness if you will not become his servant; neither are you saved from cowardice and that kind of fear which drags a man down to hell, unless you are willing to step to the front for his sake, and to bear reproach for his name. I am afraid there are some who fancy they are going in some remarkakable way to be

SAVED, WITHOUT BEING SAVED—

I mean to get to heaven without being delivered from those evils which can never enter there.

It is as if a pilot should go on board a vessel, and the captain and sailors should say, "We have complete faith in you, Pilot, and we put the management of the vessel entirely under your care." "Well, well," says he, "I will guarantee to bring you safely into port, despite the storm that is coming on, and the rocks that lie in the way." Then all the sailors go down below and go to bed. The pilot shouts: "Call these men up; every man must now be in his place." But they say, "We trust you to get the vessel into port; we have left it entirely in your hands." The pilot replies, "Unfurl these sails. Some of you go and look to the rudder, and attend to the steering." "No," they say; "we have left it all with you: we intend to do nothing at all. There is a heavy wet coming on, and it will be much more comfortable down in the cabin or the fo'c's'le. We are perfectly trusting in you, and all our hope of getting into harbour rests in your management of the vessel."

"A SET OF HYPOCRITES!

they do not trust me, or they would do as I tell them." The very proof of their trusting in him is to be found in this, that an order being given it is obeyed at once. I need not expound the parable to you, for you are doing your best, I trust, all of you, to obey your great Lord and Master. Should there be any here who are willing to take the pilot Christ on board, but not willing to do any of his commands, they may depend upon it they are under a delusion, and they will never reach the harbour.

Well, most of us have service, and many of us have suffering; and we are quite willing to take them both.

BUT THE QUESTION THEN ARISES—

Have we service and suffering with Him? We may both serve and suffer, but if not with Him, what have we done? If I give my body to be burned; if I wear myself out in labours of testimony, yet if I am not with Christ, I have missed the present joy and honour, and I have missed the future reward. I lay great stress on this at the very commencement—that this service and suffering with Christ are not optional. If you have Christ you must have the service and the suffering. And if the service and suffering are to be accepted of God, they must be with Christ. You will be serving another master if you serve in other company; and you will be serving for another cause if your cross is not taken up and carried with Jesus, and because it is Jesus Christ's cross.

PERSEVERANCE OF THE SAINTS.

I frankly confess to you I find it much easier to serve and suffer than always to keep serving and suffering in close association with Christ. That place on the hill top, which we so sweetly heard about, I find can be pretty easily reached? the difficulty is to keep there. We all go up, but, alas! I fear most of us come down. We sometimes have our raptures, our enthusiasms, our "perfect consecrations," and we think we have reached our complete sanctification through them. But the law of evil gravitation seems to bring us down again, and we are not what we seem to ourselves to be. I mean we are not that for long; alas! that it should be so. But the point is to serve and suffer always with Christ; never to be away from Him; consciously enjoying his presence and his help; consciously to be doing everything in his love and by his power.

I want to say a few words this morning which may perhaps help us a little. I am sure they will help us not at all unless the Spirit of God blesses them; but, if his power comes upon the word spoken, we shall be helped much. This is too big a subject. But so far as I can see, looking into it, there are two things to be said: in service and suffering we must be with Christ; and, secondly, Christ must be with us.

WE MUST BE WITH CHRIST.

Someone asked during a certain war whether God was on the side of the party. The leader, who was a Christian man, replied, "I do not feel nearly so concerned about that as I do to know whether I am on the side of God." And there is a truth there. We all like to have God come to our side and our party, but the first point is: "Am I on the side of God? Do I go with Him?" There will be no fear about Christ being with us if we are with Christ.

To be with Christ, we must become like Him. We must mould and model our service and our suffering and our carrying of them out, upon the model of Christ's own life. And here I begin by saying that to be with Christ we must follow a way mapped out by the Divine hand. Christ is the way; but He also had a way. That way, from first to last, was marked out by the Divine foresight, and He was led in it always by heavenly guidance. Hence He began, in a very extraordinary manner to my mind, with many years that, as we read about it, seem to be years of doing nothing. Thirty years was He at Nazareth subject to his parents. Only once does He make anything like a public appearance in all that while. We are apt to think they were wasted years; assuredly not. He was getting in a storage of wisdom and knowledge that were to appear in his work of the last three years of his life

A WORD TO YOUNG BELIEVERS.

If young people are to be with Christ, sometimes—I do not say always, but sometimes—they must be still. You can be serving God by preparing, by getting ready. I would encourage a young Christian to bear witness to what he knows; but I would not encourage him to bear witness to what he does not know. And sometimes to begin to speak at once is to begin to say nothing; that, you know, can be done at extreme length and with great volubility. The man who has nothing to say will be much longer about it than he who has a very complete message to deliver and is anxious to get it out and let it work its way. There are times in life, at the beginning especially, and often at the end, when friends, if they were wise, would counsel retirement. Sometimes, being unwise, they keep those working who are not working so efficiently as somebody else might do, or perhaps as they themselves used to do. There are such times when the quiet Saviour, if we be with Him, will tell us to be quiet too. Not to be doing nothing; for there never was a time in his life when He did nothing. He was doing as much in the carpenter's shop at Nazareth, as when He was on the mountain side with the multitude. But, of life, and had He been of the same mind as ourselves, He would have been in the thick of the battle before He was twenty-one years of age. He would have been up to his neck in service long before He was thirty. But here He paused; and sometimes, to be with Christ, we have to pause too. Not always. There are special cases, but sometimes, I say, and that sometimes may happen to have fallen upon you, my brother, my sister. A missionary going abroad has a considerable period of silence, in which the language has to be learned. Then, if he would be with Christ, he must be quiet when he longs to speak. His heart is burning to tell out the story, but he might only make the people laugh at his blunders in the language. Therefore he should strive, patiently, by the help of the Spirit, to be quiet, for so his Master was.

HAD HE CHOSEN HIS OWN WAY

CHRIST BREAKS THE SILENCE

and comes to the waters of the Jordan; what then? His way was mapped out by a higher hand, else surely no man would have chosen the next step He took. After his baptism He was led of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. Ah! it may be that your time just now is not so much one of service towards man as of being tried and tempted in all sorts of ways, and in the most cunning manner, by the devil. Be with Christ then. Do not run away from the devil and the temptation, if you are called to it; doing some wrong action, or escaping from temptation to sin by sinning, is indeed leaping from the frying-pan into the fire. The Word of God is the great weapon with which to fight it out with the enemy; and afterwards, when you go into actual service among your fellow-men, you shall be qualified to comfort, warn, strengthen them, because you have been tempted in those points like as they are tempted; because you know the wiles of the evil one, and know how to counsel them to meet temptation. I say this at the commencement, because it is so mysterious, and often puzzles many a child of God. "I cannot really be in service and suffering for Christ, because I am in retirement or under temptation." Ah! judge not so. Be with your Master, and you are in your right place.

Notice how this breaks out again and again all through Christ's life.

"HE MUST NEEDS GO THROUGH SAMARIA."

Must is for the King, but does it come upon the King? Yes! He who is the imperial Spirit of all worlds, came under an imperious necessity to do this or that. And I think we shall all find that those paths in our life in which we have no choice, but "must needs," are often great turning-points, and as often great wells from which will flow streams of future usefulness. See the necessity that Scripture put Jesus Christ under when He came to the cross, where, in his suffering, He might have been excused, one would think, from thinking about prophecy; but there it is. He did this or that "that the Scripture might be fulfilled." He said "I thirst" that the Scripture might be fulfilled. So often our whole life is a long way in which God has marked every step. We know not where; we scarce know how; but on we go, impelled by a mysterious necessity which is not faith but is predestination. It is the will of God working in us to will and to do of his good pleasure; and we, rejoicing therein, work out our own salvation with fear and trembling. So to be with Christ and to follow the way that God has marked out is often to cross the dark and troubled waters.

POWER INDISPENSABLE.

To be with Christ, next, we must have power to follow that way—power derived from the Divine source. Our Lord, for his suffering and service, was first of all anointed. He goes not to preach till He has the Spirit of God descending out of heaven and resting upon Him. We know He means us to follow Him in this, for He bade his disciples abide at Jerusalem till they were endued with power from on high. Dear friends, workers, sufferers, above all things, first, last, midst, seek to enjoy this power. Without it you can do absolutely nothing. Having once received that power, it continued throughout his life; and here we must be with Him, in constant communion with God. He never broke the contact between Himself and his Father. He was not always speaking to the Father, but He was always receiving from the Father. There was between Christ and God. And it must be so with us. Sometimes that commerce was carried on distinctly in private with much prayer. He was up in the morning early, before the break of day, that He might see the Sun of Glory shining. He retired and hid Himself that He might pray. If ever there was a man who lived who did not need to pray, it was Jesus Christ. Yet He, above all, is notable for the fact that "cold mountains and the midnight air witnessed the fervour of his prayer." Oh! friends, it is no use our trying to do without prayer. We may think we have little time and we are very busy, but we are wasting time if we use time that should be spent in prayer, for anything else than prayer. But Christ was continually and perpetually crying to God. The habit of prayer is very admirable; the spirit of prayer is still more essential—to be always praying; not in the closet only, but somehow to be always in the closet; to be never so much alone as in a crowd; to be never so near to God as when in the midst of activity—this is to have learnt to pray as Christ learnt it. Nothing carried Him off his feet; no strong current of influence from his fellow-men took Him off the rock of communion and oneness with God. They would have made Him a king. What an opportunity to have led an army against the enemies of the truth. Ah, not He! No carnal weapon ever degraded his blessed hand. The nails might be thrust through his hand, but the sword shall never be gripped thereby.

HE NEVER USED HIS POPULARITY.

He could not help the people crowding about Him, but He did his best to send them away, and always turned their coming together to the highest account. Then, as to his eloquence; can you find a single passage in Christ's speeches which looks as though He had studied it long before, or prepared the words, and made them very polished and refined? If you look at Christ's talk as a human composition, it is a work of the highest conceivable genius. And yet his words flow from Him like ordinary conversation, absolutely unstudied as to anything like rhetoric. A rhetorician would have said this and that; although even in that matter he could not find any better model. But our Saviour used no wisdom of words nor glory of speech. He spoke straight on, and his words, uttered in the power of the Holy Ghost, went to the hearts of men.

Come then, let us take off Saul's armour; if we are to work with Christ we must have done with that. Let us take the sling and the stone from the brook, and go out, like David, in the name of the Lord of Hosts. Let Saul have his armour back; he wants it, poor thing, but David is best as he is. That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and all that we could produce would be but flesh. That which is born of the Spirit is spirit, and only that which comes of the Spirit of God will be acceptable with God, and will endure throughout eternity.

THE WILL SURRENDERED.

So far I have shown you how we must be with Christ in the way and in power. But, again, it is essential that we be with Christ as to the will being completely obedient to God. This is a lesson I could wish that some who essay to preach had learned. The very idea of preaching seems to me to be to take a message from God and deliver it. But some seem to think it is to excogitate from their own inner consciousness, or some other dark place, something which shall be called truth, which they shall promulgate. If you should ever go to hear a man who preaches a gospel that he has made himself, you may go to sleep if you like. He has no more claim on your attention than you have on his. But when, in the name of the Eternal God, we deliver God's message, we dare you to go to sleep. We dare you to treat it with anything but reverence. As for those who discard all idea of a perfect revelation, treat them as they ask to be treated; as inventors leave them with their inventions. But when we come to you and say we declare unto you that which we have also received of the Lord by his Spirit, judge us to be impostors if you will, but if you reject the Word of God you will answer for it at the last great day.

CHRIST NOT ORIGINAL.

I heard someone say the other day that Jesus Christ was not original. He says, "The thing which I have heard of my Father I make known unto you." And the Holy Ghost is not original; says Christ: "He shall take of mine and show it unto you." Who is the great original genius of the Bible? It is one of whom we read that "when he speaketh a lie he speaketh of his own. He is the original. Let us, therefore, accept this idea, that we are not going to be original; we are going to be obedient. We have received his word, and reverently, but boldly, we mean to tell it out to our fellow-men.

As it was in word, so in work. "I do always those things which please Him," saith Christ. His one aim in every course of action was that He might glorify God. And you know how it was in suffering. I dare not expatiate here; let this word suffice: "If it be possible let this cup pass from Me; nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt." And He drank the cup. About his obedience there was no question, no bargain, no reservation. He intended to do God's will, cost Him what it might. He never saw two ways or "three courses"; for Him there was but one—God's will. The prayer He taught his disciples to pray He carried out in his life: "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." If we would be with Christ, we must get rid of self-will.

WEDDED TO THE TRUTH.

I must hasten on and notice, next, that if we would be with Christ in service our mind must be wedded to the truth. His teaching is to follow the plain truth. I should like anyone to show that Christ's teaching was abreast of the age in which He lived; that it was tinctured and coloured for practical purposes by the influences that surrounded Him; that

He modified it in accordance with the prejudices of those who gathered about Him. Did He modify it for the Sadducees? Did He tone it down for the Pharisees? He spoke the truth, and when He had spoken it, it was of small account with Him whether any said: "Master, Thou hast well spoken," or whether they went their way and reviled. The Saviour was so transparent—although no man could fully read his heart, it was too great and too Divine a heart; and yet there was no concealment. Policy! Was such a word ever hissed from the serpent into Christ's ear? If it was, it never entered into his heart. He had no policy. And if you have a policy, before long you will have to do wrong things to maintain it; then you will have to do something else to support that, or else go back and undo a good deal in order to set right that in which you were mistaken.

GO STRAIGHT AHEAD:

that is what Christ did; if you are to be with Christ, it must be so with you. Perish policy! I cannot tell all the consequences of my action; I am not responsible for them. But I am responsible for doing what God would have me to do, as God would have me do it. He would have me do it without consideration of what the results may be to myself. So did the Saviour speak. His common conversation was all truth, and it was often very unpleasant to many who seemed as though they wanted to be his disciples. They went back because He had spoken so plainly. Still, He did not mitigate the force of truth or allow a soul to perish for want of an honest rebuke. And if we are to be with Christ, it must be so with us.

Furthermore, if we are to be with Christ, we must have our hearts all made into one, and that one heart set on the Lord's glory and the doing of his work. How often I have heard this quoted, "Set not your affections upon things on the earth." But it is not so; it is "Set not your affection." Let all your affections be brought into one and set that one on the things that are above. He that hath two hearts will be weak; to have one, and that one given wholly to God, is one of the essentials of strength. Our Saviour had one aim only. All the manhood—I was going to say all the Godhead—in Him went towards that aim.

So was He wrapt up in his work of serving God; and He rested in it. I never saw in any sermon of Christ's anything that looks like strain. There was a splendid ease about Him. It came out of Him because it was in Him, and He could not help giving it. His meat and his drink was to do the will of Him that sent Him. He rested by doing; He obtained refreshment for his weariness by getting on with his work. "Give me to drink," said He to the woman of Samaria. And though she did not give Him what He asked, He gave to her to drink of the water of life, and He was Himself refreshed, while the disciples came back to Him hungry. Oh that we might get into the habit of

WORKING FOR JESUS SPONTANEOUSLY.

When the soldiers of Xerxes went to battle, it is said you could hear the crack of the whips behind them. Their generals were like them, and unwilling to fight. It was never so with the Spartan. With shield and spear he rushed into the battle, and fought like a lion; for the lion is at home in a battle. He who has Christ's nature will be at home in Christ's work. The Master's presence and the Master's power within will be enough for him. Nothing will be shirked, either of service or of suffering.

I close this branch of the subject by another thought: how sweetly natural the life of Christ was. And to be with Christ we want to imitate Him in his life. Have you ever noticed how wonderfully natural He always was. Granted that He was the Christ, He lived just such a life as you might suppose that He would live. I find nowhere any sort of resolution to do something very sensational and startling: something never done before. "Come, reporters, take down what I am now going to say." Do we ever find Him saying that? No. His first miracle was not performed on the platform, or in the centre of Jerusalem, in front of the Temple, but at a marriage in the little town of Cana in Galilee. Did Christ, then, go to weddings? On this occasion, at any rate, it was very natural that He should, for his mother and the rest of them were going. He goes to a wedding, and there He works his first great miracle. At another time He preaches so as to bring a city to his feet. How? Sitting on a well. He does not say to the woman: "My dear woman, go home and get Me a cushion"; nothing of the sort. There is not the slightest approach to anything like ceremonialism, or

STANDING ON PERSONAL DIGNITY.

He simply sits on the kerbstone of the well and begins to talk about water—very commonplace sort of talk. I like the Saviour wonderfully for one thing that He did once. He was in a boat in a great storm at sea; and where was He? Asleep in the hinderpart of the ship. He is not a pilot this time. But why asleep? To teach you and me to go to sleep sometimes. When you get very nervous and anxious and fidgetty, good sister; when you become troubled and a little peevish, good brother—go to bed. You smile at that, but I am giving you good medical advice; I think I might almost say good spiritual advice. Why did the Saviour go to sleep in that storm? I believe it was because He felt: "I am perfectly safe, 'rocked in the cradle of the deep,' with my Father's hand upon the cradle." Where else should a child be but asleep? So the Lord laid Himself down and went to sleep, even while they were crying: "Carest Thou not that we perish?" Sometimes to be with Christ is to be calmly at rest.

It is such a good thing to be natural. My brother, the worst thing for you is to be trying to be somebody else. Be what you feel is evidently the intention of God in the making of such a one as you; then you will be with Christ, and you shall fulfil your destiny. We so often go about the Lord's work in a very important kind of way. We are so full of ourselves, and address ourselves to the point in hand as though we wished others to see how nicely we do it. It was not so with Christ. He ever did things as though He were doing nothing. He never, like Augustus, said: "Have I acted my part? Applaud me!" Nothing of the sort. Oh that we might learn to follow Him from the cradle to the cross, thinking of these things, and much better than thinking of them—carrying them out.

CHRIST WITH US.

This leads me to the second part of my theme, upon which I shall endeavour to be very brief. We must have Christ with us. The first is essential to the second. How can we have Christ with us, for He has gone? It was expedient for us that He should go. He has gone—the brightest of our hopes, the highest of our joys, the deepest of our wells of strength. But He is coming again the second time, and we look for his appearing. But how can we get Him with us now? In part this is the result of his first visitation. Let me ask you to turn back to that time when first you knew the Lord. You do not so distinctly remember it perhaps as some of us do. I know a good woman who does not know her birthday, but I have never, therefore, said to her, "My good woman you are not alive." She would smile at me as you do now. There are many people believing in Jesus who never knew exactly when they began to do so. Saul of Tarsus knew. If he were to come to earth again, he could find the very place where he was struck to the ground, and where he fell. From the moment he had that wonderful vision he was quite a different man. His friends, I daresay, said: "Poor fellow, he has had a dreadful twist; something has happened to him." He would say: "I remember when I got a twist, and I have never got untwisted since. Oh, it was a twist—that vision of the Crucified; that dropping of the burden off the shoulders into the sepulchre; then the great leaps for joy when I went on singing. Ah, I got a twist that day! I am so in love with Christ and with his graces that I am not amenable to reason about them. Now that I have been washed in his blood, and joined to his life, and He is one with me, they may say what they will of Him, but they can never make me change my opinion that He is altogether lovely, and that it is his blood alone that cleanses from sin." I do like to see

A GOOD OLD-FASHIONED CONVERSION.

That is half the battle. Some are converted very speedily, and none the less truly for that. But there be others who seem to jump into it and out of it again, as men do in and out of a bath. I frankly confess I do not regret years of conviction of sin—deep ploughing, scarifying, cross-ploughing. It all shows itself in the after wheat, which is stronger and better for all the time of ploughing and preparing the ground. If any of you are in that condition now, I thank God for it. I think He means to make men and women of a breed superior to the common out of you, if you are passing through the brick-kilns of Egypt. It is a grand thing to experience what I cannot help calling again that wonderful twist; it seems to turn your world upside down. A girl said to me lately when I spoke about her conversion, and asked what sort of a change it was: "Well, it is like this; either the world is altogether different from what it was, or else I am." May we find it so.

Next, to have Christ with us, we must have Him in his spiritual indwelling by his vicegerent and representative the Holy Spirit. We talk about the Holy Spirit, none too much; we sing about Him, all too little; we think about Him, not one tenth so much as we ought; but have we really got any idea of the Holy Ghost dwelling in us? I am not sure. We pray that the Holy Spirit would come into us. Do you know what it means? Do you know that you are inviting One to dwell in your house who may burn it down? For "our God is a consuming fire"; remember that. Everything that will burn must burn when He comes in. This Holy Spirit is a spirit of burning. And, oh, what agony—I was going to say,

WHAT AGONY OF BLISS

—the Holy Ghost can give a man! What inward daring! How the house is shaken into which He comes! What rushings of mighty winds! An awful mystery of feeling will come upon the man who really entertains the Holy Ghost. Which is the greater miracle—the incarnation, or the indwelling of the Holy Ghost? We may not draw comparisons too closely; for God to dwell in a human body by Himself is a great wonder, but for the Holy Ghost to dwell in a sinful body and to abide generation after generation, not in one humanity, but in myriads of humanity—this is a standing miracle and hard to comprehend. Yet this is so, or all our religion is vain. We must have the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, that we may have Christ with us.

Another thing is this: To have Christ with us in our work we must always be resting in his precious blood. Thus we are saved and washed clean; and in the person of our Lord we are as acceptable before God as that Blessed Person itself. My standing does not depend on my service or my suffering; I stand on Christ, the solid rock. Some seem to begin in the Spirit, and think to be made perfect in the flesh. They were saved by faith, but they think to be preserved by such and such things of their own doing. Do not misunderstand me. No man will be saved unless he is saved from sinning and selfishness. But that is not what he stands on; he stands on Christ alone, that he may work for Christ. He never, in whole or in part, stands on what he works for Christ, but on what Christ has wrought for him. Let us keep there.

Let us rest always in the fact that I am my Beloved's, and my Beloved is mine. He has bought me, and paid for me. I am his property from head to foot. I am in his army, and as sure as He is in heaven I shall be in heaven with Him. To have that full confidence in Christ is to have Christ with you in your work. If you go to work to make another Christ, and another salvation, you cannot expect to have God's Christ with you.

Again, to have Him with us is to have joy in his continual presence. Not now and then to turn round and say to Him as an old friend, "I did not know you were there." Never be in such a state of mind with regard to your Master that when you meet Him at some special service like this you feel constrained in his presence, and all you can say is, "I am glad we have met again." Nor should you ever leave your chamber of a morning without being

ON GOOD TERMS WITH CHRIST.

It is not safe to go down those stairs without feeling: "If thy Spirit go not with me, carry me not hence." Can you go and transact your business without first of all saying: "Master, be at my right hand all this day"? This will be the hill-top experience of which the Chairman has spoken. May we get it and keep it. There seems to be a notion that we cannot keep it. I know no reason why a Christian man should not live twenty or fifty years without ever having a cloud between Christ and his soul. If a cloud comes in, it is generally one of the man's own making. Christ will never put a cloud between you and Him. Oh to live in his constant presence; and especially to live with the realisation of his infinite majesty: rejoicing in Him, and yet being overcome with awe, so that you fall at his feet as dead. Yes, as our brother in the chair said, we do feel as if we would rather place our mouths in the dust than speak to our fellow-men. But we desire to keep our mouths in the dust even while we speak. What are we that we should try to describe his glory?

Gathering up what I have said, I would remark that, if we can work and suffer with Christ,

ALL LONELINESS WILL BE DRIVEN AWAY.

We shall feel we have enough company even if all forsake us. One is gone, and another is gone, and we feel their absence; but if He remains, it will be as with one who spoke of Plato listening, and who said Plato was audience enough of himself. So if Christ be with us we shall feel that we have company enough. It will lighten our cross and take away from us all weariness. "Is life worth living?" said somebody. Had he known Christ, he would never have asked the question. With Christ it is life; without Him it is nothing but death. Oh to have this glorious Friend constantly with us.

This also will remove all anxiety; it will deepen earnestness; and it will brighten courage. What deeds of daring we shall do. All sacrifice seems pleasure when Christ is near. His presence with us will inspire us with a perpetual delight, and will prepare us for everlasting glory.

I conclude with this parable. There came once into a certain country a great Prince. But he came incognito; he was not known or recognised. There came a day when most of the people gathered round him, and, as there was something peculiar about his manner, they began to scoff at him; pelted him with mud, and hooted him through the streets. At last they set him up in the pillory, and when he was there they emptied all their garbage upon him, and insulted him in every possible manner. But there was one among them, of a nobler breed, who recognised his Prince. One day when he was in the pillory and the populace was pelting him, this one wiped that royal face; when there was something more vile than usual coming he put himself in the way and took the foul missile upon himself; and he spoke good words of cheer to the suffering Prince.

You know the parable, so I may pass on and utter my closing word. It came to pass that the Prince went home again. One day when his father was on the throne, the Prince was there, and amidst the multitude was that man who had befriended the Prince in the time of his shame and scoffing. The attendants stood around the throne, and right royal creatures they were, arrayed in all their splendour. Let me drop the parable again. It was God Himself on the throne. When He saw the man come who had stood side by side with his own Son in the day of scorning and scoffing, He said: "Stand by, seraphim and cherubim! Make way for him who shared with my Son his humiliation." And God set the man down upon his throne with Him. "As thou hast suffered with Him, thou shalt reign with Him." May that be the portion of us all.

Prayer and Praise.

Captain CHAPMAN presented a number of requests for prayer and praise:—For our beloved Queen and country, that God will prolong the days of Her Majesty and give perfect rest to her heart through our Saviour Jesus Christ.—That God will give to the Queen's councillors special wisdom in these days, and grant a speedy solution of great and difficult problems, more especially that in regard to Ireland, and that God will give peace in our time.—That there may be an abundant fulfilment of the promise of a good harvest in our land, so that there may be plenty for man and beast.—That blessing may attend the effort now being put forth in reference to the closing of public-houses on the Lord's Day.—That God will be pleased to stay the plague of Romanism and Ritualism working so widely in the Established Church, and errors and departures from the faith prevailing in other bodies, and also preserve to our country the light of his truth and its national liberties.

Praise was asked in acknowledgment of the Lord having drawn so many thousands of his people to pray for, and strive after, a manifestation of the unity of the Church of Christ, and in acknowledgment of the rich blessing which in many important towns has attended gatherings for the advancement of this holy cause.—Prayer was asked for Belgravia, and for blessing to be granted upon a fifteen days' mission to be conducted by Major Whittle in the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street.—That the Gospel in France may have free course, and that efforts in Paris in connection with the McAll and other missions may be greatly blessed.—That the exertions of M. de Pressensé and others to stop the spread of immoral literature in France may be crowned with success. Also that God's blessing may rest upon endeavours having for their object the spread of the Gospel in Italy. The determination of Rev. Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, to devote himself to the work of a missionary evangelist, was also remembered, as well as the work and purposes of Captain Moreton labouring in Canada, and Mr. Spencer Walton about to go forth to South Africa.

Christ's Glory and the Christian Spirit.

BY LORD RADSTOCK.

We are met here, not merely to hear about Christ, not only even to meet Him, but, if we understand our privilege, we are met here in his name. No sooner had the fall of man taken place, than the word came out from God, "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." And in the eighth Psalm we read that it was the Son of Man that was to win the victory. It is true that it was the Son of Man manifested in babes and sucklings; it was out of the mouths of babes and sucklings, as represented in the Son of Man, that the praise was to come. And we know it pleased God to send forth his Son, "made of a woman (made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law), that we might receive the adoption of sons"—not merely become adopted sons, but have the sonship, be real sons, begotten of God in resurrection. For centuries the blessed One was seen coming by the light of prophecy. You remember Him as the servant of God, to whom great commissions were given: "Behold my servant, whom I uphold." He was the dependent one if ever there was one such. His power consisted in this that He knew more deeply than any of us his dependence. Truly could He say, "The Son can do nothing but what He seeth the Father do," and then He could also with truth say, "What things soever the Father doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise."

But death preceded resurrection. Although He had come forth from the bosom of the Father, He was made man; He was in the deepest sense the Son of Man, and that was his glory. That is why the Holy Ghost says: "What is man, that thou art mindful of him, and the Son of Man, that thou visitest Him?" The great question was, What was to become of that creation of God, which He had made in his own image. He had taken the beast of the ground, and said to man, "Have dominion." And then we know that separation came about through pride, so that, instead of walking with God, man became isolated. Then came the great mystery of godliness, God manifest in the flesh, and the first time God was ever seen in the world was in the manger at Bethlehem.

As we have been blessedly reminded, the first thirty years of Christ's life were a period of BEAUTIFUL AND GLORIOUS SERVICE.

Christ was servant all the while—filled with the Holy Ghost, as well as begotten of the Holy Ghost. The entire period of thirty years seems to have been a life of subjection to his parents, and training for his work. When He came and was baptized of John in Jordan, being apparently identified with the worst characters in the country, the testimony of God concerning Him was: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." And then the Holy Ghost came down upon Him. How? As a dove! From many prayers for the power of the Holy Ghost, it would seem as if there was some other manifestation, that would give us place, and lordship, and power, rather than learning the first lesson of obedience to the Father's will. When He had raised Lazarus from the dead, Greeks came and said: "Sirs, we would see Jesus." You remember his answer: "The hour is come, that the Son of Man should be glorified." And what was the glory? "Verily, verily, I say unto you, except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." In other words, the Divine seed was to manifest its potentiality through death; Jesus, as the seed, must die, because through death He was to bring forth much fruit. The glory of the Son of Man was not seen in Jesus of Nazareth. He was beautiful and glorious, but because his death was for others: He took up from the grave for eternal union with Himself multitudes of lost souls. The glory of the seed was seen in its manifestation when Christ came from the dead. The "fulness," the Church of God, beautiful and glorious, without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing, is the glory in manifestation. For a little while lower than the angels, in the love which He had, truly loving his neighbour as himself, He suffered death for man. Therefore, it must be that all who believe are not merely saved by Him but identified with Him.

Where is Jesus now? Where is the work of Christ now? How is He working? Do not we sometimes regard Him as an independent person, working extraneously? But what do we learn from the Epistle? "Ye are the body of Christ." Jesus has now no hands to lay on the sick, no lips to speak words of power and life, no eyes to look upon sufferers, and no feet to go on errands of mercy and might. But observe,

"YE ARE THE BODY OF CHRIST."

When Christ was raised up, "God gave Him, not merely "to be," as in the Authorised Version, but gave or constituted Him head over all things to the Church, which is his body." Not only is the Church given to Him, but He to the Church, which is "the fulness of Him that filleth all in all."

May I suggest that the subject before us should be, not "With Christ in suffering and service," but "The suffering and service of the Christ"? That is what it means to be met in the name of the Lord. It is that we should collectively and intelligently take our places as the members of that body, and say, "Here, Lord, work out thy purpose in and by thy body, according to the working of the mighty power when Thou wast raised from the dead, and didst ascend far above all principality and power." I was glad to hear the desires for intercession presented to the meeting. If there is any growth at all in us, it must be manifest in burden-bearing. A beloved saint said once to a brother, "If you cannot bear the burdens and the infirmities of the weak, you are a weak one yourself." The strength of the strong man is measured by what he can do for others, and not by what he can do for himself. If we have been brought into communion with the Lord Jesus, the relation will manifest itself in love for the sons of men.

Christ's deep humanity has been alluded to: "He came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." In the closing scene of his life He developed it more wonderfully than ever: "This is my body which is given for you." Feed upon Me—broken for you!

FEED UPON MY LIFE

—upon my suffering life, upon my risen life! He that eateth Me shall live by Me. And so it is now in this dispensation, as I understand the teaching of the Apostle: "Christ loved the Church, and gave Himself for it, that He might sanctify and cleanse it, and present it to Himself a glorious Church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing." In other words, what is He occupied about now? We say we have come here to do service to Christ, but what is the proof of our love to Him? It is not in singing hymns, not in beautiful expressions, which may be very easily used. How is it manifested then? Ah, it is in the love of his own! When the day of glory comes, He says, "Inasmuch as ye did it to one of the least of these, ye did it unto Me." Mind, it is not "one of the greatest of these," but "the least"—those in prison, of one of whom people would say, "He should not have got there: stand aloof from him, he is all wrong"; the sick, respecting one of whom it may be said, "He has a terrible disease on him; leave him alone." Yet this is ministry unto Christ Himself. "A bruised reed shall He not break, and smoking flax shall He not quench, till He send forth judgment unto victory."

Some have said that the Church of Christ is in ruins. It is not true; it is blasphemy. Can the body of Christ come to ruin? What we all want is sympathy with Him, and with one another. When the Apostle sent his message to the Church at Corinth, writing in the Holy Ghost, what was his first thought?

"GRACE TO YOU, AND PEACE."

There were plenty of evils in the Church—drunkenness at the Lord's Supper, denial of the resurrection, and terrible moral evils, but nevertheless, the Apostle's first thought was, "Grace to you and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ." Are there any discouraged ones here?—and well might some of us be discouraged. Let us thank God if we are brought down, for then "My grace is sufficient for thee." "Grace," ah! not to some of you, but to all; and "peace from God." And then He went to teaching, and what was the end of his teaching and discipline? It was to restore. He delivered such a one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord. It was not a discipline of excommunication, but of restoration. When He has lost a sheep He goes after it, and He is not going to lose one! Having closed his teaching, the Apostle says again "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ." In the second Epistle, after one who had sinned so terribly had been lately restored, he also writes: "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ"—developed in "the love of God," manifested in "the communion of the Holy Ghost." The Holy Ghost is manifest in every member, dwells in every member, so that there is one common life in every member, each and all receiving fulness from the Head, and manifesting the love and the very life of the Head. And this, not merely in occasional ministry, and a tolerance for one another, but in a LOVE EVEN UNTO DEATH!

"The good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." We also should "lay down our lives for the brethren." Christ suffers for every one of his members here upon earth; our place, if we know something of the sufferings of Christ and the glories to follow, is to maintain the obedient attitude, "Lord, here am I; send me."

We must know the power of Christ's resurrection before we can know the fellowship of his sufferings. It is only after we have been up in the heavenly places that we can come down here with Him. It is but for a little while we are to suffer. He is coming again. You know the bad servant was the one who was smiting his fellow-servants; the good one was waiting, and giving meat in due season to the household. If, in some little measure, we are ready to suffer for Christ, blessed be God, it is not suffering for Christ, but suffering with Him. There will be his tenderness and his love, yearning over, first, all his Church, and then the lost world He came to save. In a little while He will surely say: "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Summing up these thoughts, the Apostle prayed in the Holy Ghost: "The God of peace, that brought again from the dead the Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant (and we shall never be good shepherds except through the experience of his death and resurrection), perfect you in every good work, working in you that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory throughout all ages."

THURSDAY EVENING.

Serving and Suffering.

BY REV. G. F. HEAD, HAMPSTEAD.

No sooner does the Lord touch the human heart with a knowledge of Himself than the first thought is—What shall I do? You remember how with Saul of Tarsus, as soon as he was stricken down, the first cry, when the glory had filled his soul, was this—"What wilt Thou have me to do?" Very soon afterwards Saul was removed into that house in Damascus, and, though he did not hear it, the Lord had another voice about him, and He said, "Ananias, I will show him what great things he must suffer for my sake." Saul did not know it then; he knew it afterwards. And so I think it is with every child of God. As soon as ever he knows Christ the first thought is service for Him—"Lord, I must go forth and do"; and, though he may not hear it, perhaps the Lord says, "Aha! he shall do; but he must learn also something else—to suffer."

I stood the other day beside a large building on which a sculptor was at work with mallet and chisel; he chiselled away there, to carve out a beautiful form in the white stone, exactly according to the plan of the architect, and not according to his own fancy. I thought that man was preaching to me by parables, and I thought that just in the same way it is that as soon as ever we find Christ He puts into our hands the mallet and chisel and says, "Now, get to work upon my wondrous temple, and carve out that form and fashion upon those living stones which I shall teach you—not your own fancy—not according to your own ideas, nor yet according to human reason, but just go forth and carve and cut, by your influence and words, what I, by my Spirit, teach you."

THAT IS SERVICE.

Then, I thought, "Ah, but how often it is that we ourselves, instead of being sculptors, are pieces of sculpture"! We are the stones sometimes, and the Lord takes into his hands the mallet and chisel and He begins to carve. We do not always like that carving; but He is shaping us by suffering, by trial, and tribulation—by chastening in some way—is shaping us as living stones into the form in which He will have us to be in his goodly temple. When we thus look upon it as service and suffering, how sometimes we are apt to be discouraged about the service and suffering. The Lord said to Moses, when he thought the service was almost greater than he could do, and when he begged that somebody else might be sent, "Certainly I will be with thee." Then why fear service? And when we almost fear the suffering, He says, "I do not always promise to take you out of the suffering, or to remove it—to take away the chisel and mallet—but, when thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee." "I will be with thee in suffering, as well as in service." So that I want you to feel with regard to these two subjects—service and suffering—that we start first with this thought—the Lord is with us in the service, and with us in the suffering.

I want to give you two or three thoughts with regard to this subject. First, there is for any of his children. There is no buying off of ourselves, as it used to be in days of old, when someone went into the service of king and country, and then, fearing the battlefield in the war, he bought himself off. The moment we enter the service of the great King, there is no buying ourselves off. Neither is there anything like hastening away because we do not like the work. You remember how it was with Elijah. He got so much depressed about the work, and he heard what the wicked woman Jezebel said about him, that off he went to the juniper tree, and at last he arrived at the cave, and there he heard a still small voice, and the voice said, "What doest thou here, Elijah?" and the voice that echoed in his heart was, "Go back." Go back, and anoint Jehu to be king over Israel, and Hazael to be king over Israel, and Elisha to be your successor." Sometimes when you are apt to get downcast and depressed, and you say, "I shall throw up my work; I am not fit to be here and do this or that," you will soon find, if you are in the Spirit, the Lord's voice saying, "Go back," and, unless the Lord bids you give up, you have no right to go the other way. If once you put your hand to the plough of service, no man who looketh back is fit fo the service of God.

DIVERSITIES OF SERVICE.

Of course there will be diversities of service. We are not all to have the same sort of service, the same work, but divers operations of that Spirit and teaching; but as soon as my heart is given to Jesus, and my soul is washed in the precious blood, as soon as I am filled with the Holy Ghost and become his temple, then the result is that I am not my own—I am his. Paul tells us that all your members are his. There is not a member of your body, of your whole being, that is not his. Then, if He be my Master, my one thought must be, "What wilt Thou have me to do?" Not only, remember, your members, but equally your intellectual thoughts are his. We often talk about our thoughts, and we say, "I can think as I like," because nobody sees the thought; but every thought is to be brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. What is that but service with your thought?

We say in like manner, "My time is my own." "Your own!" "Yes." The day is thine, Lord, and the night is also thine—not yours. The moment that you are his, all that you have and your whole being is laid at the feet of the Master, and, if there be diversities of work and service, your question must be: "What wilt Thou have me to do?" The mother may have no other service than training her children at home. The man may have service to go forth to carry the Gospel to distant lands. The lady may have a mission to her poorer neighbours. One who is laid by may have only to learn to stand, and learn to wait. You will find that your service in Christ is perfect freedom.

You will notice that our subject says it is with Christ in service; and it is when you are closely united to Him, when you cling closely by faith, when the life of Jesus is filling your soul, then it is that the service is no hardship. You watch the birds. To-morrow as you gaze upon your lawn watch the little bird that is resting there for a moment. Watch it suddenly startled by some passing thing. See it at once spread its wings and soar up into the heavens until your eye fails to follow it in its rapidity. Those wings are at the service of the bird, and so long as the life is perfect between the wing and the bird, so long those wings, if sentient things, and if they could speak, would say: "It is perfect joy to us to do the will of the bird, and bear it upwards." The moment you have smitten those wings, the moment they are wounded, they have lost half their life, and you will soon find how the wings begin to droop; every action of them will be only pain. Then, were the wings to express themselves, they would say: "Let me lie by. Service is pain and weariness; let my action be stayed."

So is it when we are bound with Christ. Then we are the wings, and He the bird; his life ever filling us. To do his will is perfect joy and gladness. But let worldliness, indifference, or coldness, or sloth, in any way wound these wings, and soon you will find that the service becomes a burden, and you will stay your hand. God give us to realise by the teaching of the Spirit that all our strength consists in that power of the Holy Ghost, and in being filled by Him, with union of life in Him, all abiding in Him moment by moment, and then that service indeed becomes perfect freedom. With Christ it is, then, that we find we are fellow-workers with Him.

There is a second thought with regard to that service. That service

MUST NOT BE SELF-CHOSEN.

It must be no self-choice, or picking of the particular sort of service that we love, and no delegating the service that is our own to some one else. When our Lord, who was the greatest servant earth has ever seen, one concerning whom God says in the Old Testament, "Behold my Servant whom I uphold!"—when Christ was upon earth, He said, "I must work the works of Him that sent Me while it is day." Not my own works. And the one constraining master passion of that wondrous human Being, and yet God over all, Jesus Christ, was that He might finish the work the Father gave Him to do. "I can of my own self do nothing." "It is my meat and my drink to do his will, and finish his work." Like the bow which shoots forth the arrow, not at two points in the target, but at one, so his life was centred upon one master-thought, and that was to serve his Father in heaven. "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" "How was it that ye did not know my service was my Father's, and obedience to my Father's will?" Realise in the same way that there is to be no picking and choosing of our own service—refusing this, taking that, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" and, when we have realised what the Lord would have us do, let us go forth and do it just as He did it.

You remember there was a day when David thought he would plan his own service, and so he started—without prayer, you notice—for Achish, King of Gath. How difficulties at once began. What troubles gathered round him. How he drifted near to the fatal field of Gilboa, and seemed to be drawn again and again near unto that army which was going to fight against his own kith and kin.

IT IS A DANGEROUS THING

to plan your own service. You only get into difficulty. Let the Lord decide, and you will always find that you are in the right place; and you will find the work He wants you to do, and the work will fit you. The Lord never delegated work. Let us not pass over our work to other people. Let us not always feel the missionaries and the ministers are to do the work. If the Lord lays it upon us to do the work, we know He will give us the power. Let us trust in Him to guide us. And why not? Our subject speaks of being with Christ in service. We know full well how, when we are taking the service from Him, we are brought into contact with Him, not only in the service, but in hearing what the service is to be, and to render an account of what it has been. When two are betrothed, how they like to serve one another. He who by and by will be the bridegroom loves to do service for her who will be the bride, and vice versâ; not merely because the service is service of love and delight, but because again and again that very service brings the two into contact and intercourse. So it is ever the delight of the soul wrapped up in Jesus—the bride here and the Bridegroom there—not only to do what pleases Him, but to do anything that brings us into contact with Him as we work; to ask, "What wilt Thou have me to do?" or to turn back and tell Him how He has helped us in the service.

APTNESS FOR WORK.

There is a third thought with regard to this. There must be increasing aptness for work. Paul in 2 Tim. called Timothy to be "a vessel meet for the Master's use"; and he tells him he is to become so by a certain process. "Shun profane and vain babblings; follow after Christ unto godliness." He says: "Flee youthful lusts; follow righteousness," and so on. He speaks to Timothy about what we might almost call spiritual culture. He tells him to get rid of some things, and follow after others with the earnest pursuing of the hunter: that will make him a vessel meet for the Master's use.

In this service we have to attain to spiritual culture. We are not to be satisfied with mere earnestness. Earnestness in the doctor who comes to attend you is one thing; but we want not only earnestness, but culture, and skill, and the exercise of great ability. We want earnestness and devotion, but we want, also, to put away everything that will stand between us and Him. We want all his grace, and the indwelling power of the Holy Ghost, that all the spiritual power shall be brought out. It is not the babe in Christ, tossed about by every wind of doctrine—it is not this one who is fit for service. What we want is to attain to the stature of the fulness of Christ, and to be the strong man in Christ Jesus, so to be filled with Him that all graces may be brought out.

INCREASE IN THE KNOWLEDGE OF CHRIST.

This is done by growing in Christ and increasing in his knowledge. You are to add to your faith virtue, to your virtue knowledge, to your knowledge temperance, to your temperance patience, to your patience godliness, to your godliness brotherly kindness, and to your brotherly kindness love. All this is spiritual culture; and you are to be ever on the watch, by prayer and by study of his Word, and resting in Him for the fulness of the power of the Holy Ghost to bring forth fruit, that you may rest with Him and in the power He may put in you. What you have to do is the work He gives, that you may be used to the uttermost, all his power in you, and that nothing in you shall keep back the service He would have you render.

To change the metaphor for one moment from the vessel to the sword. What did our warriors think in a recent campaign of the swords that were put into their hands? They were of the wrong metal, and therefore they gave way. Take care, before we touch his service, that we are of the right metal; full of the Spirit, and resting in Jesus. Then, if we are full of the Spirit of God and we are of the right metal, let us go to Him continually to ask Him to fashion the sword so that it may be fit for his work and to do his service according to his will.

We must just have Jesus with us in all this. We must sit at his feet. We must ask Him to take the vessel and fit it; and take us as pupils, whilst He is the Master. Thus fitting us we are again brought in contact with Him, and so we get the blessing. These three thoughts I want to bring before you with regard to the service.

ALL THE CHILDREN CHASTENED.

Let us take three thoughts with regard to the suffering: "If so be that we suffer with Him." First of all, there is no immunity from suffering for any child of God. "As many as I love I rebuke and chasten." There will be no immunity from it, and then we shall all know what it is to suffer—being tempted. There is no sin in temptation. Christ was tempted in the world. What we shall do is to suffer—being tempted. He suffered in seeing the guilt of men. Not only did He see what was in the Sadducee and in the Pharisee, but He saw the further corruption within. He suffered on all sides. He suffered in bearing the sins of men. In the manner of being brought into contact with sin, we suffer as He suffered; though we shall never know what He bore in bearing our sins. Paul longed that he might be so made a partaker of the resurrection life of Christ that he might know the fellowship of his sufferings; that he might have a soul so filled with the Spirit of God that he might become in some measure as sensitive as the spotless soul of Jesus Christ. Are we willing for that? We must get very near to Jesus if we are.

DEMANDED SACRIFICE.

We shall also suffer from a demanded sacrifice. God came to Abraham, and demanded Isaac. He may come and ask a child from you; he may ask gifts from you. If He does, you will suffer in your human nature; but what matters, if He calls you to it? Or, you will suffer in the esteem of the world for your bold confession of Jesus Christ. That is part of the suffering. The world loves the spiritual life no more now than it did in the days of the Saviour; the world loves the spiritual life to be put on one side, and have a mere form in its place. If you dare to come out, you will soon find that the world questions your position, and will, sooner or later, cross your pathway. What does it matter? The three Hebrew youths, when cast into the fiery furnace, knew what suffering was, and I daresay in the midst of it all they suffered; but, as soon as they entered that furnace, made seven times hotter than it was wont to be heated, He was there—Jesus. I do not suppose they saw Him outside; but, the moment they got into the suffering, there He was, and He never left them till they came forth from that fire so unscathed that the smell of burning was not upon their garments.

You will find in the same way that there is no immunity from suffering for any child of God. But, when you come into the suffering, you will always find there is one, and the form is like unto that of the Son of Man, and He will uphold you.

PURIFIED BY FIRE.

You know that there are certain things that you may sketch upon paper; and when you have put the fairest sketch upon paper you may place it near a fire, and it all disappears. It is withered up, for the heat of the fire has destroyed it utterly. But there are certain substances on which you may sketch, and when thrown into the furnace the very heat will only so fasten that beautiful sketch upon that substance, that when you take it forth it is more beautiful than ever. So it is with our Lord and Master. He again and again thrusts us into the flame. When brought into contact with suffering how it seems to wither up the unconverted man and take all the life out of him. But when the one filled with the Spirit of Christ is thrown into the flame, he comes forth and finds the form of Jesus Christ; comes forth with more perfect beauty graven upon his face; and comes forth to reflect it, for the furnace has only brought him more to the likeness of Christ.

NO SELF-CHOSEN SUFFERING.

Let us understand that there must be no self-chosen suffering. There are many who choose their own crosses; then they wonder the cross does not fit. The cross I want to have is my Master's cross. I can fancy how Simeon when he went behind with his cross, Jesus bore a part of it. If I can only have a cross that He has helped to bear. Let me take care all the suffering is sent by Him. You remember how Miriam went in a fit of impatience to Moses because of the woman he had chosen to be his wife. Leprosy came unto her. That was suffering, not for righteousness' sake, but as the result of her own bad temper. When Uzziah pressed his way into the holiest of all and wanted to offer incense, and when the leprosy came upon his brow, it was not suffering for righteousness' sake when he had to dwell in that house apart: it was his own presumption. Let us in our suffering never indulge temper, or worldliness, or sin of any kind. We have no right to say we are suffering for righteousness' sake, but let us take all these, and let the Lord send trouble or sorrow, and then we shall find out his will. With Him in the suffering we need not fear. He will choose it well, because He knows what we are.

BURNING UP THE DROSS.

Let us ask that we may be clothed with aptness to bear suffering. One of the first results of suffering is just that. When you cast metal into the furnace it separates the dross which rises. Then, an outside hand is put down to take it away, and the beautiful and refined gold flows forth. So it is with suffering in trial. It makes the dross rise to the surface. We never know what is in the heart until we begin to suffer. If the Lord Jesus Christ takes away that dross, then we are brought into contact with Him, and the more we go to Him and ask that we may be blessed in Him, the more we shall find that we are able to know the way of suffering so that we may glorify his name; and then we must ask that we may be able to suffer, and suffer as He suffered for the joy set before Him. He knew that a day was coming when a purified Church should stand before him, when the cross should have finished its wondrous work. Let us suffer in that fashion. Let us ask for faith ever to be eager, growing stronger and stronger, and love binding Him to us continually; and then, as these increase, we shall find we are growing in aptness to bear the suffering, and glorify Him, and feel that the afterwards is coming when all his former chastening will only add to the blessing of those that are exercised thereby.

When the disciples were in the little boat crossing the sea, and that mighty storm swept down upon them, He was with them in the service and in the suffering. Standing upon the prow of that little boat, he hushed the storm, and bade the waves be still. Oh! the joy of having Him with us to still the storm and stay the tempest. But there is another side. When he was in Gethsemane, He was in the service and in the suffering, and they were asleep. But they were with Him, as it were, in his suffering and in his service. Sometimes he is in suffering and in service in this world. He has his children here, unknown, poor, suffering, tried, tempted ones; and remember he says, "I was naked, and ye clothed me; sick and in prison, and ye visited me." Just realise what suffering in the persons of his children is, and He asks you to minister to them. There is his service. There is his suffering on all sides of you, and you come to listen to the words sent to you by the Spirit. Go back to your homes, and when you do so remember the suffering, and how he bids you minister to all these weak and tempted ones; you will be with Him if you are his child in such service and in such suffering.

What will you do? Will you be, as the disciples, asleep when He comes for the sympathy He claims? Will you thus let Him continue in service and suffering, whilst you are resting in idleness? No, no; awake to the work He has given you to do, and the blessed service He lays upon you, and to the power you have to go forth and to be used by Him. Awake, when you see the weary and tried and tempted ones, and go forth and minister to them, and you shall find, by and by, with regard to that view, you shall hear Him say, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

Following Christ in Service.

BY REV. H. SINCLAIR PATERSON, M.D.

"Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." "By one offence the judgment came upon all men unto condemnation." "In Adam all die." "Without shedding of blood there is no remission." "If the blood of bulls and of goats sanctifieth to the cleansing of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God." "For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us." Do we understand the preciousness of the death of the Lord Jesus, as viewed by the Father? I know the preciousness of it to me; but do we understand in any measure the preciousness of it as viewed by the Father? Unless Jesus had lived and died, God's will had never been done on earth; unless He had lived and died, the glory of God had never been seen in this world, which in the beginning He created. What was God's law? "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy soul, with all thy strength, with all thy mind, and thy neighbour as thyself." Where do I see that law fulfilled? On the cross! There Jesus loved God with all his soul, and heart, and strength, and mind, and He offered Himself there without spot to God. "Therefore doth my Father love me because I lay down my life that I may take it again. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it up. This commandment have I received from my Father." There, on that cross, we see love to man as we see it nowhere else. "He loved me, and gave Himself for me." "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." "Peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die"; but He loved his enemies, those who were without strength, haters of God, and He gave Himself for them. The two tables of law shine out illustriously in their fullest fulfilment on the cross of the Lord Jesus Christ; and, therefore, we come to this death, we consent to this death, we accept Him as our representative, and He for us endures the cross, drinks the cup of wrath put into his hands by his own loving Father, when He loved Him most; for He never loved Him more than when there He hung, offering Himself as the sacrifice, according to the will of God, to bring back lost ones to the Father's home.

AND THERE I DIE WITH CHRIST.

That dead Christ stands for me; that buried Christ stands for me. My life ends where his ends; and, thank God, my life begins when He rises again on the third day, and my service commences with that risen life. "In that He died, He died unto sin once." Never did He die to sin within Himself. It was our sin, for He had no sin of his own for which to suffer. Therefore, by the blood of Jesus we come into the Holy of Holies, and there we are privileged, sinful though we be in ourselves, to stand, always ministering in the Holiest, always serving in that place where no sin can come, because we are accepted in the Beloved. We walk in the very light of God's presence. Why? Because there is the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, which cleanseth from all sin; and where the blood is, I, though a sinner, believing in Jesus, may dare to stand, and there I may venture to serve, for now our strength is the strength of God. We minister not of earth's riches, nor of earth's fulness or might, but in heavenly places, with heavenly grace, endowed with heavenly riches and Divine strength. "Without Him I can do nothing; I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me."

Mark you, all God's servants are called of God: "Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should bring forth much fruit." We have not become democratic enough, even in these times, to make servants choose their own masters. In worldly things, masters choose their own servants; and in Divine things God chooses his servants. And we have no right and no power to serve Him, unless God Himself has called us to his service, as well as to his eternal glory by Jesus Christ our Lord. We are sanctified and separated for this service by the blood. You remember we read this morning that when Moses had read all the words of the Book in the hearing of the people, he sprinkled both the book and the people with blood; and elsewhere we read that the sanctuary was sprinkled with blood. Holiness and sin are separate, and death separates them; and blood, the sign of death, is needed before anyone who stands on the ground of sin can pass over to the ground of holiness. Even on earth, the earthly things had to be purified by the touch of blood, and the heavenly places are purified, not by the blood of calves and goats, but by the blood of Jesus; and we can come to Him through his death, and

SERVE HIM THROUGH HIS DEATH.

—not otherwise. We must never forget that it is only through Him, who was dead and is alive for evermore, that we can venture to serve the living God. And yet in Him we may have boldness of access—ay, for it glorifies Him, it shows what we think of Him, and we cannot think of Him too highly. We glorify the Father in proportion as we glorify the Son, for the Son is the Father's love-gift to his lost world. "Herein is love; not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and"—saved us?—nay, "gave his Son to be a propitiation for our sin." With reverence be it spoken--God Himself could not save us without the propitiation; but He gives the propitiation needful for sin. His love does not hold it back, though it means the cross and shame and death of his only Beloved Son.

Beginning there, where all true service must begin, let us see to it that we follow Christ into the place where He would have us serve. I am afraid sometimes that we do not give enough thought to this. Where is the place of the Church's service during this dispensation? Not on the throne, not in the high places of the world, not among the wealthy, those who have worldly praise and honour; it is a service in humiliation, outside the camp, bearing the cross, esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt. That should be our aim—not to have the praise or esteem of our fellowmen, but to be in dishonour and apparent defeat, to be outside and counted as the offscouring of all things for Jesus' sake. Lowliness and meekness—these are our doctrines; and we are not in the right place for service unless we are conformed to the likeness of the Lord Jesus. And his work is varied.

It would take us a very long time to exhaust the possibilities of service and describe them in minute detail. There are, however, these three features connected with it:—

WITNESSING, WORKING, WAITING.

I will briefly call your attention to one or two of these features. In the first place we have witnessing. How simple it was at the beginning. "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me, both in Jerusalem and Judæa and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth"—nothing else, and nothing other than bearing witness. "We saw Him; we saw Him die, or know that He died, upon the cross; we looked upon Him after He was risen from the tomb; we tell you that Jesus, who died for our sin, was buried, was raised again the third day according to the Scripture"—that is an epitome of the testimony the Apostles brought, and God was with them everywhere confirming their words by signs following. Just so we preach the Gospel of the blessed God still. The only thing that brings men to God and makes them new creatures is the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and to-day we ought to repeat what a greater than any of us once said: "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth." We have no other Gospel; we do not believe that anything else can bring men from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God. But wherever it is faithfully preached, it has this result. Although the circumstances be humble, and the preacher lowly, this Gospel, brought to bear upon men's hearts, does turn them to God.

When I speak of witnessing, I do not mean that kind of witness borne in the first instance by the Apostles—I speak mainly here of the witness of a quiet, patient, godly life; and I say there is more done by this than men think. An applicant for communion was asked by a minister, "Under whose preaching were you converted?" "Under nobody's," was the reply; "I was converted under my mother's practice." There are a great many who are converted in this way. Let me give you an instance from America. On a certain occasion a minister there resolved, for the benefit of a lawyer in his congregation who had a very 'cute intellect, and was willing to look into the evidences of Christianity, to preach a series of sermons specially intended to reach his heart and touch his conscience. He did so, and, doubtless, very able sermons they were and at the conclusion of the series this lawyer called on him, was shown into his study, and there told him that he was exceedingly anxious to know the Lord Jesus and to love Him. The minister asked, "Which of my sermons was it that touched your heart?" "Not one of them," was the answer; "it was a poor coloured woman in your church, who, going out at the conclusion of the service, stumbled, and would have fallen had I not stepped forward and prevented her. She looked up into my face, and said with a sweet smile, 'Do you love my glorious Saviour? I hope you do.' It touched my heart as she spoke of her glorious Saviour, and the joy that shone out in her face as she said it brought me to think what I was missing, and that has brought me here."

ADORNING THE DOCTRINE.

"When we think we are least observed," says the poet Cowper, "often we are most observed." In one place in the New Testament I read about adorning the doctrine of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. What! Paint a lily; cast a perfume on the violet; adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour! Yes! and those who were to adorn it were to do it by showing all good fidelity; and I have no doubt many Christian slaves win their masters and mistresses to Christ by their strict obedience, singleness of eye, and thoroughness of service. There is no position in which we cannot witness for Christ, and the best witness for Christ is the witness of a holy and fragrant life—a life that is a continuation of his; a life that is ministered unto by his Holy Spirit sent down from above. Every Christian is, or ought to be, a witness for Christ.

I will go further, and say every Christian is a witness for Christ. I do not say everyone is a good witness; I do not say any of us are good witnesses; but we are all witnesses for Christ, and it rests upon us as a very grave responsibility that we give true and full and striking testimony unto the grace that is in Him. I am quite sure that if all the witnesses for Christ were witnessing as they ought to do, and as they might do—for vigour in bearing testimony lies with us; it does not come through grace—if we were true witnesses, everyone of us loving Christ to the full extent of our power, we would do more to convince the world of sin, and bring it to a right mind, than all the sermons and lectures that could possibly be preached. It is by the living witness that the truth is brought most effectively home to any heart. You can argue against logic, and you can speak against eloquence, and have counsel to plead on one side or another, but there is

NO ARGUMENT AGAINST A HOLY LIFE.

It tells of communion with heaven, and it is an argument no one can confute. It was said by one who had from infidelity been brought to know the truth—"There was one argument I never could get over and that was the holy, consistent life of my own father." If Christians had hard, solid arguments of this kind, they would put infidelity to silence.

Then I spoke of working. There are varieties of work; but I fear in these times we need to be reminded that all these varieties come under one class. What is the great work to be done during this dispensation? To call out a people from the Gentiles unto Christ's name. I do not want to be offensive, I do not want even to be critical, but a great deal of what passes as Christian work in the present day is not calling out a people unto the name of God. I have nothing to say against endeavours to better man's condition in the world, but that is not God's purpose here and now. His purpose here and now is to call sinners to Christ, and if we are Christian workers we are following out his plan and co-operating in the accomplishment of his purpose. Christian ministers and Christian people are wasting their golden opportunity when they are dealing with social and a thousand other questions, and forgetting to press home always and altogether the claims of the Lord Jesus Christ.

There is a grand controversy between God and this world, and that controversy is raised by the cross. If you come to it and say, "I accept this as the atonement provided of God for me," then God shelters you under the blood; but if you refuse it, then the guilt of that murder attaches to you, and God will come again, and miserably destroy those wicked men who would not have his Son to reign over them. God has that controversy to settle with the world, and therefore He calls us out of the world, to be separated from it, in order that we may go into the world as Jesus came. We cannot go into the world safely unless we go into it with the love that God has in our own hearts. If you love God after this fashion, and hate sin, and are anxious to save your fellowmen from sin, then you can serve; but in all working, the one thing is to exalt Christ—to preach Christ. Only by holding up Christ and setting Him forth can we win souls from death to life. All our working is comprised in that.

And then, as to the manner of work. I am not going to criticise methods, though I think many of them are foolish and unwise, and defeat their own purpose.

OUR METHODS MUST BE SCRIPTURAL.

We must be guided and governed by the will of our own Master. It is not for the servant to work in his own way; he has to confine himself to the method prescribed by the Master, and we have no right to get outside the line in which Christ has indicated his work is to be done. If we were to get back to Apostolic times and Apostolic methods, we might have an Apostolic success. Where Christ does not occupy the one central place, I expect no service, because I expect no life. There will be no saving of men's souls, and no real work done that will stand the fire when God in judgment comes to examine us all. Walking with Christ, we must be where Christ places us, engaged in the service Christ appoints; and we must be doing it in the appointed way. Walking thus, we may expect a blessing from Him. But, mark you, even when we do our best and are in the right place, keeping strictly to the Master's injunction, there is another power needed, or there can be no result. Need I say that power is the power of the Holy Ghost? "Ye are manifestly declared to be the epistles of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the Holy Ghost." Write without Him, and your writing will not remain. Write without the Holy Ghost, and you do not produce the lineaments of the Holy Ghost in a single soul. You may have all the biblical learning possible for any man to possess; you may have the zeal and earnestness of an apostle, but if the Holy Ghost be not with you, your labour is in vain. Brethren, we need prayer in these times.

WE NEED EMPTINESS.

God needs our emptiness, and God needs our weakness, that "the excellency of the power may be seen to be of God and not of man." We must become weak in order that we may be strong. I know what learning is doing in some churches. The zeal of our learning is not according to God. They tell us across the border, and they tell us on the Continent, that six or seven men joined at different times in constructing the Pentateuch, and that these men acted so cleverly that they deceived the whole Church of God for 1800 years. But now they have found out that they acted clumsily. I take my stand on the Bible. I believe what Jesus Christ believed, and I would rather err with Him than—what shall I say?—be honoured and applauded as a great scholar by the whole scholarship of the Continent of Europe. And this is a practical matter—much more so than many of us think; for if this Book from cover to cover is not inspired, how can I serve? Where am I to look for direction? Am I to pick and choose in the different parts of the volume, and by my own judgment accept or reject what I think proper?

Our position is clear, and I hold it to be incontrovertible. If we maintain the inspiration of God's Word from beginning to end, we can defend it as it has been defended all these eighteen centuries. The Word of God is the sword of the Spirit. If the Holy Ghost has come down from heaven to earth to touch souls, to quicken them, to bring them to God, what can He use? A Divine being will not use human words. A Divine being must have a Divine Book, and He prepared it that He might have it ready to his hand. We have the Holy Spirit teaching us in this Word of God, and by means of it we are united to the Lord Jesus Christ, and in Him we have fulness of grace for service and for suffering.

FRIDAY MORNING, JUNE 28.

With Christ: In Glory.

Chairman's Remarks.

TURNING to the Song of Solomon, the Chairman spoke of the love of Christ for his people. Before our enjoyment, comes the enjoyment of the Lord Himself. In Rev. iii. 20, we first read "I will sup with Him," and then it is added, "and he with Me." We have been thinking much, and naturally—I would say spiritually—of our own profit and our own enjoyment, and we have certainly had it. Have we thought as much as we might of the Lord's delight at this Conference? How pleasant it is to think that He is with us here; though invisible to the natural eye, yet discerned by our faith. May that presence solemnise every heart, and make us careful what we say and do. In verse seven of this chapter of the Song, the bridegroom says: "Thou art fair, my love; there is no spot in thee." This is inconceivable to nature, to human imagination, but it is true of those who are "washed clean and white." Having read succeeding verses, the speaker said: How fragrant a thing is love! How sweet it is in the family and in the Church, but it is sweeter than anything to Christ. Not one look or thought of love have we ever taken to Him, apart from his inspiring grace and indwelling power.

Having concluded the chapter, the speaker said: The Lord commands the blessing, and as we have asked, we have received. He has given us the Holy Ghost.

Every virtue we possess,
And every victory won,
And every thought of holiness,
Are his alone.

We should be careful to seek his enjoyment, that He may make Himself at home in his church, delight Himself in his garden. "Let my beloved come into his garden." He is here with us; as He said to Daniel, "I am come for thy words." He has been having his enjoyment; it has been a communion time. How wonderful He should get anything sweet out of such a people as we are! May we to-day, with the Holy Spirit's aid, find his truth sweet to our taste.

Glory Here and Hereafter.

BY REV. GEO. WILSON, EDINBURGH.

We are met for conference on this great theme "With Christ in Glory." In opening the Conference on this aspect of the truth, I desire to point out the wide and radical distinction between the life in Christ that now is, and the life in Christ that is to come. There is a great distinction, but it is one of degree more than one of kind. We do not go to heaven to find God; we go to God to find heaven. We do not go to heaven to be saved; we go to heaven because we are saved. Therefore, there must be a terrestrial glory of this life in Christ as well as the celestial glory. Sanctification, it has been said, is glory begun, and glory is sanctification completed. We see now, doubtless, through a glass and dimly; then we shall see face to face. Let us, however, not neglect to study the glory in the mirror, while waiting and expecting the face-to-face glory to come. I shall try to speak a simple and helpful word on these two aspects of this subject. First, with Christ in the glory of the present life; second, with Christ in the glory of the life which is to come.

THE GLORY OF SONSHIP.

We find, in opening this subject, that the foundation of it all lies in this beautiful text: "The glory which Thou gavest Me I have given them." Therefore, they are in a sense glorified even now. And this is spoken of all believers in the Lord. What is the glory that Christ enjoyed?—because that is the glory that we enjoy. If we can find out wherein consisted Christ's essential glory, then we shall apprehend at once what our glory is.

We are here on the broad lines of unifying truth, therefore we shall not trouble to draw any subtle and sharp distinction; but is not this broadly written on the page of Scripture, along the whole drift and line of revelation—that the glory which Christ enjoyed was the glory of sonship?

Angels o'er the cradle sang
The glory of the Son.

He knelt on the green banks of the Jordan, and the Dove descended, and the voice said: "This is my Beloved Son." He was taken up to the Mount of Transfiguration, and we have the definition of the transfiguration from the lips of the Father: "This is my Beloved Son; hear ye Him." And then He says Himself: "Father, I leave the administration of my last will and testament in your hands. This is my will, that those whom Thou hast given Me may be with Me where I am, that they may behold my glory which Thou hast given Me." What is it? "For Thou lovedst Me before the foundation of the world." This is the essential glory of Christ—the glory of Sonship.

AN INCOMMUNICABLE GLORY.

I want to say only two things about this. In the first place, the Beloved Son speaks of a glory I can only adore, but cannot share. The interrelation of love tells more than any other thought about the inner relations of the glorious Trinity. God was everlastingly love; therefore He had everlastingly something to love. That kind of sonship is not, and cannot be, ours. At the highest—and is it not high enough for us?—we are but redeemed men; we are not God. Let us, before this profound and blessed mystery, bow and say: "Thank God for the revelation of the Beloved Son."

But there is a sonship we can share. Christ was the Beloved Son, and is the Beloved Son, not only as the second person of the glorious Trinity, but as the Redeemer of man. In the passage I have already quoted, there is the most marvellous identity, bringing out the second thing I wish to say about this sonship. It is mutual. He is the Well-beloved Son, but there is also the Well-beloved Father. The Father loves the Son, and the Son loves the Father. There is a mystery of the fatherly love, and a mystery of the filial love. It was the union of the two that made up the glory of Christ as the Redeemer and the Son of God.

IDENTITY WITH CHRIST.

Now here is our identity in Christ's mutual love. He asks the Father first that He may be identified with his followers: "Father, I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it: that the love wherewith Thou hast loved Me may be in them." As if He had said: "I want you to identify them all with Me in thy fatherly love." And then He adds the other identity: "I in Thee." "Be to them, O Father, as Thou art to Me." That is one side of it. And the other side is: "Let them be to Thee, O Father, as I am to Thee." Glorious identity of blessed sonship.

But there is an element that I must mention, in this love between the Father and the Son, and between the Son and the Father. "O righteous Father, the world hath not known Thee." It is a righteous love. It is a love moving from God towards man through sacrifice, through blood, through satisfaction, through all the glorious provision of atonement that makes it such a worthy love; this love going forth, and law consenting to its going forth, and the righteousness of God consenting to its going forth. So it is a love from Christ, and from us through Christ, passing back into the Father through the same channels of eternal righteousness—the atonement wrought out by Christ.

A NEEDED GOSPEL.

Is not this Gospel needed in the present day? The world does not know the righteous Father. The world is preaching a travesty of the righteous Father's love. The world is leading the world astray by perverting the Father's love. Let us never separate this sonship from its righteous element. You never need doubt the Father's love to you, but there is the question: What about the filial love in your heart? We talk "cheaply," as the colloquial phrase has it, about the love of God. What of that cold heart of yours towards God, as the Father in Jesus Christ? If this Mildmay Conference contributes to our spiritual growth, it will be in the discovery of the coldness, the icy nature of these hearts of ours towards the Lord. How may they grow warm? How do you trust Him? By seeing his trustworthiness. How do you love Him? I would not say by seeing his loveliness, but by drinking of it. Open these hearts, and you will find a response going back from that love that flows in. Filial love—that is the glory. "Now are we the sons of God"—that is the beginning of glory to us. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when He shall appear, we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is." Now in a glass; then face to face we shall realise this blessed sonship.

THE DIVINE PURPOSE.

There is another point. With Christ in the glory of this love means that I am in the glory of his Divine purpose. Here we enter into affinity with Christ in his great purpose of saving the world. If I should presume to utter one single warning about this Conference, it would be that I think we have had enough, almost enough, about the saving of ourselves. We want, I think, to hear a good deal more about the saving of others—about Christ's great saving purpose.

If I might make a suggestion, I would tell you what is the next conference you ought to attend. You ought to attend it even before Keswick; for Keswick will be all the sweeter if you are going to this conference first. It is to go and have a conference with a lost soul for its salvation. I would say that is one of the most blessed exercises in the higher Christian life. If each of the three thousand of you were to go and sit down beside one lost soul, we might have a Pentecost before the sun goes down to-night. We would have the exact Pentecostal number. Would not that be a blessed result of the Mildmay Conference, and the best proof of our identity in that great saving purpose of Jesus Christ?

SEEING AND SEEKING.

How are we to get into this identity? I think there are only two things in that purpose: we must see things as Christ sees them, and then we must seek the things which Christ seeks.

I remember an artist who took a friend like myself, having no great artistic aptitude, to see a lovely landscape. He pointed to the formation of the landscape. He pointed out how nature and man had thrown it into a most beautiful harmony of form. Then he pointed out how God and nature had painted it with the most lovely colours, all in perfect harmony. The artist was standing with enraptured gaze, and he said to his friend: "What do you think of it?" "I do not see much in it," was the reply. Then the artist turned and said: "Don't you wish you could see it?"

Ah! I wish we could see the world as Christ sees it. I wish we could see London and Edinburgh as Christ sees them; and could see, India, Africa, China, as Christ sees them. If we only had that vision as He has it, we should be brought into sympathy with his great saving purpose. Then the moment we saw it with Him, we should seek the same thing.

The times are waxing late. Time is passing away. I never come to Mildmay without feeling this. Dear Dr. Horatius Bonar, who used to stand beside me here, the father and guide of my ministry, will never be here again. Your place and mine will soon be empty. Let us be in loving alliance and identity with the glory of Christ's saving purpose to save the world. Then we will not have time to think very much of the glory that is to follow. And God when He comes to receive us to his glory will find us doing his blessed will.

CHRIST'S SAVING POWER.

One thought more on this head. With Christ in glory means with Him in the glory of his saving power. We have it on two very simple grounds. We have it in the first place by standing true to the truth as it is in Jesus Christ. I fear that sometimes we are led astray a little in speaking about the power of the blessed Spirit of God—the Holy Ghost. I believe in the Holy Ghost. But as Christ the executive of the Father became the Father's organ through incarnation, so the Holy Ghost becomes the power in Christ's kingdom by taking of Christ and the things of Christ, and working through them the accomplishment of the salvation of men. Let us try to get in that organ through which the Spirit of God will work in the carrying on of his kingdom. He has bound Himself to take of the things that are Christ's and show them unto the souls of men, but He has not bound Himself to take of the things that are ours.

In the garden yesterday, a minister laid his hand on my shoulder and said, "Is it not a wonder we have so few conversions under our ministry?" I said, "It is a wonder we have so many, when so much is preached of everything else, and so little is preached of Christ, the power of God unto salvation." Brethren, stand by these three things—by your righteous sonship in Jesus Christ; by the great purpose of Christ in saving the world; and by Christ's appointed power. Thus will a glory come to your life, a glory that is unspeakable, because it is the glory of Christ Himself.

ACROSS THE BORDER.

Now let us for a moment, in reverence and gladness, go across the border. The glory begins here, but it does not end here. We are not here at this time to study what is called dispensational truth; than which there can be no more blessed study for a child of God. We are here on broad lines, dwelling on the things on which we all agree; surely they are much greater than the things on which we may possibly differ. Therefore, I only go across the border from the terrestrial into the celestial, and take hold of some of those great characteristics of the glory beyond, for which all our songs of praise may rise before the Lord. One can scarcely speak of this.

May I draw another distinction between this and that—between the here and the there. Here it is invisible; there it is visible. Here it is in faith; there it is in sight. And surely no lips that are not reverent dare speak of these visible manifestations of glory in the life that is to come. I will only mention three. With Christ in the glory of

HIS VISIBLE APPEARING.

Let us read from Matt. xxv. one verse, and let us read it with Christ now. We have there a broad and blessed truth: "The Son of Man shall come in his glory, and the holy angels with Him. Then shall He sit upon the throne of his glory." Go to Acts, where that same blessed passage is repeated: "This same Jesus, whom ye have seen go up into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." Go to Thessalonians: "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him."

What does this appearing mean? How can our poor human hearts bear the brilliancy of this hope? It means the rising from the dead; the completion of the personality of all believers. It means Christ's victory over death. It means the singing of the song: Death is swallowed up in victory. Oh death, where is thy sting, oh grave, where is thy victory? This seems to me the great broad fact lying on the page of Scripture—Jesus is coming again. And in his appearing we shall be with Him in the glory of it.

Another truth: with Christ in the glory of

HIS VISIBLE KINGDOM.

Read, with Him close beside you, and knowing your union with Him, Revelation vii. 9. And read it gladly, for it is something to enrapture the heart of the Christian. It tells of the kingdom consolidated, the kingdom established, the kingdom gathered in. And what is that kingdom? "I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and peoples, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed in white robes, and with palms in their hands." Oh, blinded Israel, my hope for thee culminates here! Poor polluted sinner, yet in the elective love of the Lord Jesus Christ, my hope for thee culminates here! A kingdom consolidated, established and visible, and we there with Christ!

Lastly, and in a word: with Christ in the glory of

HIS VISIBLE DOMINION.

Dr. Arnold used to say that he read the Pilgrim's Progress once every year; and he never could read, without being overcome, that scene where the pilgrims go up to the gate of the celestial city. He read it always through the lenses of adoring tears. Much more may we say that the opening verse of this 21st of Revelation is too much even for our reading. "I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away, and there was no more sea. And I, John, saw the holy city, the new Jerusalem, come down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away. And He that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new." O God, help thy children to bear thy light; help them to bear this blessed hope of being there in the crowning day of Jesus.

TWO RESULTS.

If I have been speaking to you in the realm of fact, and about the truth of God, there are two things that must follow. If this is broadly true—and I trust I have been honouring the Word of God in these simple sentences—there must be on your part and mine a complete and entire effacement of all self-glory. I was thankful that God's servant in the chair led us to Christ's glory and not to our own. I never want to think about my own glory. I want my crown of gold to hang where the crown of gold hangs in the allegory of Bunyan, over the faithful minister's head, so that he cannot see it. I do not want to see my crown, but I want to see my Saviour's crown, and in order to this there must be the perfect effacement of all self-glory. I do not know what you are, but I know that I need great improvement in that direction. God be praised if you do not need it; but I do want to carry away this from Mildmay above all things: that I shall have a perfect and complete effacement of self-glory. The other thing will have to come before that. If you are to have this, you must get a complete

SUPPRESSION OF THE SELF-LIFE.

We in Scotland get the credit of being argumentative, of being able to persuade ourselves of things. I will tell you what I have tried to do with all the logic in my power, and I have failed—and that is to persuade my own old self that it is utterly dead. It won't believe it. Oh, there is the secret of self-glory. It is when self has not been put under Christ completely, crucified with Him and buried with Him, and under the power of his Holy Spirit, that self-glory con in. It never comes from the new nature. Christ make you what He wills to make y and then manifest what you are. Here is cleavage line between us and the world. world comes and says, "You may make yo self what you ought to be." And it is going trying to do that; poor deluded world! it making the thing worse and worse. Chris principle is not, "Make yourself what you oug to be," but, "Manifest what you are." Live w Christ in the glory—the glory of redempt and the glory of the life to come. Go aw living out this: "Heirs of God, and joint-he with Christ."

Walking with Christ.

By Rev. J. B. FIGGIS, Brighton.

With Christ in glory! Nay, with Christ glory! What is the chief characteristic heaven? Robert Hall, with his life of sufferi might well be excused when he answer "Rest"; William Wilberforce, with his life effort for the enslaved, might well be excus when he answered, "Love"; but I almost thi that if William Pennefather had been ask the question, he would have answered, "Be with Christ." At all events, I know that Pa answered, "With Christ, which is far better that John answered, "With Him went t hundred and forty-four thousand"; and th the Lord Jesus Christ Himself answer "They shall walk with Me in white, for th are worthy." Turn and read the words, Rev. iii. 4: "Thou hast a few names even Sardis, which have not defiled their garmen and they shall walk with Me in white, for th are worthy." "Many promises in one her says Trench. "There is the promise of li for the dead do not walk; and of liberty, the fast bound do not walk." But he forgot say that there is the promise of society, a that surely is the best promise of all.

I recollect, when I was a child, what a and honour it was when my father, in the mi of a busy life, on one of the rare holidays he to or oftener early in the day, when the lark w singing his matins in the sky, would say to m "Come and let us go for a walk together." the Lord Jesus says to you and me, with swe promises of the heavenly fields and the ev lasting hills, "They shall walk with M This is society that will be full of rapture the heart. What does the lover desire like t presence of his beloved? And what can fill with joy and gladness like the presence of King? It will be full of teaching for the mi The very secrets of the universe and th revelation may lie in this promise: "Th shall walk with Me." We can have no part the days of Christ's flesh, but we will not en the Nathanaels and the Philips.

WE MAY HAVE OUR GALILEE,

but it will be by the Sea of Glass, and not t sea of Gennesaret. We will not envy Ma and Martha; we, too, may have our Bethan but it will be one where there will be no dang that we shall have to lose and to miss a broth beloved. We will not envy even Peter and Jam and John; we too shall have a garden and upper room, but it will be the garden of t Lord, and the room of the palace ever bu "still upward." Oh, what teachings there w be when, as Rev. viii. 17 says—look at it in t Revised Version—"the Lamb that is in t midst of the throne shall be their shephe and shall guide them unto fountains of wate of life." Oh, what leading! What swe and wonderful society! Think of its effe on character. We catch the actions a habits of our friends; yea, even their loo are reflected in us at times. And so, "wh we shall see Him, we shall be like Him." C blessed likeness—like Him who is the likene the Eternal Father, who is the embodiment all holiness. Well, you say, then the Christian e in heaven is but the continuation of the ristian life on earth. It is that, but with a orious difference. The Christian life on rth is Christ with us; the Christian life in aven is for us to be with Christ.

The one is the life of a poor suffering lad, a eakly cripple from his birth, who, though ving on a hard crust in a garret, is nevertheless ppy, because a princely friend deigns to share s lot in life. Life in heaven is that of the me cripple removed to the palace, to share e joy and honour of his princely friend; e is able to throw away his crutches and joy dainties the rarest and the best. Christ very near and dear to us in this life, but e is invisible; when, however, He rends e veil and scatters the mist, He becomes sible. Yet as to the cripple the palace were othing except for the friend whose presence ade it joyous; so heaven were no heaven to e Christian without the Lord Christ. First en through a glass darkly, the Saviour is terwards beheld face to face by the redeemed nd glorified sinner.

WE WOULD SEE JESUS.

So we need not talk about the palms, or e crowns, or the harps, or "the land of the al," for we want not the casket but the jewel. nd Jesus says: You may, you shall "walk ith Me." Ah, methinks this is the first alk worthy of the name that some of od's children have ever had. There are ose who are alone, and those who are d, those who are depending upon a terrible ruggle for their daily bread. Such have o time for a walk; never mind: "They hall walk with Me," says Jesus. And there re you who are toiling, and toiling hard, loughing, and seemingly ploughing the rock, your work and service for the King, almost ithout intermission, with terrible exactions pon the strength and the nerves. Never ind, says the Master: "They shall walk with e." And there are those who are fearfully riven and shamefully oppressed, that sing "The ong of the Shirt." Yet Jesus says: "If you re mine, you shall walk with Me in white."

"In white!" It is the colour of acquittal. When a Jewish priest was charged with crime, e was brought before the Sanhedrim. If he as found guilty, he was sent from the court ad in black; if he was found innocent, a hite robe was given unto him. "And white obes were given unto every one of them" Rev. vi. 11). "In white." It is the colour of ictory. We are not now thinking of the gar- ent unspotted, but of the new and beautiful obe put upon the champion in the chamber of ictory and triumph—immortal youth, strength nd elastic powers, glory and blessedness. In ternal transfiguration the Lord Jesus has arments white and glistering, and it shall be aid of his people too, "their garments shall e always white." Above all, white is the olour of purity.

THE WHITE ROBE

omes in as a consequence of the garments aving been kept unspotted. Is it not a glo- ious hope to resemble Jesus when we see Him; o share his purity, to be partakers of his holi- ess? It is promised in the last chapter of Daniel, "Many shall be purified, and made hite, and tried." To borrow an old illustra- on: As upon sunny days you see the clouds oating about in the ether, you see them as canopy of snow over your heads. What are hese, and whence came they? They came from many a stagnant pool and pond; they have ropped their filth and their defilement, and re now white and bright and beautiful. Even o with the throng of redeemed ones beside the amb. As you see them you ask, "Who are hese clothed in white robes, and whence came hey?" And the answer will be, "These are hey which came out of great tribulation [and reat temptation too], but they have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

"THEY ARE WORTHY."

Scripture does not hesitate, says Archbishop Trench, to allow a certain kind of worthiness in the children of God. We read of those who are worthy to attain unto that world and the resurrection from the dead. But it is always a worthiness of grace, never of merit; a worthiness according to what Christ permits, and not according to what equity lays down. There is another very terrible "they are worthy" in this book of Revelation, where we have no need to make any such mitigation. It is in chapter xvi. 6: "They have shed the blood of saints and prophets, and thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy." It is easy to understand the word there; and it is easy to understand it in some cases to-day.

The other day I heard of one of my people, who had been asked to go and see one who was dying—an atheist. She went to see the poor woman, but was asked why she had come; was, in fact, scowled at, and not allowed to open her Bible. The dying woman forbade her visitor to "preach to her," as she said. Well, the visitor "preached" with a loving word and loving kindness in various ways, day after day, and week after week. On Good Friday the visitor told the suffering woman that she had just been to church and heard about the crucifixion of Jesus. She added, "Won't you let me read you the story?"

"YOU MAY IF YOU LIKE,"

was the reply. When the passage was finished, the poor woman said: "How He must have suffered! 'And they all forsook Him, and fled.' That is what you will do; you will leave me, and I shall have to die alone." The rejoinder to this was, "Never"; and though the case was one of cancer, so loathsome that some in the house said they could not look upon the woman's face, my friend continued her visits, and poured into the sufferer's ear the story of Jesus and his love. She was with her at seven o'clock in the morning, and one morning at four o'clock. She caught her dying breath, and saw her sleep her last sleep—saw her fall asleep in Jesus. The sufferer had come to love her visitor, who told her: "You think much of my love, but it is only a drop in the ocean compared with the love of Christ." And so the poor soul came to love and trust the Saviour, and, dying, went to be with Him. Now, it is easy to say of the one, the ministering angel, "She is worthy," but yet I do believe that, in his great love, the Lord will know no difference, and that He says of both, "They are worthy"—worthy in my worthiness, perfect through my comeliness, which I have put upon them.

But is this all? Does this exhaust the meaning of the word? I trow not. Surely, if exceptions prove the rule, they do not make it; and surely, regarding as exceptions the case of the dying thief and the woman of whom I have spoken, heaven must enter us

ERE WE CAN ENTER HEAVEN.

"Without holiness no man shall see the Lord." Without rank, wealth, or learning, he may; but without holiness, never. Not merely does he need the imputed righteousness of Christ, but also the imparted holiness of the Holy Spirit. Of course this does not mean that he cannot enter without perfectness. Heaven were an empty place were it to mean that. But it does mean, and must mean, that there must be a germ, or sapling, which, in the heavenly garden, will spring and bear flowers and fruits. Ah! we must remember not only our justifying righteousness, of which we read (Col. i. 12), "and hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light," but we must remember the sanctifying holiness spoken of in Rev. xix. 7, "his wife hath made herself ready." Are you ready, if the hour should come for you to be called away? Are you ready with an assured conviction that all is right—that Christ hath finished his work for you? And ready also with confidence to take up the Apostle's word and say, "I have finished my course"? I shall never forget, so long as I live, my experience in the earthquake at Nice. I shall never forget the infinite comfort I felt when the house was reeling, and it was a question as to how many seconds of such vibration it could bear. Oh the comfort of

KNOWING THAT CHRIST WAS MINE!

But there was some discomfort too, as I knew there were things to be done, and things not to be done, which I could wish changed before I went in to see the King. Oh that it may be said of us individually, as it may be said of the bride collectively, "She hath made herself ready."

Do not say this subject is unpractical. Paul did not think it so when he spoke of us as living in the heavenlies with Christ. Nor did Peter, when he said, "Seeing that we look for these things, let us give diligence to be found of Him in peace, without spot and blameless." And as it is practical for life, so it is practical for work. Too many lives, says one, are like rivers flowing into the Polar Seas—they are frozen at the mouth. Ah, methinks that if with John Knox we could say, "I have been to heaven and taken possession," there would be a melting of the ice, and a thawing of the snows about our lips, until they would be no longer "our own." Mr. Moody had been pondering the subject of grace, a very unpractical subject, some would say; and he pondered it until his heart was so full that he asked the first man he met whether he knew anything about grace—"the grace of God that bringeth salvation;" and so also the next man he met, and thus the Gospel was brought under their notice. And if we had been to heaven and "taken possession" this morning, methinks that ere night we should find some soul with whom to hold heavenly converse, or whom we might point to heaven. Unpractical! Is it unpractical to let some sweet air down into the fœtid purlieus of our great city life—to bring down that which shall charm and cool and calm the heart in the midst of all that which it has to bear? And

> There are in this loud stunning tide
> Of human care and crime,
> With whom the melodies abide,
> Of the everlasting chime;
> Who carry music in their heart,
> Through dusty lane and wrangling mart.

If there were more of heaven, there would be more of holiness and more of hope. Ay, hope in the end. This morning we are here, the living to praise God. There are some at this hour who are dying. And we may be the dying some day; if Jesus come not, we must go to Jesus. Shall we like it? Shall we like to step down to the brink; like putting our feet into the river? If heaven were our home, methinks we would like it. Columbus, says one, on his voyage of discovery, knew by the floating fragments of flowers and trees that he was drawing near to land. Little bits of seaweed came about his ship, and told him that the object of his desire was not far away. And what his sailors said were stars, he knew to be the lights of human habitations. And even so the Christian, who is at home in heaven while here on earth, sees the mysterious fragments which indicate the nearness of land. "Methinks I heard sighs." "And I am almost certain I caught the sound of singing." The heavenly country must be near. Let us cast out the anchor and make ready for "landing."

We miss this morning Archdeacon Philpot. "He walked with God, and was not, for God took him." We miss dear Mr. Denham Smith. "He walked with God in truth and equity, and turned many from iniquity." And of both the Master says (may He say it of all of us!), "They shall walk with Me in white, for they are worthy."

FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

The Lord's Supper.

REV. F. B. MEYER,

who presided, read John xvii. 20 to end, and said: They tell us that sometimes on the Arctic sky there is a roseate tint of dawn, and at the same time a flush of the evening glow—two lights on the same sky. So, in the passage I have read, there is a glow of two kinds of glory: there is the glory which we are to see, and the glory which our Lord has already seen. "That they may behold my glory which Thou hast given Me": "The glory which Thou gavest Me I have given them." What is this latter glory? It is the glory of unity, for He says: "The glory which Thou gavest Me I have given them, that they may be one." The full glory of the unity of the Church is yet in reserve; but when we gather as we are gathered here this afternoon, a glory fills the place that comes not to us except we meet with all Christians on the common ground of the blood and grace of Christ.

And may we not expect that the world to-day which is looking on will be led to believe as never before that Jesus was sent by God, and to understand something of the love of God in Him? It is the glory of a common love. We are one to-day, not simply because we are in one place, but because we are animated by one common life. And just as, presently, we shall all take of the same bread, and by one act, and the entrance of the common bread be made one, so the entrance of the life of our common Lord into each one of us does constitute us one at this moment. And as the common life blood of the body makes all the members one, so are we at this very moment one, because the common life of our dear Lord is throbbing in each heart. We have here a bridal ring, which has no beginning and no term, twisted thrice. "Thou in Me"—the Eternal Father living, speaking, and working through Christ; "I in them"—the Christ, in whom the Godhead is, in each of us; "They in us"—that life which came from God into his Son, and by the Spirit has been transfused into us, goes back again to the very heart of God. That is, the

by the Spirit, in the Saviour, with the Father.

We set that forth now. Are you quite prepared to partake of this ordinance? Before ever those disciples came to the time of John xvii., they had passed through other experiences. Have you passed through them? The close of the tenth chapter finds them going into exile with Christ. Have you also gone without the camp? In the eleventh chapter they stood on the resurrection side of death. Do you recognise that at this moment you are standing with your risen Lord on the other side of an empty grave? In the twelfth chapter we find them learning what it was to fall into the ground and die that they might live. Do you yet know what it is, moment by moment, to mortify the deeds of your body, and the promptings of your flesh, that the life of Jesus may be manifest in you? You have naught to do with the life side, but rather your province is with the death side. In the light of chapter xiii., ask yourselves whether every deed, word, and thought has been removed that prevents Him from washing your hands, your head, your heart. The same chapter describes the detection of the traitor. Will you let Christ sit in your heart to-day, and point out some habit which, up to now, you have thought to be lovely and innocent, but which He will show you is the cause of all your sorrow? He taught his disciples to serve each other in love. Will you thus serve? Will you love with his love those you do not like? Again, in the fourteenth chapter He told them to obey. Is there one command which you have not kept, and which at this moment lies heavy on your soul? Tell Him that you will at once set about keeping it. In the fifteenth chapter he taught them that all true life was to come from Him. Will you give up your own effort, and let Jesus pour his royal life through you? And in the sixteenth chapter He wept with them over a world that was against them, and that He was to overcome. Will you, with Him, yearn over the great sad world outside? Let Him now search you, wash you, take some evil away, indicate something He wants you to do.

LOOK AWAY FROM SELF

to Him, and do not try to work yourself into a frame of feeling. Why have we asked the Holy Ghost first to show you yourself? It is that much more may then be revealed to you of the fulness of Christ. And whilst you and I meet Jesus in this bread and wine, methinks our heavenly Father will come and feast with us, as of old He feasted with the Jews on the peace offerings. As we say, "This is my Lord and my God," He will say to us, "This is my beloved son, in whom I am well pleased.

REV. C. A. FOX,

after the bread and wine had been partaken of, addressed the large assembly as follows: "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?" We have in that which this service sets forth a pledge of the performance of all the promises of God. All things are pledged unto us, which are for the glory of God, in Christ Jesus. Moreover, we who have partaken of this sacred rite, are pledged to four great practical principles. The first of these is

SEPARATION FROM THE WORLD.

This we find recorded in Exod. xii.; the passover was to be eaten in haste by the Israelites with shoes on their feet, and staff in their hand, and their loins girded. They were to eat it in the act of passing out of Egypt.

Separation from the world is likewise to be immediate, even as Israel was to leave Egypt that same night. Henceforth we must be separate. It would be very strange if someone were to order a carriage, and, having all his or her goods packed up, and the last meal eaten, should yet refuse to leave the hall of the house from which removal was purposed. I fear there are too many who partake of this blessed rite without fully realising what it is to eat it in haste, and to pass out immediately. We must not only pass out at once, but we must also pass out with all that is ours. The sacrifice was not to be offered in the land of Egypt, as Pharaoh endeavoured to persuade Israel to do, but God was to be served outside the country. "There shall not a hoof be left behind, for thereof must we take to serve the Lord our God." All that belongs to each of us must be consecrated unto the Lord.

The second principle is stated in Exod. xxiv. "The nobles of the children of Israel... saw God, and did eat and drink." Not only must we be separate from the world, but there must be an open heaven,

AN OPEN VISION OF GOD.

There must not be anything between us and God; but a free gaze into the very face of God. "Seek ye my face: thy face, Lord, will I seek." There must be entire communion, nothing hidden and reserved. The effect of that seeing God is that you will abhor yourself from henceforth. You will begin to see that others around you are in great need, and you will say "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips." When our eyes have "seen the King the Lord of hosts," we not only know that we are defiled, but we are conscious of the defilement that surrounds us. Seeing God, will moreover bring us back into the brotherhood of the Church. When the disciples had seen Christ at the breaking of bread, they at once returned to Jerusalem to the great body of the disciples, and said, "We have seen the Lord." You cannot keep from the brotherhood of the Church, if you are seeing God. This will bring about the blessed unity which our brother has been reading of. This seeing God fills the soul with holy gladness and joyful boldness. "If thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light." The cause of the darkness that has befallen so many in the Church is that the eye is not single; we see two or three things at the same time, having our eye partly on the world and partly on Christ. What we need to realise is expressed by the Apostle: "We all with open face, beholding, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image, from glory to glory."

The third great practical truth is expressed in John xiii.; we read that the disciple reclined at the feast. Originally the Passover was, as we have seen, to be partaken of in the act of passing out of Egypt. The disciples, we find, reclined on the bosom of Jesus.

THERE MUST BE REST

with this communion. You must eat it with your feet washed by the blessed Master; you must eat it with your very conscience purged by Him. You ask, "Lord, is t I?" You do well to inquire, for the traitor must be cast out. You must eat it reclining in simple faith and dependence upon the bosom of Jesus. Lean hard upon Him, and enjoy the calm rest of God as you partake of this communion of saints. And, I beseech you, let that supernatural rest be seen around you. Walk in rest, speak in rest, act in rest, and serve in rest; let there be a Sabbath rest in each of us, every day and every hour of the day; yea, may the Lord of the Sabbath grant unto us his own blessed rest.

Fourthly, there must be service, as we also read in John xiii. Of the blessed Master Himself it is written: "He riseth from supper, and laid aside his garments, and took a towel and girded Himself." There must be a second girding in our case. First we girded ourselves to pass out of Egypt. To-day we must be girded with a towel as the Master was, in order that we may stoop and wash the feet of the brethren. We must wash the soiled feet of the fallen, and the tired feet of the saints—stooping to the

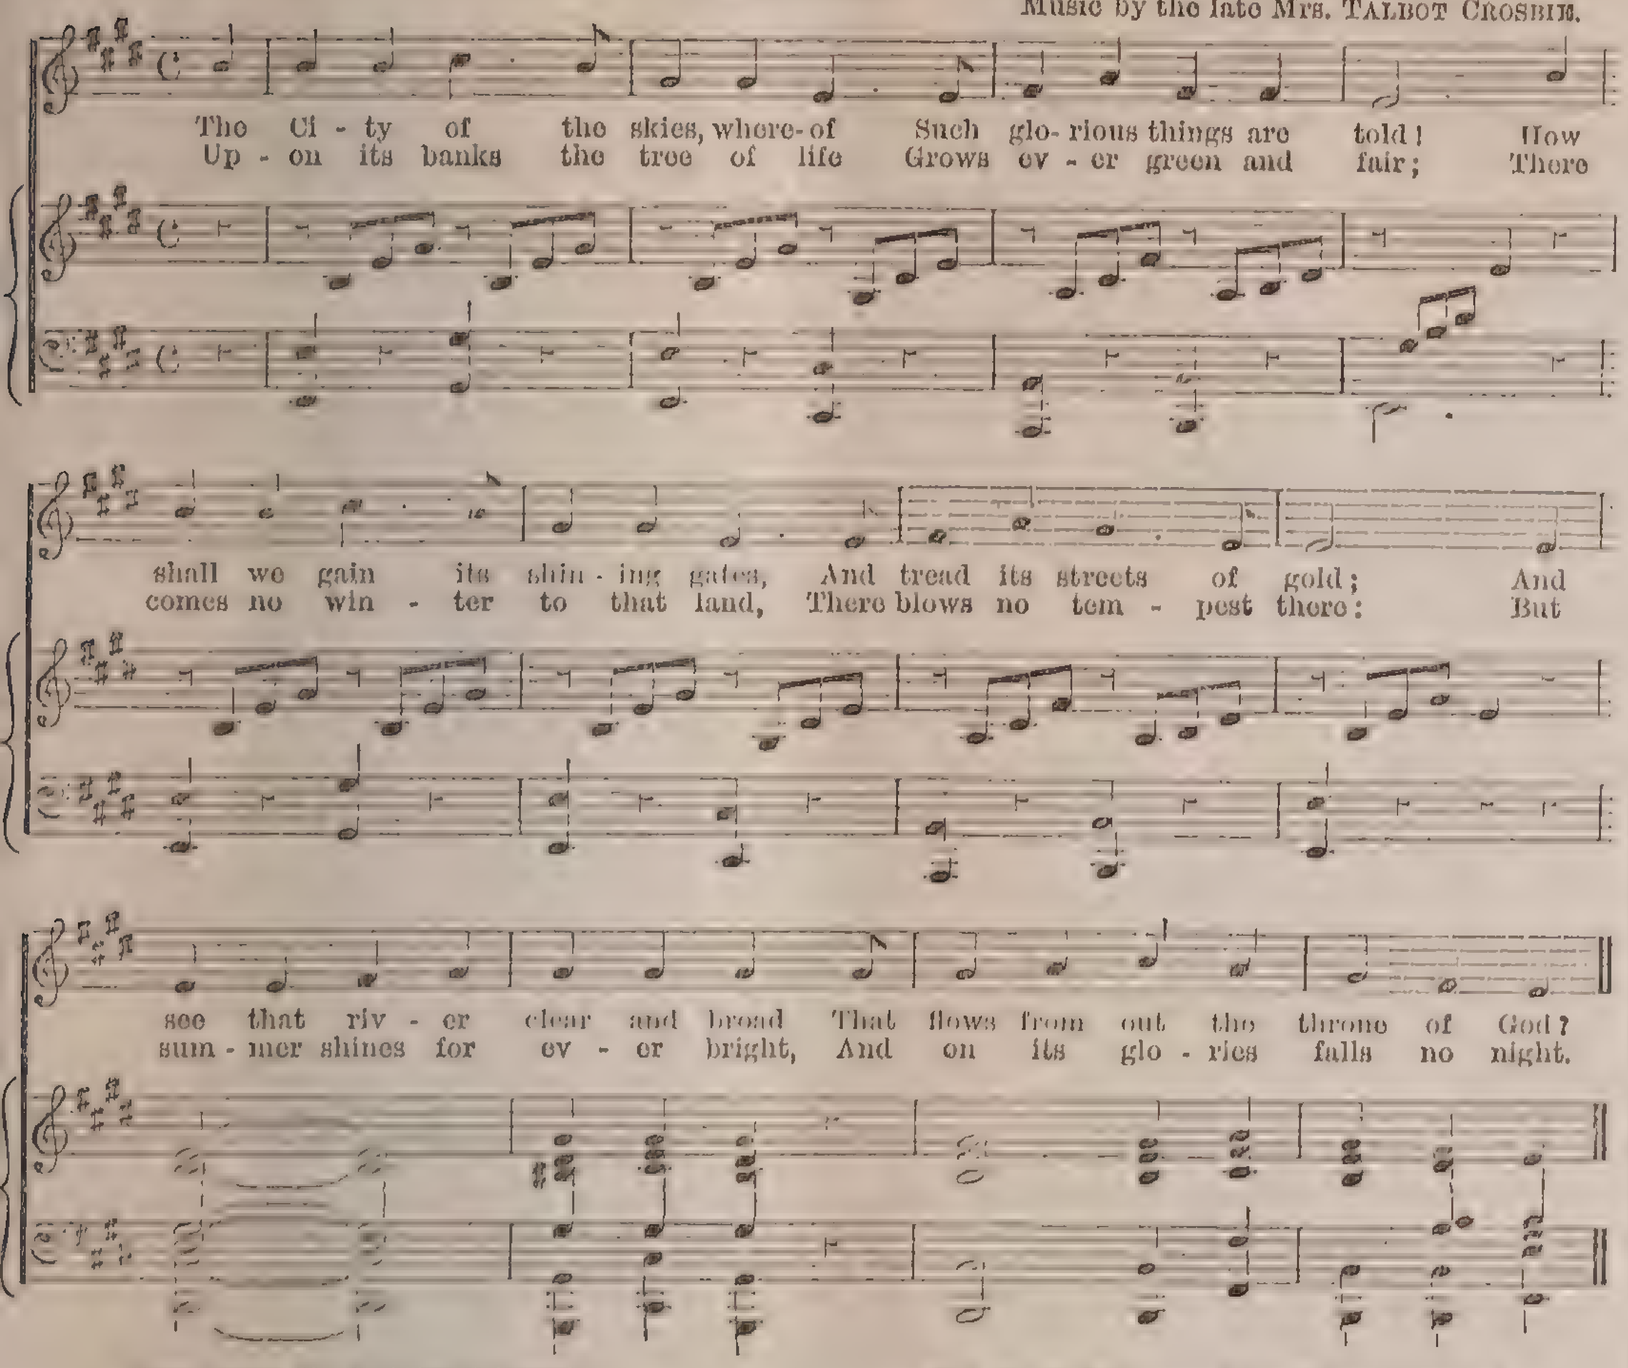
as the Master Himself did. May God send us strength to go forth in his holy service! May the blessed Saviour give us such a desire to seek and save the lost!



Let us claim the blessings which are pledged to us. "Said I not unto thee, if thou wouldest believe thou shouldest see the glory of God?" Let us believe to see, and we shall see and believe. Let us launch out into the deep with God. Let us go forth in devoted service, trusting Him who is the same Jesus yesterday, to-day, and for ever.

[We postpone till next week our reports of the Friday evening addresses, the afternoon gatherings, &c.]

THE CRIPPLES' HOME FOR GIRLS, in Marylebone-road, has just been considerably altered and enlarged, no less a sum than £9000 being expended in the improvements. The Institution, which will now accommodate a hundred inmates, has been fitted with every modern contrivance for saving labour, increasing comfort, and securing conditions favourable to health. Altogether nearly a thousand girls have passed through the Home since its foundation in 1853. The inmates are taught bonnet-making and plain and fancy needlework; many of them, notably those who are most sadly deformed, are patterns of industry and integrity. The new buildings were opened a few days ago, by H.R.H. the Princess Christian, in the presence of a large and distinguished company.

"The City of the Skies."

Music by the late Mrs. TALBOT CROSBIE.

They never die that dwell therein,
  They know no pain nor tears;
But songs of joy that City fill,
  Throughout the endless years.
For there is neither strife nor care,
And Jesus dwells among them there.

We praise his name who guides our steps
  That blessèd home to gain,
Beyond the wants of this poor world,
  Above its splendours vain.
Our Lord doth guide our feet where lies
His glorious City of the skies.

RESCUE WORK IN ST. GILES'S.

VIGOROUS endeavours are being made by the St. Giles's Christian Mission to raise the fallen and help the weak in the large district over which its beneficent operations extend. On Tuesday, last week, the many excellent institutions of the Mission were increased in an important direction, three Homes being opened, in which rescue work will in future be carried on. The house, 75, Drury-lane, will be used as a refuge for outcast women; 26, Great Earl-street, Seven Dials, has been fitted up as a Probationary Home; and 72, Leighton-road, Kentish Town, is to serve the purposes of a Home for the training of young women for useful spheres in life. The three places provide sleeping accommodation for a hundred, and they are admirably situated and suited for their noble purpose.

On the evening of the day named, a public meeting was held in the mission chapel, Little Wild-street, by way of celebrating the auspicious occasion. Mr. W. WHEATLEY, secretary of the Mission, described the new premises. There was no need to enlarge upon the sad fact that such Homes are sorely wanted. It was pleasing to learn that the police will co-operate with the Mission by taking destitute women to the refuge. Messrs. Ives, Tointon, Gough, and Goodwin, workers in connection with the Mission, delivered brief addresses, after which Lord RADSTOCK, who occupied the chair, spoke of the blessedness of such endeavours as these. It rejoiced him to say that the Church at large is just beginning to awake to a sense of her responsibility in regard to testimony for Christ. The ministry of reconciliation has been entrusted to all, not to some; and if we get in touch with God and suffer ourselves to be guided by Him, great things may be expected from our work, even among those who have wandered far in sin. The meeting was very hearty, and earnest prayer was offered to God on behalf of the Mission and its many agencies.

OBITUARY.

MR. J. MONEILL, INVERKIP.

WE regret to announce the death of Mr. John McNeill, the father of Rev. John McNeill, minister of Regent-square Presbyterian Church, London, which occurred last Friday week, at Inverkip, the pretty Renfrewshire village at which the now famous preacher was once railway porter. Mr. McNeill was in his sixty-eighth year, and had been in failing health for some time past. He was an office-bearer in Keppoch-hill Free Church, and was a man of deep religious conviction. The funeral took place on Monday week, and was conducted by Rev. James Bannerman, the pastor of Inverkip Free Church.

REV. J. M. BRAITHWAITE, CROYDON.

A painful feeling was created at Croydon on Saturday by the announcement of the sudden death of Rev. John Masterman Braithwaite, vicar of Croydon, which occurred at the vicarage, Waddon, at an early hour that morning. On Friday night the deceased gentleman retired to his study as usual, and as he did not reappear at his customary time Mrs. Braithwaite became alarmed, and sent for assistance. The study door, which had been locked on the inside, was burst open, and the vicar was discovered sitting in his chair lifeless, death having resulted from syncope. He had attended a meeting only a few hours previously. Mr. Braithwaite, who was forty-three years of age, was an energetic man, and a hard worker. He was highly respected by the people of Croydon and surrounding neighbourhood, by whom his loss will be deeply felt.

THE GOSPEL IN HAYTI.

REV. WESTMORIS S. SMITH is the only Protestant minister in the town of Cape Haytien, which has a population of twelve thousand people, chiefly Romanists. During the war he has been wonderfully preserved, and has been greatly blessed in his work. He sends us the following, dated May 14:—"A fortnight since, after the prayer-meeting, a young Haytien lawyer and journalist came into our house for a few moments. He is a constant attendant at our chapel, and has been a great help to me in my French studies. But he has been very immoral. We talked about his soul's salvation, and I prayed with him. At 9.30 he bade us good night. Just after this, I heard someone knocking at the gate, and I asked, 'Who is there?' He replied in French, 'Minister, it is I, Auguste. I am converted.' He came again the next morning, and told us that when he left us after prayer, he went home, and sat down to get ready the next issue of his paper, a political affair, but could not write a word. The Spirit said to him, 'Now is the time; you may be converted to-night.' He got up, intending to come to our house for help, but began to argue, 'It is all nonsense.' Still the Spirit strove with him, and he ran towards the house and at that moment he was able to give himself to God and to believe in Christ.

"He wrote next morning, begging me to receive him into the church publicly on Sunday night, that he might make his confession of Christ in the presence of his friends. It was a service never to be forgotten. The chapel was packed with Haytien young men, and after the sermon I called on Auguste Albert to make his confession. He spoke clearly but modestly, telling how he was converted. I then called him up to the Communion rail, and put to him the usual questions. He answered satisfactorily, and then I gave him the right hand of followship, the whole congregation rising as I did so. The Master's presence was most powerfully felt in our midst."

MR. SPURGEON ON MISSIONS.—In a notice of Mr. F. S. Arnot's "Garenganze," Mr. Spurgeon says he has read it with the conviction that the Church must wake up and send out a hundred men where she has hitherto sent one.

EDINBURGH MEDICAL MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The eleventh report of the Invalids' Auxiliary tells of loving labours in many a chamber of lingering suffering. The annual sale of work realised over £100, and grants amounting in the aggregate to £120, were made to sixteen missions in various parts of the world. Articles towards the next sale may be sent to Miss Sym, 21, Belgrave-crescent, Edinburgh, from whom copies of the very interesting report may also be had.

ROYAL VICTORIA HALL.—This well-known place of public resort for the masses of South London is being reorganised in connection with its transfer to a governing body appointed by the Charity Commissioners. It will be affiliated with the proposed South London Polytechnic to be established near the "Elephant and Castle," and will form the entertainment branch. Class-rooms, library, gymnasium, &c., are being erected in a portion of the building formerly used for the storing of stage "properties." The educational and recreative branches of work will go on side by side, and it is expected that the new arrangements will come into force at the beginning of September.

PARIS CITY MISSION.—DEAR SIR,—I have lately spent a week in Paris. While there I saw something of the working of the Paris City Mission and met the Paris Committee, who, at that meeting, were enabled to appoint two additional missionaries. Rev. T. Howard Gill is most anxious to have one in his district, and offers to pay a large proportion of the salary. The city missionaries told me that the people are willing, nay anxious, to hear the Gospel in their own houses, but there are only eight labourers in that large and pleasure-seeking city. I feel sure if the Society and work were better known, it would have larger support.—Yours truly, G. H. BENSON.

150, Leadenhall-street, London, E.C.

DOES THAT MEAN ME?

"WILL you be so kind as to come and see a sick woman who has no Christian friend to visit her? She is dying of a terrible disease, and no one likes to go near her." Such was the invitation that was one day received by Mr. Thomas, a Christian man living in a large manufacturing town. He agreed to go, and on arrival was shown by the poor woman's husband into a room in which there was hardly any furniture but the bed on which the sufferer lay. It was a drunkard's home, and drink and poverty and dirt go hand in hand. Opening the Word of God, Mr. Thomas read the Gospel message of love, then spoke and prayed tenderly by the bedside, and promised to come again.

Each time that he came to the house the poor drunkard husband gladly thanked him for his kindness to his wife, but he never came into the room himself to hear the reading of God's Word, or to join in prayer. However, Mr. Thomas noticed that he was always careful to have the door of his wife's chamber a little bit open, so that he could hear all of it while sitting in the adjoining room.

One day the passage of Scripture read contained these words: "None of his sins that he hath committed shall be mentioned unto him." When the visitor was gone, the husband eagerly fetched a Bible, and searched for this promise which had struck his ear as something too good to be true. At last he found it in Ezek. xxxiii., and then he began to wonder if the promise was for him. The sins of past years rose up before his mind, and an awful judgment day seemed to be awaiting him when he would be rewarded according to his works. Anxiously the poor man looked for the next visit of their Christian friend that he might ask if there was really any hope for him.

The day for the next visit came, he welcomed Mr. Thomas into the house, showed him the words that had been the means of rousing his hopes, and asked in anxious tones, "Does that mean me?" "Yes, indeed," was the reply, "it is the word of the living God, and it means you and me and everyone else who gives up sin and turns to God." The man believed the good news, and fairly danced for joy, saying, "Thank God, none of my sins shall be mentioned."

From that day there was a great change in his life. The drink was given up altogether, and, instead of using profane language, he now began to speak to others of the love of God, and to try and lead them to Christ.

In talking of his past life, he told Mr. Thomas that he had at one time been engaged as a comic actor in a theatre, but even then he was convicted of sin, and far from happy. "I have," he said, "made thousands of people in the theatre laugh, but I never laughed myself; my heart was too heavy. There was no laugh in me." Now, however, he can laugh and shout for joy, for he knows that true joy is to be found in Christ alone, and in knowing that He forgives our sins, and will remember them no more.

Reader, have you found out that God means you, when He says: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die"? If so, you may thank God for the gift of his only begotten Son, who came into this world and died for you; and you may be sure that if you believe on the Lord Jesus Christ then the promise is for you: "None of his sins that he hath committed shall be mentioned unto him."

H. G. HARRIS.

A HINT TO DONORS.—In his Sword and Trowel notes for July, Mr. Spurgeon refers to a will case in which the Stockwell Orphanage was interested, and says: "Wills are so complicated that executors dare not act except as a court of law directs, and in such cases the trustees of the Orphanage may be compelled to be parties to the suit, not with the view of getting anything by litigation, but simply to obtain an authoritative interpretation of doubtful codicils. Friends had better give their money while they live."

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.

PRIOR to the sailing of the Moravian vessel Harmony for Labrador—being the 120th annual voyage of a ship belonging to the Moravian Mission Agency—a farewell meeting was held on board on the afternoon of June 26. The proceedings were presided over by Rev. HENRY BLANDFORD, who stated, first, that the deficiency of over £3000, with which last year's mission account closed, had been cleared off; then, that a lady had sent £1000 for the Missions. He also announced the still more gratifying fact that it had been determined to open three new missions—one in California, one in Trinidad, where 60,000 coolies need instruction, and a third on the north coast of South America.

Dr. DRURY described the Harmony, a small ship of 250 tons, as admirably adapted for the work in which she is employed, and ably commanded by Captain Linklater. During the 119 years of mission work the Society's ship has never sustained any serious damage, though, as may be well supposed, she has often been in great peril. Once, when the coast was bound with ice through which no entrance could be found, the ice was struck by lightning, an opening was made, and the ship passed in. In the French wars she was captured, but when Napoleon heard that she was a Mission ship he at once gave orders for her release. God, who holds the waters in the hollow of his hand, has watched over and protected the Mission ship in a wondrous manner. The missionaries in Labrador are much isolated; there has been no intelligence from them since last year. One letter Dr. Drury had received from a bright young fellow who had gone out three or four years ago, hoping to be used for some years in the Master's service, told of his suffering from rheumatism and congestion of the lungs. Though he would be quite justified in returning home, yet he has remained at his post. He asked advice; a letter goes out to him, but one awaits with anxiety the state in which it may find him. A missionary's wife, suffering from chronic illness, also asked advice; in the course of ten months she gets an answer to her letter.

Instances were given of remarkable devotion on the part of the Moravian sisters. A widow, when left alone among the bush negroes of Surinam, her husband having died of fever, elected to remain at her post to carry on the work! When the health of two sisters helping Brother Müller and his wife, in charge of the Leper Home in Jerusalem, broke down, volunteers were asked for to take their places, and twelve came forward!

Brief addresses were delivered by several friends, including Revs. C. Edmunds, of Leyton, and W. Hamilton, of Woking. On Saturday last, the vessel left, not only taking supplies, but several fresh workers, to the ice-bound lands of the North.

A CHRISTIAN WORKER in a town in Vermont at the close of a meeting, had his attention directed toone of the wealthiest men of the town, whom we will call Mr. Smith, for the reason that that was not his name, who was passing out of the house. The worker at once, as if moved by some sudden impulse, glided down the aisle and followed him out, and said to him, in broken language: "Mr. Smith, the devil got a big mortgage on you; better lift it quick, fore he foreclose, and lose your soul." The words stuck. The man dealt in bonds and mortgages, and made his money shaving the notes and obligations of poor men, and foreclosing mortgages on their property. He understood the business, and took the sense of his warning, and from that time turned about and sought the Saviour, and lived a Christian life, and died in peace and hope.

A GLORIOUS PROMISE.

"They shall walk with Me in white."—REV. iii. 4.

They—they, the tempest-tossed,
The sin and sorrow-worn;
Eyes that with tears are dim,
Hearts that with grief are torn:
Souls that, 'mid conflicts long and strong,
My cross have nobly borne—
Yes, they shall walk with Me in white,
In beatific, cloudless light.

Shall walk—his word is given.
Oh, promise true and grand!
No subtle foe or trembling doubt
Can snatch us from his hand.
Firm as the everlasting hills
His covenant shall stand;
And we shall walk those streets above
Whose very atmosphere is love.

Shall walk—progressive bliss!
Its limit who can tell?
Seeking, acquiring still
Treasures from truth's deep well;
Learning the wondrous secret things
Once so unsearchable!
Walking in converse high and pure
With Him whose promises are sure.

With Me. O crowning joy!
Beyond all knowledge sweet;
Our longing eyes shall see,
Our hearts with rapture beat,
Our inmost selves shall be for his Inheritance made meet;
And bliss above all else shall be Those words of love, "with Me, with Me."

In white, in spotless white,
All pure without, within;
No wayward wanderings,
No lurking, treach'rous sin.
In that blest home naught to defile
Can ever enter in.
Nothing to dim the radiant light
Of saints who "walk with Me in white."

BIBLE CARRIAGE WORK.—Messrs. Llewellyn and Taylor, in charge of the Bethany Bible Carriage, are at present in Middlesborough. A most blessed work is being carried on; hundreds gather round nightly, and many testaments, &c., are scattered. A Gospel tent is sadly needed to reach the masses in that thickly populated district.

THE BIBLE.

STUDY it carefully;
Think of it prayerfully;
Deep in thy heart let its precepts dwell;
Slight not its history;
Ponder its mystery;
None can e'er prize it too fondly or well.

Folkestone.—The Home for Young Men, formerly "Pembroke House," has been re-started at 105, Sandgate-road. Mr. H. J. Allen, the manager, will gladly welcome all young men who want to spend their holiday at this favourite seaside resort.

Summers Town, Lower Tooting.—A sale of new and worn clothing, suitable for the working classes, will be held in the Mission-room at Summers Town, for the benefit of the mission work. Friends who are willing to assist by sending new or outgrown garments are requested to send them to Miss Haddon, Naseby, Bedford-hill, Balham, S.W.

LETTERS CONCERNING THEIR PRINCIPLES AND ORDER, FROM ASSEMBLIES OF BELIEVERS IN 1818-20. Reprinted in 1889. 6d. Horner & Son. This pamphlet contains the copy of a letter sent at the beginning of the present century, by the church meeting in Hubert-street, corner of St. John's-lane, New York, to assemblies of believers throughout the world; copies of replies from over a score churches; and a rejoinder to the letters by the New York Church. A spirit of intense earnestness and brotherly love is shown throughout. On matters of order, less uniformity is apparent than on points of doctrine, but from first to last an ardent desire is shown to know the Lord's will, and do it. This pamplet will have an interest for many, and to some it will prove instructive, for the letters were evidently written by men who had studied the Scriptures with great care.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes.

SUNDAY, JULY 7.—Deuteronomy XIX.

VER. 1—13.—Renewed directions were given about the cities of refuge. The law of murder was clear from the very earliest (Gen. ix. 6). And in new unsettled districts it was absolutely essential to be very stringent in these matters. The duty of avenging death was imposed on the nearest of kin. But it was obviously just to make a distinction between wilful murder and homicide. Hence the appointment of cities of refuge (4, 5). Three other cities were to be set apart in case the territory was extended (8, 9). But, alas! they were never needed, for the conditions of conquest were never fulfilled (9). Oh that we might ever keep all his commandments; it would be the surest method of learning to love God, and to walk ever in his ways!

Ver. 14.—When once we realise that our lot in life has been appointed and given by God, we become content with it, and do not seek to aggrandise ourselves at another's expense. Envy and jealousy and other sins have no chance with the soul which is satisfied with God's provisions on its behalf.

Ver. 15—21.—No man should be condemned on the evidence of one witness only (Num. xxxv. 30). What a sign this is that man is not to be trusted. As the Decalogue suggests, we are all too prone to bear false witness. How good is our God to have given us such abundant assurance (John viii. 18; John v. 7, 8). How careful should we be not to condemn a brother on one speaker's evidence! We should certainly have a story corroborated before we either believe or circulate it (Lev. xix. 6). It was a severe but fair arrangement that a false witness should suffer the punishment which would have fallen to the lot of the one accused. Perhaps this is one of the perpetual enactments of God's government. We suffer from what we had falsely prepared for others (Ps. lvii. 6).

MONDAY, JULY 8.—Deuteronomy XX.

Here are directions given about war. First, as to the public proclamation to be given to those going to war (1—9). If they were at all reluctant to fight, they must be discharged. God would not be served by any but volunteers (Ps. cx. 3). And if there were sufficient reasons for absence, they were to be respected. How thoughtful God is of his own! These reasons were: (1) The entrance upon a new home. David penned Psalm xxx. on such an occasion. We should always dedicate a new dwelling. (2) The desire to eat of the vineyard which had been recently planted, and of which the owner must not eat for three years (Lev. xix. 23); and (3) the claims of a newly married wife, with whom he might stay for a year (xxiv. 5). Or a man might feel timid at the prospect of the fight, as in the case of Gideon's army (Jud. vii. 3); he too must return, not only for his own sake, but because his fear might prove contagious. Oh for the lion-hearted courage which comes from the indwelling of the victorious Lion of the tribe of Judah.

Second, as to the proclamation to be made to the cities attacked (10—20). It was right and generous to give their foes the chance of submission. Is not that what God is doing with the unconverted still, not willing that any should perish, and sending the ambassadors of peace (2 Cor. v. 20). We should always try to make up quarrels amicably before proceeding to extreme measures. Canaanites were excepted from this law, because so near, and therefore able to infect Israel. Let us not show mercy to any sin, or anything that might be likely to lead us astray (17, 18). It is very beautiful to notice this distinction as to fruit trees. Other trees might be destroyed for the purposes of the siege, but these must be preserved for use afterwards. We are taught by Christ Himself to gather up fragments, so that there may be no waste of what is good for food.

TUESDAY, JULY 9.—Deuteronomy XXI.

Ver. 1—9.—God often brings to justice the perpetrator of a murder who seems to have eluded Him. But not always, and, therefore, deeply to impress the dreadfulness of such a crime on the hearts of men, this elaborate ceremonial was instituted. Shall we not learn to be careful to have no complicity, before by connivance, or after by silence, with sin.

Ver. 10—14.—A soldier might marry his captive if he chose. But at least for a month she must mourn after the Jewish customs. The paring of the nails is rather the tinging them with yellow ochre, a method of personal adornment much admired in the East. This long delay was full of humanity to the slave, testing the strength of her master's affection, especially under the circumstances of her much altered appearance.

Ver. 15—17.—This is not a case of polygamy, but of a man having married two wives, one after the other, and the precept is directed against the undue influence of an unscrupulous stepmother.

Ver. 18—21.—No case of the infliction of this penalty is mentioned in the history of Israel; the presumption, therefore, is that the very presence of this statute on the page of the Law was sufficient to secure the object aimed at; or, perhaps, parents were too long-suffering to make use of it.

Ver. 22.—"The curse of the tree" is here clearly brought out (Gal. iii. 13). It was for this reason that Christ's body was taken down from the cross so hurriedly (John xix. 31). Let us contemplate the Saviour in this aspect as made a curse for us, that we might inherit the land of perpetual rest and blessedness.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 10.—Deuteronomy XXII.

Ver. 1—4.—A sweet lesson of mutual love is given us here; not only for the sake of brute beasts, which might perish, if not properly cared for, but also for the sake of doing to others according to the golden rule. If the priest or Levite had acted on this, the good Samaritan had never been required to succour the wounded traveller (Luke x. 34). We must not only help those who ask, but we must not hide ourselves from such as cannot ask (4).

Ver. 5.—Disguises were often assumed in heathen temples, and such exchanges of dress would lead to levity and impurity of the worst sort.

Ver. 6, 7.—On how tiny an act of humanity and obedience do God's great blessings rest! "That it may be well with thee." It was enough for the mother to lose her brood, and it was too great a stroke to deprive her of liberty also. Doth not God care for birds, and for us (Luke xii. 6).

Ver. 8.—Is not the habit of total abstinence from strong drink a necessary battlement for the defence of our young people.

Ver. 9.—A symbolical reference to 2 Cor. vi. 14 (also 11).

Ver. 10.—It would be unkind to the ass with its shorter step, and to the ox because it has a natural dislike to the ass with its fœtid breath. Our love ought to make us thoughtful in very small matters.

Ver. 13—24.—These laws were adapted to the Israelites in their then position. The laws of Christ are, of course, a great advance on them. Yet there are principles here which are of great value for all time. We must cultivate the habit of the most intense purity of thought, so only can we be kept from yielding to sudden gusts of passion. It is no slur on the Bible that it deals with these great human facts, which had better be considered under the sacred light of inspiration than from any prurient or curious motive. There are matters which we need to know about, and it is best to hear of them from Him who gave us this complex and beautiful nature, in which there is nothing common or unclean, unless we make it so.

THURSDAY, JULY 11.—Deuteronomy XXIII.

Ver. 1—8.—An enumeration of all who were excluded from incorporation into the Jewish state by circumcision or by marriage. As no animal with blemish might be used in sacrifice, so no one with radical deformity, or the child of illegitimate birth, or the nations which have ever been regarded as special symbols of the flesh, were permitted to enter into those close relations with Israel, which are here intended in the phrase of entering the congregation of the Lord. They were to be a holy people (Exod. xix. 5). It was necessary to raise this partition wall against Ammonites and Moabites, because these nations lived so near the border. There was nothing to exclude them from becoming proselytes, in the enjoyment of religious privileges, but only from identification with the chosen people. It is thought that this prohibition was extended only to the males (Ruth iv. 10). The tenth generation means an indefinite period.

Ver. 9—14.—These injunctions for cleanliness are very suggestive, because of the reason given (14). The Church of Christ is an armed host, but how careful should each body of Christians be, lest they lose the presence and power of the great Captain, Jesus.

Ver. 15—16.—Israel, like England, was to be the refuge for the slave. The Church of Christ ought to welcome the poor, weak, and oppressed.

Ver. 17—18.—We must not think to condone for sin by bringing its proceeds into God's house (Prov. vii. 14, 15). Before He receives our gifts, He must know how they have been obtained.

Ver. 19—20.—Intended to bind Israelites in a strong common brotherhood.

Ver. 21—23.—Apply specially to consecration vows (Eccles. v. 4; 2 Cor. ix. 7).

Ver. 24—25.—A provision for poor travellers and labourers (Matt. xii. 1). We ought not to be niggard over these small acts of generosity. God will always make up to us more than we lose; and nothing commends better the Gospel we profess than a literal obedience to 1 Pet. iv. 9. Always remembering that there are times when it is kind not to give, but to withhold, lest men should be encouraged in courses of improvidence and crime.

FRIDAY, JULY 12.—Deuteronomy XXIV.

Ver. 1—4.—These enactments as to divorce were intended to meet habits which had been learnt in Egypt. Our Lord says clearly that they were temporary expedients (Matt. xix. 8). In his day they had led to great abuse by those who believed they gave permission for divorce on the most trivial grounds. Marriage is for life unless broken by one special act of sin. Hence young men and women should see to it that they do not rush into it for a passing fancy, but with reverence, and earnest prayer for guidance and submission to God's guidance.

Ver. 5—13.—Is there enough "cheering up" done in our homes? How delicate the consideration of the poor, protecting their means of livelihood (6); prohibiting the scrutiny of their impoverished homes (11); insisting on the return of his garment ere the cold might came on (13).

Ver. 14, 15.—Masters must not oppress their poor servants. Punctuality and promptness in paying are as obligatory now as ever (James v. 4).

Ver. 16.—God reserves for Himself rights which his wisdom enables Him to exercise without hurt (Exod. xx. 5).

Ver. 17—22.—Here are tender injunctions for the poor. Their liberality was appealed to on the grounds of their gratitude because they were emancipated slaves. Every forgotten sheaf was to lie. Fruit trees were not to be gone over twice. Handfuls were to be left on purpose. What a rebuke to avarice and selfishness. What a glimpse we get of a bountiful and generous life, the overflowings of our cup being for all around us. Do not we Christians come far short of a life like that sketched here. Perhaps we should be more prosperous in worldly circumstances if we lived thus (2 Cor. ix. 6—14).

SATURDAY, JULY 13.—Deuteronomy XXV.

Ver. 1—3.—Punishment was not to be excessive. It is said that while this sentence was being carried out, the chief judge read in a loud voice, Deut. xxviii. 58, 59 and xxix. 9, concluding with Ps. lxxviii. 38. For fear of miscounting, one stroke was abated (2 Cor. xi. 24). In punishment we must not degrade (3).

Ver. 4.—Whilst dumb animals serve us they must be humanely treated and well fed. It would probably lead them to do their work much more quickly, if they were permitted to refresh themselves by taking freely a mouthful here and there.

Ver. 5—10.—This usage was very ancient (xxxviii. 8—11), and seems to have originated in the desire to preserve the name and inheritance of the eldest son. This custom was made binding to keep genealogies and inheritances distinct till the coming of the Messiah (Matt. xxii. 25). Refusal to do this was considered highly disgraceful (Ruth iv. 4).

Ver. 13—16.—A forbidding of deceitful weights and measures. They must not only not use them, but not have them in the house, lest they should be tempted to use them. How hateful is the least deceit to our Heavenly Father (Prov. xi. 1; xx. 10, 23; 1 Thess. iv. 6).

Ver. 17—19.—This treacherous act of Amalek is now mentioned for the first time (Exod. xvii. 14). There was no vindictiveness here, but an act of judicial punishment. His main crime lay in his not fearing God (18). Amalek is the type of the flesh. Satan always takes advantage of us when we are faint and weary. Saul was entrusted with the execution of this sentence (1 Sam. xv. 27, viii. 30). He failed to execute it thoroughly, and by the hand of an Amalekite he died.

SUPERSTITIONS.—In reviewing a work on "Superstition and Folk Lore," Mr. Spurgeon says: "The silly fears about Friday, spilling salt, sitting down with thirteen, &c., are all simply degrading to human beings and wicked in Christians."

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, July 14.

The Sorrowful Death of Eli.—1 Sam. iv. 18.

Golden Text: 1 Sam. iii. 13.

The former lesson closed with the prediction of the downfall of Eli's house; this narrates the partial fulfilment of that prediction.

The first clause of this chapter properly belongs to chapter iii. Its present position suggests a connection between Samuel and the disastrous defeats here recorded which is not likely to be correct. It is probable that Samuel was not consulted in relation to this war with the Philistines, and that the people were allowed to act without his advice in order that God, through the Philistines, might visit the nation, and especially the house of Eli, with deserved chastisement.

Ver. 1—2.—In this battle we judge that the Philistines were the aggressors, since both Ebenezer and Aphek are in the land of Israel. The name Ebenezer was not given until after the victory obtained twenty years later (chapter vii.). It was situated west of Jerusalem, and near the entrance of the pass of Bethhoron. Aphek was close by. The Israelites suffered defeat, and the loss of 4,000 men. They were no match for the skilful and warlike Philistines; but it was not this that explained their defeat. Israel's victories were always of the Lord, and were obtained whether their numbers were few or many, while He was with them (2 Chron. xiv. 11). When their sin separated them from Him, defeat was inevitable (Deut. xxviii. 25).

Ver. 3—9.—The elders of the people had sufficient sense of God left to inquire, "Wherefore hath the Lord smitten us?" But they were not sufficiently acquainted with Him to connect their defeat with their sin. Their recourse was not to repentance and the putting away of sin, but to the symbol of the Divine presence. Even in their wickedness they retained a reverence for the forms of religion, which was no better than ignorant superstition. The ark was brought from Shiloh, and with it the two sons of Eli (4), and when it reached the camp the people received it with a great shout (5). What misplaced confidence! They turned, not to God, but to it, and said, "When it cometh it may save us" (3). It never occurred to them that they were wrong in bringing the ark from its position in the most holy place; and that, without the Divine presence, it was powerless to help them; and that the wickedness of the two priests, as well as their own sin, made it impossible for God to fight with them, whether the ark was there or no. Yet their conduct is still repeated. As men loose hold of God, they cling the more tenaciously to mere symbols. As true piety declines, we may expect ritualism to advance. Baptism ceases to be an outward sign of an inward and spiritual grace, but the grace comes to be inseparably and superstitiously united to the sign. The Lord's Supper is not a memorial service showing forth the death of our Lord, but becomes an indispensable means of eternal life. This is not growth; it is retrogression. Men are losing the reality, and hence are zealous for the form. True growth is in the direction of simplicity. The Israelites did not understand this, and foolishly connected victory with the ark while making no attempt to get rid of their sin. And the Philistines were of the same mind (6—9). Their terror was equal to the Israelites' confidence. When they heard the great shout, and knew its meaning, they were afraid. It was not so wonderful that they should connect God with the symbol, for Israel's God was in their idea something like Dagon was to them. And so they attributed all that God did in Egypt to the gods who were then supposed to be brought into the camp of the Israelites. Yet their counsel to their followers in the face of such added difficulty was wise (9), "Be strong," &c. Paul gives us similar counsel in 1 Cor. xvi. 13. If the Philistines had need and reason to take it, much more have we. When God bids us "Be strong," He never fails to make "His strength perfect in our weakness." Even the Philistines' example may teach us.

Ver. 10—11.—Their trusted talisman failed. They were not only defeated, but 30,000 men fell, the sons of Eli were slain, and the ark itself was taken. This was a severe punishment, but it was needed to teach them that it was their sin which produced their defeat. But the means they had taken to secure victory had exposed Hophni and Phinehas to the fire of the Philistines, and thus did God visit their iniquities upon them.

Ver. 12—18.—Away in Shiloh, some twenty miles north-east of Ebenezer, Eli sat by the wayside, waiting for news of the ark (13). The messenger, with clothes rent, and earth upon his head—marks of deepest grief—has reached the city (12—14), and Eli's first intimation is received from the cry of the people. Then the messenger came to the old man, almost blind (15), and delivered his message with awful brevity, and yet with equally awful exactness. Israel is fled, there has been a great slaughter. Hophni and Phinehas are dead, and the ark of God is taken (17). The last item in this intelligence made the old man's grief unbearable. He swooned, and as he fell off his seat backward, his neck broke and he died (18).

Lessons.

(1) The certainty of judgment for sin.—Though long delayed, yet it will fall. Warnings precede it, but, if unheeded, only aggravate the doom (Pro. xxix. 1).

(2) Even bad men may show regard for outward forms of religion.—The sons of Eli expected victory while with the ark. Pharisees and Scribes in John xviii. 28; Matt. xxiii. 14, 23.

(3) Even good men's sins expose to chastisement.—Eli did not deal faithfully with his sons (iii. 13). His painful end is in some measure the result of his own conduct (Psa. lxxxix. 30—34; Gal. vi. 7, 8).

THE TRAVELLERS' AID SOCIETY, under the auspices of the Young Women's Christian Association, seeks the co-operation of all who are interested in the welfare of young women. In London the work of the Society has of late made progress. During last year 280 girls were met at railway stations by request, while a large number of others were assisted in various ways by the workers. The officials at the different railway stations have shown their sympathy by constantly sending to the office girls requiring advice or help. In the country, and on the Continent, much has also been done to protect and guide young people. Communications with regard to this excellent endeavour, so far as it affects London, should be addressed to the secretary, Miss E. Dimock, 16a, Old Cavendish-street, London, W.

RESCUE WORK IN EDINBURGH.—The Edinburgh Industrial Home for fallen women, at Alnwick Hill, near Liberton, is an institution doing a quiet but very useful work. While the great aim is to lead all who enter the Home to love God and trust the Saviour, every endeavour is made to inculcate orderly, regular, and industrious habits. The inmates generally number about thirty, their ages ranging from sixteen to thirty. A large proportion are orphans or the children of careless and vicious parents. Every year a number are sent to situations as domestic servants, or are restored to friends. Laundry and needlework is engaged in, the proceeds going a considerable way towards defraying the expenses of the Home. As far as possible, the arrangements are conducted on the family plan. The secretary and treasurer is Mr. J. Forbes Moncrieff, 15, Hill-street, Edinburgh, who, in a pamphlet recently published, entitled, "Our Fallen Sisters, and what we are trying to do with them," asks friends to pay a personal visit to the Home, and, moreover, to do what they can to help forward the work.

ALDERSGATE-STREET Y.M.C.A.—At the noon prayer-meeting on Monday, mention was made of the sad bereavement which has befallen Mr. George Williams. During the previous week the God of all wisdom and mercy was asked graciously to restore Miss Williams, his only daughter, from a dangerous illness. On Saturday last the malady terminated fatally, and now prayers are ascending to the Great Consoler to lighten the grief which follows upon the loss of the loved one, who until a few days ago was in good health, and for whom a useful and happy womanhood was anticipated by a wide circle of acquaintances. At the same meeting friends from various parts spoke of the decline of the infidel propaganda. As for London, little is now being done by atheist lectures to oppose Gospel preaching. This applies specially to Hyde Park and Peckham Rye, where a few years ago there was much speaking against the truth night after night. Rev. Z. B. Woffendale remarked upon the fact that Mrs. Besant, unable to maintain her former position as an atheist, has declared for Theosophy, which involves a pantheistic belief. This surrender was regarded as very significant, and the hope was expressed that Mrs. Besant may yet be brought to acknowledge the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to find in Him all her need and her full desire.

SEAMEN'S REST, PORT SAID.

Dear Sir,—I am glad to be able to give my testimony to the good that the Seamen's Rest is doing at this place. I stayed a few days in Port Said this year, on my way to and from Palestine, and have been struck with the temptations that abound in it for sailors. Drink-shops are more numerous than any other kind, and it is a melancholy sight to see the boats full of drunken and insensible men that are taken back to their ships in the evening.

Seventy-eight per cent. of the ships going through the Suez Canal are English, and surely this leaves a grave national responsibility on us as regards Port Said. It ought to abound in good works for the Master, and, as one of the great gateways for the commerce of the world, it affords a grand opportunity for evangelisation of all kinds.

There is only one Church of England place of worship in Port Said, and no other Protestant one for the German and French populations which are both large. All efforts, therefore, made to preach Christ in this place are worthy of support, whether it be by the Bible Society, or by a mission-hall, or a Seamen's Rest—all are not too many. There are said to be 16,000 inhabitants in Port Said, including the Arab town, and it is still growing in importance.—Very truly yours,

M. A. Lloyd,
Hon. Sec. C.E.W. Missionary Association.

HYDE PARK HALL MISSION.

Two months ago we closed our large music-hall services after one of the best seasons we have ever had. We are now in the full swing of our summer work in Hyde-park. There is far less noise and disorder this year among the Socialist and other meetings than we saw two years ago. the people seem to have become tired of these meetings, and only on Sunday are they now seen. We have been much encouraged by our week evening meetings, and seldom does a night pass but persons anxious about their souls follow us to the hall to inquire more fully the way of salvation. "If that's the Gospel, I've never heard it before," said a gentleman to one of our workers in the Park on Monday evening, last week. He came to the Hall, accepted Christ, and went away praising God; He had been groping in the dark for some time. The previous night quite a number were on their knees seeking Christ. A dying sister rejoiced to know that her daughter was blessed the same evening, and one who had long backslidden.

For nearly twenty years we have now preached in this Park; the almost nightly work entails a vast amount of labour; yet we rejoice to know that a congregation of 2000 were gathered out fourteen years ago, and is still sustained. Efficient helpers will be welcomed on our platform, or among our choir, as my own health is suffering from overwork. We are in the Park on Sundays, Mondays, Wednesdays, and alternate Fridays.

Hyde Park Hall, W. Chas. Cook.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—Well-attended gatherings of women have been held, within the last few weeks, in Whitechapel, Westminster, and the Strand. Between one and two hundred young women, through the kindness of Mr. George Holland, were gathered to an early tea at the Mission Hall, George-yard, and to a breakfast on the following morning. Very earnest addresses were given. The meeting in the Strand was composed of a number of very young girls. All were conversed with by Christian friends. In addition to present results, there was great promise of future good.

DEBASING LITERATURE.—A writer in The Fireside News is "glad to hear that steps have been taken to remove from the railway bookstalls all 'objectionable literature.' The managing partner in the firm of W. H. Smith and Son has written to Rev. W. J. Dawson that he would be 'shocked and deeply disappointed' to find that any bad book is still on sale. It would be a good thing if Christian people would make a wide and minute inspection of all bookstalls and bookshops also, and earnestly protest whenever they find impure novels and papers. In many cases the sellers do not know what they are selling. It is satisfactory to have this frank and straightforward disavowal from the great railway newsagents, for their letter will be regarded as a guarantee for the future."

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. E. J. Parker has concluded a nine days' mission at Waltham Abbey. At the meeting for young converts at the close about twenty-five testified to having found the Saviour during the mission.

Evangelistic Mission.—Tent services were commenced at Canterbury, on Tuesday, on a site granted by the town authorities, and meetings will be continued nightly. Similar services also commence on Sunday next at Grays, in Essex.

Cage-lane Mission, Plumstead.—Great blessing has been experienced in the course of a recent mission here, especially among the children of the Sunday-school, about 850 in number. Mr. Opie Rodway was greatly cheered by seeing more than a hundred children stand up and testify to the praise of the Saviour. Tent work, under the auspices of the Evangelisation Society, has also been carried on with encouraging results.

Rev. W. E. Burroughs, vicar of the Mariners' Church, Kingstown, has concluded an eight days' mission in Westport, co. Mayo. The weather being very fine, large congregations assembled every evening. Some who had not been in church for years were to be seen night after night attentively listening to the words of the preacher—plainly, earnestly, and effectively spoken to them. Two shorter and more sparsely attended services were held each day, and were most profitable. The most marked feature of the mission—next to the practical unanimity with which all members of the Protestant community supported it—was the way in which very great distances were gladly and cheerfully traversed by persons scattered over a large area. Not only did the upper classes constantly drive from outlying places, but many farmers with their families, after the labours of the day were over, were to be seen walking three or four miles each evening through their anxiety for spiritual blessing, and then returning in groups, earnestly discussing the sermon long after the usual hour for retiring to rest.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

In Glasgow there is an extensive traffic for the goodwill and transfer of public licences, for the former large sums being paid. The trade in drink is still far too profitable for the public weal.

It was reported recently that in the Isle of Man the public-houses were to be limited to one for every 600 of the population, and that grocers' licences had been abolished. It was proposed to do these things, but the Bill was thrown out.

FOREIGN.

Pennsylvania State has rejected prohibition by a majority of 200,000.

The State school teachers, Victoria, Australia, by a large majority, resolved recently it was desirable to introduce systematic temperance teaching into State schools.

The Washington Home Association, Chicago, is one of the leading beneficent institutions of that city. It exists for the permanent reclamation of inebriates, and has had considerable success.

At Chicago lately a widow obtained from a publican (a city alderman) £700 compensation for the loss of her husband, whose death by an accident was due to drink obtained at the publican's house.

The Toronto Citizen says that in Canada "practically a clean sweep" has been made of the Scott Act. It attributes the repeals, not to declining temperance sentiment, but to the lack of well-managed, impressive temperance organisations. It was thought the Act would do everything.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on special services during this week, by Mr. R. Cory, Rev. A. T. Jones, of Maindee, and Mr. Opie Rodway, at Callow-hill Mission, Bristol.——For blessing on open-air work in Largs, N.B., during July and August.——For tent services at Cirencester, conducted by Mr. John Elliott.——For blessing on special services in the Cage-lane Mission Tent, High-street, Plumstead, July 7 to 21 (except Saturday), by Mr. George Hefford, of the Evangelisation Society.——In view of the proposal to establish a Pasteur Institute in this country, our readers are asked to pray that He who "went about healing all manner of diseases" would be pleased to guide those who are seeking means for curing disease to remedies not requiring the torturing to death of the lower defenceless animals.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Bishop Barry, late of Sydney, has arrived in London from Australia, and will begin his duties as assistant-Bishop of Rochester at once.

We understand that Rev. H. W. Townsend has resigned his connection with the Irish Church Missions, and that his resignation has been accepted by the Committee.

In March last Bishop Burdon, of South China, ordained two Chinese converts to the ministry in the Fuh-kien province. These make twelve Chinamen admitted to the ministry in that mission of the C.M.S. The first convert was baptized in 1861.

It was a treat to hear such a good old-fashioned sermon as came from the lips of the aged Rev. Lord Forrester, in Christ Church, Wellington, Salop, on Sunday last. The sufferings of Christ and his atoning sacrifice were considered in a manner which left no room for "Down-Grade" theories.

A number of Church Army evangelists are engaged in tents holding daily evangelistic services in various parts of the country. Eight of them are working among the haymakers in Kent, many of whom have become the very wrecks of society. Numbers of these have by their instrumentality become reformed in life.

SALVATION ARMY.

One of the features of the forthcoming Demonstration at the Alexandra Palace is the all-day Salvation meeting in the great tent put up for the purpose.

The boys engaged at the International Headquarters have been holding good meetings at the Great Western Hall, and several good cases of conversion occurred.

Following close upon the recent "ex-prisoners demonstration at Exeter Hall, and the collision with the police in the Strand, comes the information that seventeen men and women on Friday last were sentenced to seven days' imprisonment at Whitchurch, in Hants, for preaching the Gospel to a population of 1900. Several more summonses have been issued.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Western Quarterly Meeting was held in Cardiff on the 25th and 26th ult., and was a time of interest and profit.

Bible-school Conferences in Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings have just been held, and have been at once enthusiastic and instructive. The papers and discussions were able and edifying, and the attendance good.

It is interesting to notice that in Iowa, in one district, as a result of a series of meetings, there were sixty-one applicants for membership, and in another place thirty-one joined, and "there are more to follow." So says The Christian Worker of June 13. The same paper reports Mary A. Marriage Allen's return home after many months' devoted service among coloured people in the Southern States. Walter Marriage accompanies her.

The sad news has reached home that Rachel Metcalfe, after nearly a quarter of a century's service in India, passed away on June 12, at Hoshungabad. Her work among orphan girls and in the girls' school has been invaluable, and was carried on indefatigably, though she has been unable to stand from rheumatism for years. She was the first Friends' resident foreign missionary of recent years, and hers is the first death in the foreign field. Fever probably carried her off.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. J. M. Gibbon bade farewell to his Highgate congregation on Sunday last.

A Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Class has been inaugurated at Prince's-street Church, Norwich, of which Rev. G. S. Barrett is pastor.

Mr. T. E. Ellis, M.P., gave an address on Sunday week to the Young Men's Christian Union, Park Chapel, Crouch End, on the "Influence of Christianity on National Life."

A number of meetings are to be held in different parts of Yorkshire, with the object of promoting a "forward movement" amongst the Congregationalists of that county.

The Adelaide branch of the London Missionary Society have applied to the directors to set apart a special portion of India to be worked by Australian missionaries, to be supported by the Australian churches. Miss Lois Cox is proposed as the first agent.

A series of open-air evangelistic services was held during the week before last in various villages in East Cheshire, under the auspices of the County Congregational Union. There were excellent congregations, including Irish Roman Catholics and others.

The statement is contradicted that Dr. Parker contemplates resigning the pastorate of the City Temple. Nothing is further from his mind at present than the thought of relinquishing his public ministry. Dr. Parker's work was never in a more prosperous condition than at the present time.

At a meeting of the congregation of Whitefield's Tabernacle, held last week, it was unanimously decided to recommend the church and trustees to build a new edifice upon the site where the old tabernacle now stands in Tottenham-court-road. Permission is being asked from the London County Council to erect a temporary iron building on the vacant ground adjoining, so that services and other church work can be carried on in the meantime.

METHODIST.

During the last year or two some very successful and interesting aggressive work has been done by the Wesleyan Church at Clyde Bank, in the Glasgow (Claremont-street) Circuit. A considerable number of men and women (says The Methodist Times) have been soundly converted to God there, not a few of whom belonged to that submerged stratum of life which, alas! is found in all our great cities.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. A. M. Porteous has resigned the charge of the United Presbyterian Church at Cullen, N.B., as he is leaving the country to undertake missionary work at Old Calabar, West Africa.

Regent-square Church continues to be well filled in the morning and crowded at night on Sundays, and considerable accessions are being made to the membership. Rev. John McNeill is just about to leave London for a much needed rest of two months.

BAPTIST.

A new church, consisting of sixty-eight members, has been formally constituted at the chapel recently erected in Ferme Park-road, Hornsey, N.

At Longcross-street Church, Cardiff, under the pastorate of Rev. F. C. Spurr, 150 new members have been received into fellowship during the past year.

One thousand coloured persons, according to The New York Evangelist, were immersed in Richmond, Virginia, U.S., on Sunday, June 9. Of these 438 were baptized by Rev. J. H. Holmes, of the First African Baptist Church in that city.

The memorial stones of a new Welsh Baptist Chapel in Castle-street East, Oxford-circus, were laid last week. The church, which was founded by a few Welsh friends thirty years ago, has now a membership of 250. For some years past the congregation have met in Franklin Hall, but the building became too small, and the present chapel is to take its place. Accommodation will be provided for about 650 persons.

The London Baptist Association are now making definite arrangements for the establishment of a mission on somewhat similar lines to the Wesleyan "Forward Movement." John-street Chapel, Bedford-row, W.C. (where the late Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel ministered), on account of its venerated associations, its exceptional position among the masses of the people, and its situation in the very heart of the Metropolis, is to be adapted as a centre of aggressive evangelistic work. The committee think this plan will be better than obtaining a central hall, and believe it will be well to try the work as an experiment in one place first. Rev. J. E. Shepherd, pastor of John-street Chapel, is to be the leader of the work; he will be assisted by another minister to be appointed.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

During the past week an encouraging series of evangelistic services was held in Carryduff Presbyterian Church by Rev. J. C. Ferris, of Belfast, and others. The meetings were largely attended.

The Salvation Army is working successfully at Cookstown, where Rev. Dr. Wilson, ex-Moderator of the General Assembly, has placed the schoolroom of his church at their disposal. The officers of the Cookstown branch of the Army occupied his pulpit on a recent Sabbath evening.

The Hibernian Band of Hope Union has now 1600 affiliated branches, and an average of 200 members in each branch. In addition to its special work as a temperance organisation, the Union tries to promote various kinds of industries and a knowledge of art amongst its members.

The Belfast Seamen's Friend Society is doing a good work. It is the aim of the Society to do the office of Christian friendship to sailors ashore and afloat, or to their families. During the year 1435 vessels were visited by the agents of the Society, and many impressions for good are believed to have been made.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. Canon John Stewart, rector of West Derby, Liverpool.—Rev. John Hamer, of Southport, formerly pastor of the Congregational churches at Church Stratton and Bishop's Castle.—Rev. Owen Thomas, of Blaenpantarfi, Newcastle Emlyn, one of the oldest and most esteemed Congregational ministers in Wales.—Rev. F. F. Gough, from 1849 to 1881 a C.M.S. missionary at Ningpo, China.—Rev. W. Calderwood, a missionary of the American Presbyterian Church at Ludhiana, India.—The Venerable Edwin Smart, archdeacon and canon of St. Asaph, Wales.—Rev. N. J. S. Naish, Baptist minister of Great Shelford, Cambridge.—Rev. Charles Deane, vicar of St. Faith's, Maidstone, Kent.

THE GOVERNMENT OF JAVA have forbidden under heavy penalties, the slaughter of lizards, the fact that noxious insects are increasing in the island having been traced to destruction of the lizards, in order that purses, &c., might be made from their skins.

NEW GUINEA.—Rev. E. B. Savage, of the London Missionary Society, Murray Island, Torres' Straits, has successfully established new stations among the tribes of Fly River, New Guinea. At Kiwai, the principal village of the island of that name at the mouth of Fly River, and also at Uabuda and Sumaint, work has been commenced with many hopeful indications. At the latter place, Kusi, one of the students of the Murray Island Native Teachers' Christian Training Institution, was located with the chief, who promised to take care of him, and said, now that he had a missionary among his people, they would abandon their heathenish practices and listen to the word of their teacher.

Letters to the Editor.

CONFERENCE OF EVANGELICAL CHURCHMEN.

Sir,—I am glad to say that there is no ground for the regret expressed in your last issue that the Protestant sentiment at the late private Conference of Evangelical Churchmen was deficient in strength.

The Conference was, it is true, divided in opinion on several points; but its thorough Protestant tone was unmistakable. A proposal to substitute the word "National" for "Protestant" in the title of the new society found, if I rightly observed, hardly any supporters, the latter being adopted almost by acclamation.

I differ from the policy of the new society, and deprecate its formation, but I think it only right to say that there appeared to me to be no doubt whatever as to the Protestant feeling of the meeting. S. Arthur Blackwood.

IN DEFENCE OF VIVISECTION.

Dear Sir,—There are two main arguments adduced by anti-vivisectionists, alluded to in your leaderette last week, which are unsupported by any sound basis of truth, and which are controverted by absolute facts:—

(1) That vivisection is morally wrong and opposed to Biblical teaching, in that it means the taking of animal life, and sufferings imposed on animals.

(2) That vivisection has never done any good.

Now, the former of these propositions takes for granted, and as an axiom, that which needs proof and is the centre of the whole discussion. Why, may I ask, is vivisection as practised in this country morally wrong, and how can such a statement be maintained from the Bible? Personally, I read there the instructions given to man by God as to sacrifices which entailed the destruction of millions of innocent creatures, who had to suffer the penalty of death for the benefit of humanity spiritually. Was not our salvation obtained by our Lord Jesus through a life made perfect through suffering, and a death of the most cruel agony and torture? and is not the very centre of all Christian doctrine, the vicarious suffering of the innocent for the guilty (John xv. 13)? Certainly one condemns willingly and unflinchingly any needless infliction of pain; but when one reads, on the indubitable authority of Mr. Erichsen ("and sure, he is an honourable man!"), that but a minute proportion of the cases of vivisection during the past year caused any pain, and when one knows how very stringent are the regulations governing its practice in this country, and when one also remembers that the majority of the work closely simulates that type of human vivisection known as operative surgery, one cannot but feel, as a Christian, that the outcry against it is both unnecessary and harmful.

Let anyone with a truly loving heart stand, as in the course of busy surgical practice I constantly do, by the bedside of one made in the image of God and for his pleasure, watching the body writhing in an agony which wrecks every fibre, and knowing that human resource is useless—particularly if that suffering one be a little child, or a beloved friend—and surely a hearty welcome will be given to any knowledge which may alleviate such suffering, even though gained at the expense of pain to a few animals.

And has such knowledge been obtained, and turned to useful account? Yes; and, in the teeth of all anti-vivisection contradictions, a thousand times, yes! The records of the past years are full of cases of successful operations on brain and abdomen; and, without controversy, or going any further afield, these triumphs (so numerous and common nowadays) are distinctly due to vivisection, and are sufficient to prove its claims to beneficent usefulness.—Very truly yours,

Albert Carless, F.R.C.S., M.S. (Lond.).

15, Stratford-place, W., June 28.

[The arguments of Dr. Carless do not seem to us conclusive. (a) The Biblical narrative certainly does not support the idea that animals sacrificed were tortured any more than are oxen and sheep when killed for human food. (b) The sufferings of our Lord were inflicted at the hands "of wicked men," as Peter tells us. (c) Dr. Carless, in his concluding sentence, himself "takes for granted, and as an axiom, that which needs proof, and is the centre of the whole discussion," in merely asserting that "the triumphs are distinctly due to vivisection." This assertion certainly requires proof. —Ed.]

Arlington square, London, N.—After two years of prayer and waiting, Rev. H. J. Berguer, of St. Philip's Church, was able last September to open a mission hall, which was much used during the winter, nine services being held weekly. The burden has, however, fallen on two or three, who have done their utmost to sustain the effort. Mr. Berguer writes to us:—"We are determined not to close the hall, but to go on in faith, for we have reason to believe that if we can raise £10 or £12 now the greater part of our difficulty will be over before the winter sets in."—Address Rev. Henry J. Berguer, The Vicarage, Arlington-square, London, N.

DONATIONS RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, JULY 1, 1889.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION. — The twenty-seventh annual meeting of workers and friends took place at the Gospel Hall, on Monday, June 24. The company sat down to tea in the school-room, and enjoyed a social chat together. Afterwards in the large hall a profitable time was spent in thanksgiving to God for the blessing vouchsafed through the year. Several leaders engaged in the Mission gave statements of the progress of the work in their hands. A letter was read from Mr. W. Lewis, regretting his absence on account of Mrs. Lewis's continued illness.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Major H. E. Warren. | John R. Fowler, Esq. | James Barton, Esq. | R. Wade Thompson, Esq. | Thomas P. Law, Esq.

THE IRISH EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY has now been at work fifteen years, and has had very great blessing. It has pleased God to use their Evangelists in the proclamation of the Gospel to bring a very large number into the fold of Christ. The Society's work is extending, and the Committee feel it to be right that the Church of God should more widely know of and be invited to aid more largely in this work.

MODE OF OPERATION, &c.

THE EVANGELISTS of this Society belong, as individuals, to many denominations, but as its Evangelists they represent none. They go out for this Society, without in any way taking part, publicly or privately, in questions relating to denominational differences, but only as Evangelists, to preach the glorious Gospel of Christ to perishing sinners, in its fulness and freeness, and to seek, under the constraining power of the love of Christ, to win souls to Him.

MEETINGS.—The Society is prepared at all times to receive applications and to arrange for Evangelistic Meetings, in any locality, from clergymen or laymen.

MEANS.—The work of the Society is maintained by voluntary contributions, and help is specially needed.

The report for the past year can be had on application to the Hon. Sec., and will repay perusal.

Contributions will be received by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, by the Treasurer, or Honorary Secretary.

JAMES BARTON, Hon. Sec.

Dundalk, June 27, 1889.

THE CRIPPLES' HOME FOR GIRLS,

17A, MARYLEBONE ROAD, W.

SINCE the opening of the Home in 1851 NINE HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-FOUR GIRLS HAVE BEEN RECEIVED, hundreds of these being malformed and crippled, many of the most helpless having received large benefit from skilled surgical treatment.

After Christian training and being taught a trade—chiefly needlework and straw bonnet-making—numbers of them are living useful, self-supporting lives.

Rebuilding the Home has REDUCED THE RESERVE FUND BY NINE THOUSAND POUNDS, which involves a serious loss of income.

As shelter is provided for upwards of ONE HUNDRED CRIPPLED GIRLS, the yearly expenditure will be large. FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED.

Further information will be given and Contributions gratefully received by Dr. ROUTH, Treasurer, 52, Montagu-square, W., and Miss BURMESTER, Sub-Treasurer, 9, Park-square West, N.W.

Thousands of Fishermen are engaged all the year round in providing OUR TABLES with fish. These men, who FOR US hazard their lives and toil through furious blasts and sleety storm (not only cut off from the comforts of home, but at two days' distance from medical or surgical aid), may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy. THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS, carrying to the Fishermen the message of Divine mercy and love, affording relief in sickness, and cheering dull lives by their presence.

HELP WANTED FOR THE TOILERS OF THE DEEP.

TEN Mission Vessels now cruise with the Trawling Fleets, each being at once a CHURCH, DISPENSARY, LIBRARY, and CLUB. Funds are required to provide a Mission Vessel for EVERY FLEET, and for the maintenance of the HOSPITAL MISSION SHIPS Queen Victoria and Albert. The urgent necessity of these floating Hospitals is shown by the fact that during last year over 7,000 cases of accident and sickness were successfully treated on board the Dispensary of the Mission Vessels. WHO WILL HELP? Large or small Offerings will be thankfully acknowledged.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED

To meet the necessities of the PARIS CITY MISSION. A powerful Gospel work is now being done in the great pleasure city, and in every department this Society is taking an active part. Its eight missionaries in turns take charge of the Salles Evangéliques, from which a continuous circulation of Bibles, Gospels, and Tracts are made to the myriads of visitors to the Exhibition. In many halls they preach the glorious Gospel, and are diligent in visiting from house to house.

SPECIAL NEED is the cause of this appeal.

Information given and contributions gratefully received by the Chairman of London Committee, G. H. BENSON, Esq., 150, Leadenhall-street, E.C.; and by the Hon. Secretary, J. M. WEYLLAND, 31, Carlton-hill, St. John's Wood, N.W.

The ADVANTAGES JAQUES & JAQUES offer are:—
1.—The certainty of obtaining materials that are worn in le beau monde.
2.—The exclusive character of their commodities, many designs being confined to them alone for Great Britain, and, bon gré, mal gré, English mills cannot supply these.
3.—Carriage is paid to all parts of the United Kingdom on all orders, small or large.

THE EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY:

Or, THE WRITTEN AND LIVING WORD of GOD.

By ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D.

Cloth boards, 2s. 6d. Tinted covers, 2s.

Presentation Edition:
Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"A handbook of Evidences of Christianity by which the author found his way out of the deep darkness of doubt into the full light of day, and found that the Bible was the Book of God and Christ the Son of God. May it help many out of Doubting Castle!"
Methodist Times.

"Too often, treatises on the Christian Evidences are so learned and scholastic that they are of use to students only. Here, however, is a book of such a plain, practical, common-sense stamp that it cannot fail to be highly popular."—Footsteps of Truth.

"Written in a clear, logical, and devout style. We hope some who are in the dark may read and be brought into light. It has the true ring of the old Gospel, and should produce lasting good on some of the young men of our congregation who are becoming bewildered by the Babel of tongues ever and anon pretending to have discovered some new thing calculated to throw suspicion and doubt on the old."—Baptist Messenger.

NEW WORK by Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

THE SHEPHERD PSALM:

MEDITATIONS on the 23rd PSALM.

"The Lord is my Shepherd:
I shall not want."

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

(OF REGENT'S PARK CHAPEL).

In a Pocket Volume, Cloth boards, 1s.;

Superior Edition—Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 1s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

"The Psalm of Psalms."
The Shepherd-Lord.
Pastures of Tender Grass and Waters of Rest.
"He Restoreth my Soul."
The Shepherd's Leading.
The Valley of Shadow.
Comfort through the Rod and the Staff.
"The Banquet."
"Thou anointest my head with oil."
The Overflowing Cup.
The Celestial Escort.
"The House of the Lord for ever."

. . . "And all this is the Psalm before us. It is an oasis in the desert; it is a bower on a hill of arduous climbing; it is a grotto in a scorching noon; it is a sequestered arbour for calm and heavenly meditation; it is one of the most holy places in the temple of Scripture. Come hither, weary ones, restless ones, heavy-laden ones; sit down in this cool and calm resort, whilst the music of its rhythm charms away the thoughts that break your peace. How safe and blest are you, to whom the Lord is Shepherd!"

THE PRESENT TENSES of the BLESSED LIFE.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Cloth Boards, 1s.;
Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

"The Author has learnt the secret of living in the will of God, and he is doing his best to teach this secret to others. It is the very book to put into the hands of a humble Christian seeking a higher, calmer, and steadier life."—Irish Congregational Magazine.

14th Thousand.

CHRISTIAN LIVING.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Cloth Boards, 1s.;
Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

"Mr. Meyer writes with all the warmth of one who tastes, handles, and feels the Word of Life. In this book he stretches out a loving hand to his fellows in the Christian course, eager to help them in the pathway of holiness."—Footsteps of Truth.

ABRAHAM: or, THE OBEDIENCE OF FAITH.

6th Thousand.

Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.; Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

With Nine Illustrations, Specially Engraved for this Work.

"This book is beautifully illustrated, and so tastefully bound as to be a most acceptable gift book. . . . Our teachers may learn from it how to draw out the spiritual lessons of the sacred Word."—Gospel Magazin .

"Very acceptable to preachers and teachers. . . Perhaps the finest chapter in the work is that treating of the supremely pathetic story of Abraham's great trial."
The Quiver.

"Mr. Meyer is a meditative writer, keen to observe the spiritual suggestions of Bible narratives. He works along the lines made familiar by the works of Dr. Macduff, but there are signs of wider reading, and a stronger and more independent mind. This book is beautifully illustrated, and so tastefully bound as to be a most acceptable gift book. But the contents are such that no Christian can rise from its perusal without feeling consciously strengthened in God, and inspired afresh for the godly life. Our teachers may learn from it how to draw out the spiritual lessons of the Sacred Word."
Sunday-School Chronicle.

9th Thousand.

ELIJAH: and the SECRET OF HIS POWER.

With Nine Original Illustrations.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition:
Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"The lessons to be learnt from the life of this prophet are well drawn out and emphasised in the pages before us. . . . Mr. Meyer's language is clear, forcible, descriptive, and interesting; his doctrine is always pure and elevating."—The Rock.

"This is a most stimulating book. It sparkles with heavenly light, and glows with heavenly fire from beginning to end. We honestly and heartily recommend it."
The Presbyterian Messenger.

THE STORY OF JACOB RETOLD.

With full-page Illustrations of the River Jordan and Jacob's Well.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition:
Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"Exceedingly good. Not only spiritual, as everything from our brother, Mr. Meyer, would be—but also thoughtful, fresh, suggestive, and thoroughly practical."
Sword and Trowel.

"We have had considerable pleasure in reading this book on the life of Jacob. Mr. Meyer has great descriptive power. He can tell a narrative well. The subject in his hand glows with life. . . . The volume is prettily got up, and well bound."—The Baptist Messenger.

NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

PULVERMACHER'S WORLD-FAMED GALVANIC BELTS, for the cure of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION and DEBILITY, have received Testimonials from three Physicians to Her Majesty the Queen and the leading Physicians of Nine London Hospitals, including Forty Members of the Royal College of Physicians of London.

The distressing symptoms of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION and DEBILITY are speedily removed by means of Pulvermacher's World-famed Galvanic Belts, which are so arranged as to convey a continuous electric current direct to the affected parts, gradually stimulating and strengthening all the nerves and muscles, and speedily arresting all symptoms of waste and decay.

Dr. C. HANDFIELD JONES, F.R.C.P., F.R.S., Physician to St. Mary's Hospital, says: "I am satisfied that Mr. PULVERMACHER is an honest and earnest labourer in the field of science, and I think he deserves to meet with every encouragement from the profession and scientific men."

Dr. H. A. ALLBUTT, M.R.C.P., 24, Park Square, Leeds, writes, October, 1888: "I always recommend with confidence Mr. PULVERMACHER'S BELTS. Ladies recovering from illness incidental to their sex will find these BELTS of vast assistance in restoring lost nerve power."

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

LETTER from Mr. J. CRAWFORD, of the ORDNANCE SURVEY, DORCHESTER.

Mr. Crawford was an old patient of mine, whose wonderful recovery five or six years age is reported in the Appendix to my work on Consumption, &c., Case CLXV., page 61. While under my treatment he was at Evercreech, Somerset, afterwards at Roborough, Devon, and at Wells, Somerset. (Those engaged in the Ordnance Survey are moved about the country frequently).

He writes me on April 20 of this year: "Send me a bottle of medicine. I am happy to inform you that since my recovery under your treatment I have enjoyed the best of health, with the blessing of God. I have not known what a day's illness is since then.

"In my occupation I am exposed to all weathers, and so frequently take a cold; but with recourse to your excellent medicine it passes off without any effect on me.

"I must conclude with sincere thanks. May God spare you for many years, to be as great a benefit to others as you have been to me.—Yours, &c., J. Crawford, Ordnance Survey, Maiden Newton, Dorchester."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Lieut.-General Sir Robert hayre.

Through lack of space we are compelled o defer giving in this issue our report of Dr. Pentecost's closing address at Mildmay, number of the afternoon gatherings, and ther interesting matter.

A member of the Y.W.C.A., Dovercourt, ssex, writes:—

May I through your columns say one word at is holiday season about the great evil which may ise from the heads of households leaving a son or her relative alone in the house with the maid-rvant or servants. Cases having come to my ersonal knowledge of the most distressing results suing from want of thought in this matter, I el it my duty in behalf of poor unprotected girls address an appeal to house mistresses and asters not to run the risk, through carelessness in is matter, of bringing sin upon their conscience, d ruin, as in a case I have now upon my heart, on the body and soul of a fellow-creature.

We learn that the sport of pigeon-flying greatly on the increase in the Black ountry. The matches mostly come off on nday. The railway companies do all they n to facilitate them by carrying the pigeons d liberating the birds according to in-ructions. Our correspondent writes that st Sunday week from one small station enty-two boxes containing pigeons were oked. To see these off over a hundred lliers and their friends were at the station. ese boxes are booked twenty to forty iles. The station-master on receipt has to erate the pigeon, enter the time on the bel, and return the box by next train. The in this work must be to a God-fearing ation-master can be well understood. This affic is steadily increasing Sunday by nday. All this Sunday flying is for atches on which there is much betting. rely directors cannot be aware how their rvants have to co-operate in facilitating nday sport and Sunday gambling.

It appears that, not content with the eavour to "convert" Scotland, there is be another Romanist Mission, this time th the avowed object of "winning back e Principality to the old faith." The elsh language is to be largely utilised "for e diffusion of Catholic truth," both by eans of literature and preaching. The esent outlook, from the Roman point of ew, is, however, but a gloomy one, and it uld be gloomier still, were it not for the esence in Wales of large numbers of Irish migrants, who in many places make up nost the entire "Mission." Rome has for g coveted Wales, and doubtless a sturdy ort will be made to gain ground there. It ll not suffice, however, simply to arouse e sympathy of the Welsh people by the e of their language; the influence of the en Bible in Wales will have to be counter-ed, and wherever Rome has to face God's rd, she is not merely feeble, but positively werless.

It is pitiful to read of the burial of a little girl in Essex in the early morning, and without any religious service, the only reason for the act being that the child was unbaptized. It is, indeed, stated that the mother of the child was unmarried; but, for this and the other fact to which we have referred, the girl could not be held responsible. One would have thought that in this nineteenth century it would not have been impossible to have found in the New Testament narrative of the life of Jesus a precedent which would have justified a little Christian charity, and an endeavour to imitate the Divine mercy and loving-kindness of the Saviour.

The latest return shows that the deposits in the Post Office Savings Banks in Ireland now amount to over three and a quarter millions sterling, while in Scotland they have reached only to one and a quarter, and in Wales two millions. The figures certainly are remarkable, and they point to the idea that in more favourable circumstances the Irish might become a very thrifty people. A Saturday-closing measure and the extension of the Sunday Closing Bill would go far to help them in this direction, for every traveller in the sister island must have recognised the fact that if there is one enemy rather than another from which the Irish people require protection that foe is drink.

It appears from recent statistics that Denmark is the most drunken country in Europe, if the consumption of intoxicants per head of the population can be regarded as the standard. England, despite all we hear of her taking the front rank as compared with Continental countries, stands eighth down the dread list, and is a far more temperate country than America. Similarly, the proportion of suicides per million of the population is only 175 in Great Britain, whereas in Denmark it is 251, and in Saxony 392. What, therefore, must be the condition of the countries which rank highest?

In a recent letter to The Morning Post Dr. Drysdale drew timely attention to the Alcoholic Congress which is sitting in Paris this month to consider the evidence collected by a very important committee of the French Senate on the drink-traffic in that country. It is earnestly hoped that the discussion will lead to the devising of some means of extrication from the social morass into which France's mistaken policy of "free trade in drink" has plunged her. That it has resulted in a terrible increase of lunacy, suicide, disease, and crime generally, is certain. The disease has obtained so firm a hold upon France—formerly reputed to be a very sober country—that the remedy, to be effectual, must be drastic. As a check upon the drinking prevalent amongst children, which is the most painful feature of the case, cannot the English institution of the Band of Hope be introduced in France?

One statement in Dr. Drysdale's letter may be commended to the serious attention of spirit-drinkers in England: he avers that although France has of late years only made about four thousand hectolitres (eighty-eight thousand gallons) of pure alcohol, yet the United Kingdom annually consumes almost three times this quantity of so-called "French brandy."

A contemporary publishes a striking account of the prohibitionist township of Evanston, near Chicago, which must be extremely gratifying to all sympathisers with the cause of temperance. The land on which it is built was given by a Mr. Evans some thirty years ago, for a university, with the stipulation that no alcoholic beverages should be sold within a radius of four miles. This has been endorsed by the State legislature, and the prohibition is quite complete, with very satisfactory results. The town numbers nearly 12,000 inhabitants, and is in a most thriving condition. Crime is well nigh unknown; churches, meeting-halls, playing-fields, and libraries, are more extensive and better managed than in any place of similar size. Virtue and thrift predominate, and the services of such persons as the undertaker, sexton, pawnbroker, or policeman, are most rarely called into requisition.

Whilst on the one hand we have numbers of people who are rabid at the very idea of the discontinuance of vivisection, with its attendant agonies, it is pleasant to notice in what new directions mercy and kindness to the dumb animals are finding outlets. The latest development, that of a street ambulance in London for injured horses and other animals, certainly deserves public support, and we trust the Lady Frances Trevanion, and the Lady Florence Clinton, who have commenced the movement, which for long has been so badly wanted, will find much sympathy and practical help in their work. Anyone who is disposed to help in relieving the poor animals in the painful accidents which so frequently happen to them in their daily toil in the streets will be able to do so by sending a subscription for the purpose to the Animals' Institute, 9, Kinnerton-street, Knightsbridge.

Between the Word of God rightly understood and the works of God as unfolded to us by reverent and accurate investigation, there never has been and never can be any contradiction; or, as was well said by Sir John Herschell: "All human discoveries seem to be made only for the purpose of confirming more strongly the truths that have come from on high, and are contained in the sacred writings." A forcible illustration of this is furnished by one of the latest discoveries of modern science. At the recent conversazione of the Royal Society it was shown that clouds could not exist where there is no dust, for every cloud has a nucleus of dust. How instructive then, in this connection, are the words of Nahum i. 3: "The clouds are the dust of his feet." This may be a lesson to us all, not to be content with a surface study of Scripture, and to beware of accepting too readily the idea that many of its inspired statements are poetry rather than fact. God's facts are often the highest poetry.

Sunderland is to be congratulated upon having declined to sanction the adoption of one of the features of the Continental Sunday. At a recent town meeting the proposal that the Council should grant the use of the park band-stand for Sunday afternoon music was negatived by a very large majority. The proposition (as is generally the case) was made ostensibly in the interests of the working classes, but it was declared by a speaker, who described himself as having been "in touch with the working classes ever since he left school," that a poll of them would show a very different result. The principal advocate of this Sunday music alienated from himself much of the support which he would otherwise have received by using very uncalled for language, and indulging in gross personalities.

A very pertinent question was asked by one of the speakers: "Did the love of art, and of music, and all that was beautiful, raise Corinth or Athens from the depths of degradation to which they were reduced?" To this there can be but one answer. Moreover, there is too much reason to fear lest Sunday music in the parks, and similar entertainments, may prove the "thin end of the wedge" for the complete spoiling of the Sabbath as a God-given day of rest for man and beast. It appears from an announcement in the Sunderland paper that the working men may, if they wish, hear the band in the park on week-day evenings.

That gambling and betting, no less than drunkenness and impurity, have become a national plague-spot is painfully evident to all thoughtful observers. It is, therefore, hoped that some practical improvement will result from the recent discussion in Convocation on the subject, when a resolution was carried recommending that parents, teachers, and employers of labour, and all persons in authority, as well as the clergy, should remonstrate with individuals; that there should be plain speaking from the pulpit against the sinfulness of the practice; and that the employment of raffles and lotteries at bazaars and fancy fairs should be discouraged. The last clause, instead of "covering them with ridicule" (as we regret was objected by a suffragan bishop), reflects credit upon the consistency of the assembly. But reformation should begin at the top of the social scale. Have any of the bishops ever personally and faithfully remonstrated with any of those offenders of noble birth and high place with whom they are sometimes brought into contact?

The visit of the Shah of Persia to Great Britain has been an occasion fraught with grand possibilities, but we regret to feel that the best side of English life has not so far been seen by his Majesty. If little has been done to exhibit to his view the elevating and Christian institutions of England, we fear that more than enough has already been done to initiate him into evil practices, additional to those which are commonly believed to characterise his Court life. The Daily News of Saturday last states that at Kempton Park races, on the previous day, his Majesty became acquainted with the practice of betting; indeed, his first bet was made for him by no less a personage than the Prince of Wales. As that first bet was a winning one, it is hardly astonishing that the Shah at once evinced an absorbing interest in the proceedings. Though horse-racing is not unfrequent in Persia, betting on results is said to be practically unknown. The practice is only evil, and leads to evil continually. If now it should be established under royal patronage in the Shah's dominion, who shall say what wickedness and misery may not be the outcome of the initiatory lesson in gambling thus given to his Majesty by the Heir to the British Crown?

For a providential purpose, not yet fully disclosed, the eyes of men are turned increasingly to Africa, and an article in Blackwood's Magazine for July will be read with painful interest. In Central Africa the position of Europeans is becoming critical. The slave trade is being revived in enormous proportions, and with unprecedented violence. The Arab man-stealers are gaining great advantages. The Church Missionary Society is powerless to deal with them in Uganda; the slavers have the mastery in the Congo Free State, over the African Lakes Company, and are powerful on the Zanzibar coast. At the north end of Lake Nyassa the safety of Scotch traders is precarious, and everywhere the opposition to missionaries is growingly malignant. Many are the grave problems which now confront us. A graver than this African one is not before the civilised nations of the world.

A prevalence of indecent language in the streets has been the lamentation of Birmingham people, and they rejoice in a recent rebuke on the part of the magistrates. Two clerks fouled a railway carriage with such language in the presence of two respectable young women and a male traveller. Happily the latter was a railway official. He summoned the two young men. The magistrates mercifully spared the repetition of the words by one of the women, sternly rebuked the offenders, and fined each of them two pounds and costs, or in default a month's imprisonment. Others besides Birmingham citizens will rejoice in such an act of exemplary firmness.

An article in The National Review for this month, on the working classes, will well repay perusal. Its optimism presents an important side of the question. On the other hand, it speaks strongly of the self-assuming men who obtain places as the upper officials in unions and clubs, but it declares that artizans and labourers do not as a mass sympathise with revolutionary doctrines and Socialism; that they do not accept the exaggerated statements made as to the number of the unemployed; that they will not in some places hear speakers who assail the throne; that many of them know well that revolution in England would be ruin all round; that they are increasingly alive to the benefits of education; that there is also a deep religious feeling among many, and that in these respects England contrasts most favourably with other nations. An endeavour to understand our working-classes is one of the first duties of those who would serve them.

Every week we are finding confirmation of the aptness of the Popish motto—Semper eadem. The controllers of that anti-Christian and iniquitous system seem to learn nothing and to forget nothing: except to acquire more consummate skill in the arts of intolerance, and to forget that they are not living in the Dark Ages. In a recent leading article The Standard gives a well deserved and scathing exposure of the action of the Pope and his satellites, with respect to the erection of a statue in Rome to Giordano Bruno, who was burnt there in 1600, for holding heretical opinions. Our contemporary naturally supposed that the Papal authorities would be only too glad to let such an atrocity be forgotten; instead of that it is virtually justified. Says The Standard:—

> It may be as astonishing as it is disappointing but there is no shirking the obvious conclusion. The Pope and those who agree with him consider Giordano Bruno had his deserts. It is hardly an exaggeration to say that the legitimate inference is, that if they had the power they would again pile up the faggots and thrust in the torch, as punishment for the holding of opinions on certain abstruse points in which they themselves do not happen to participate. Every right-minded and generous man will be disposed to exclaim, "Thank heaven, they have not got the power!" And his inmost resolve will be that they never shall have it again, come what may. There could not be a more eloquent, more useful, or more timely commentary on the demand for the revival of the temporal power of the Papacy than this striking evidence and illustration of what use the Papacy would make of its recovered authority, if the restoration of its prerogatives were only complete enough and absolute enough.

To the expression of thankfulness and the resolve of the writer of these trenchant words, we add our most earnest, Amen.

The fact that the Papal system does not totter to its fall under such repeated exposures, only proves that it is the very masterpiece of Satanic ingenuity. It has lately received another crushing blow through the defection of Rev. Thomas Connellan, of Athlone, Ireland, and his powerful pamphlets, "Hear the other side" and "Letter to Roman Catholics" (6d. and 1d. George Herbert, Dublin. We cannot but believe that if these unveilings of the falsity and the foulness of Romish teaching and practice were given a wide circulation throughout the country, the last lingering hope of any recovery of Papal supremacy in these realms would be for ever at an end.

THE RIGHT OF PROCESSION.—Referring to the recent case of the stopping of a Salvation Army procession in the Strand, while on the way to Exeter Hall, a contemporary remarks:—"We fail to see why the business of the City should be paralysed whenever it suits the authorities to have a procession, as on 'Lord Mayor's day' and other occasions less excusable on prescriptive grounds, and yet Salvationists are to be bundled off to gaol if they march through the streets to their meeting-places."

"I'VE GOT A GOOD OLD MOTHER; I wish I was like her!" So said one of the large party of ladies of the ballet (numbering over a hundred) which Mr. W. Forbes, assisted by some lady workers, took to Epsom Downs for an outing on Friday last. Nor was this an isolated case, for personal conversation elicited from not a few that in spite of the outward gaiety which characterises the life in which they are engaged, there lurks in the heart a desire for something better. It is a sadly interesting work in which Mr. Forbes is engaged, but one in which a sympathetic heart and strong reliance upon God are required. Having been thus engaged for eleven years, Mr. Forbes has been able to follow up and trace the workings of the Spirit of God in many a heart in which the seed has been sown, and, in many instances, with most encouraging results. The work, naturally, entails much anxiety and not little expense. Mr. Forbes will be glad to communicate respecting it with any friends whose interest is stirred on behalf of the multitudes of young women engaged in this perilous calling, but to whom no other door of employment seems open. His address is 71, Tollington-road, Holloway, London, N.

Mischievous Exposition.

A CORRESPONDENT, H. B. B., Brighton, supposes that in our notice of an article on our Lord's first temptation, in The Expositor for May, the views of the writer were sanctioned by us. We regret to say that we have seldom seen more glaring and more blaring falsification of Scripture in the name of exposition.

The significance of the baptism of Jesus appears to be utterly misunderstood. The writer, Rev. W. W. Peyton, says :—

> To be human, in the ideal of humanity, is all righteousness. Christ, in baptism, accepts this humanity (p. 369).

Christ's baptism by John was not the acceptance of an ideal humanity, but the acceptance of the people's sins as though they had been his own, that in due time He might put them away by his death.

The Son of God came "to destroy the works of the devil," and the necessary preliminary was that He Himself should be tested, and his superiority to all the temptations of the devil made manifest. But Mr. Peyton says :—

> It is not mere endurance, physical or moral, that is tested here, but it is a vision of the structure of human nature which is given to Christ, and the problem is handed to Him to develop a new quality in it..." If Thou art the Son of God, and in the consciousness of power by thy recent baptism, as solar worlds and planetary conjunctions, light and heat, are at thy bidding, grow heavier harvests, make thyself monarch of plenty, make men comfortable, save them by first mitigating their hard outward lot. An acre produces twenty-eight bushels of wheat, cause it to produce one hundred bushels, and the lot is mended, and they will be set free to more elevating occupations." The income per head in Britain is £30 a year, in France £20, in Turkey £4, in India £2. Men are underfed, underclothed, underhoused. Raise this income to £300 a year, and the human conditions will be dignified and sweetened. This is the idea which the allegory of the temptation literature expresses (p. 375).

Mr. Peyton considers "the temptation literature" poetic, and allegorical. But could any assertion be more deceptive and mischievous, more gratuitous and unjustifiable, than that the above paragraph "is the idea which the allegory of the temptation literature expresses."

It is not clear whether Mr. Peyton believes that there was any devil exterior to Christ, for he says of his imaginary version of the first temptation :—

> This is a plausible method of procedure, and the devil of a modified programme, which appeals to Him (p. 376)...This line of thought gives a natural basis to that conference with Himself which Christ holds in the wilderness, out of which comes the tempting wish, which calls the power of divinity to its aid (p. 380). (The italics are ours.)

Can the author really mean that the devil, to be tempted by whom Jesus was driven by the Spirit into the wilderness, was "the devil of a modified programme" of human life ? or does he perceive what is involved in the statement that "these temptations must be strictly regarded as visions and debates of the mind" (p. 370) ; that out of Christ's conference with Himself "comes the tempting wish," &c. If this were true, the blessed Lord Jesus could have made no atonement for our sins, for He would have been a sinful man Himself.

The latter part of Mr. Peyton's paper, dealing with the social condition of the world at the present time, is true and suggestive, and inspired by a spirit of earnest philanthropy. This, however, has nothing whatever to do with the great temptation which the author professes to expound.

The title of the magazine in which it appeared, The Expositor, virtually pledges it to expound the Scripture, not to read into it what no one else ever found there. We seriously appeal to the Editor of this professedly evangelical publication to consider how such poisonous seed may affect, through his ministerial readers, congregations which are only too willing to be blindly led by their teachers.

The Question of the Hour.

DEAR SIR,—I wish to thank you for having published in your columns the articles signed "A Missionary." They have encouraged and strengthened me much, and I feel convinced that though marked, as all human productions, with some errors of judgment, they were prompted by the Holy Ghost—were the result of conviction and of grace given by Him.

I am not myself working according to the systems he criticises, and yet even I have often felt, like the rest, that what we especially lacked was money. In fact, I would often be aghast at myself to find how much the need of mere money brought me to the throne of grace. But surely conscience within us all confirms the truth of what "A Missionary" writes, that it is not money but the power of the Holy Ghost that is so sadly lacking.

It is surely a strange, a nigh unaccountable thing, that all these missions should have to be sustained from abroad, not only in their commencement, but for so many years after. Surely there is something faulty in the system, and instead of resenting the criticism, in the way Mr. Eugene Stock does, it should be welcomed, and with bowed heads we should all humble ourselves before the Lord, and ask light as to our methods of work.

My own experience in mission work is limited to about four years; but, as I have moved about considerably, I have become acquainted with many of the missionaries, and seen specimens of the work of each of the denominations. Most of the missionaries whom I know are men of hard work, courage, and self-denial; for nearly all of them I have only words of praise. The faults of the work can, I believe, be distinctly traced to the methods pursued, and no one should feel hurt at the criticism of mere machinery. For my part, I welcome criticism as to my methods—in fact, have ever sought it, and am ready always to give my reasons for the system I pursue. An honest discussion of methods, in which all would welcome and none resent even the sharpest criticism, as long as methods only and not persons are attacked, would surely do good, and ought to be desired by all whose hearts are really in the work,

"A Missionary's" explanation of Luke xxii. 36 is, I think, the weakest point in his articles. Mr. Stock's is much better; but he does not fully meet the difficulty about the command to carry a sword. That courageous servant of God, James Pascoe (of whom your columns have often spoken), believed fully that it enjoins the bearing of weapons when necessary for self-defence. Having been with him in his mountain home in Mexico, and knowing something of the continual risks he was running, I felt no heart to condemn him; perhaps I would have done the same myself if I were in like circumstances. Since then I have found that most missionaries in these lands do the same, though not carrying them so openly as dear Pascoe. On this point I should like to hear from others, but none are qualified to give an opinion who have not themselves been in these circumstances. In theory it is easily settled; in practice, not so easily. A man may be ready meekly to suffer violence as far as he himself is concerned, but ought he not to protect his wife and daughters ?

Your readers are, I suppose, tired of the subject, but I doubt not the workers themselves would be glad to have the subject continued. I would suggest that you seek criticism of methods from the missionaries themselves, from those who have had many years of experience. And corrections are most needed, I believe, in the work itself.

Again let me, through you, thank "A Missionary" for his honest and spiritual articles. I am confident that they have been, and will be, blessed of the Lord.

Yours truly, ERGATES.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

We would not reflect upon the conduct of that brave man of God, James Pascoe, but we cannot agree with our correspondent that "none are qualified to give an opinion who have not themselves been in these circumstances." Our mind must have been made up in obedience to the Word of God, if we are to be prepared for the circumstances when they arise. It has often been said that the real martyrdom takes place within before the stake is reached. We may appositely quote two experiences out of many from the autobiography of John G. Paton, missionary to the New Hebrides, which have all the authority of one who has himself been in the circumstances :—

"Dangers again darkened round me. One day while toiling away at my house the war Chief, his brother, and a large party of armed men surrounded the plot where I was working. They all had muskets, besides their own native weapons. They watched me for some time in silence, and then every man levelled a musket straight at my head. Escape was impossible. Speech would only have increased my danger. My eyesight came and went for a few moments. I prayed to my Lord Jesus, either Himself to protect me, or to take me home to his glory. I tried to keep working on at my task, as if no one was near me. In that moment, as never before, the word came to me, 'Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name I will do it ; and I knew that I was safe.'

"...It would be easier for me at any time to die than to kill one of them. Our safety lay in our appeal to that blessed Lord who had placed us there, and to whom all power had been given in heaven and on earth. He that was with us was more than all that could be against us. This is strength ; this is peace : to feel, in entering on every day, that all its duties and trials have been committed to the Lord Jesus—that, come what may, He will use us for his own glory and our real good !"

THE CHRISTIAN HARBOUR LIGHTS.—The monthly muster of the above was held on Thursday, July 4, at the Seamen's Christian Friend Society's Chapel, in Ratcliff-highway, under the presidency of Capt. W. Dalrymple, V.P. It was most cheering to hear officers, engineers, and seamen one after the other praising God for their conversion, and for enabling them to work for Him among their shipmates. Rev. G. J. Hill and others also took part in the meeting, and at the close several new members were enrolled, anxious souls were dealt with, and one at least was led to trust in the Saviour.

SAILORS ON THE CORNISH COAST.—In the old Cornish preaching "Pit" at Indian Queen's, North Cornwall, on a recent Sunday, over six hundred people listened to addresses from Miss Messer, of London, and Rev. A. J. G. Hawken, in aid of the Cornish Coast Mission. On Monday a public tea was held at the same place, followed by a large meeting. Mr. H. J. Rowse spoke highly of the work of the missionary at Fowey (Mr. Lightfoot), who gave a brief account of the work he is doing along the coast, specially speaking of the great value of the new Mission smack Ellen James. Miss Messer gave many instances of good work done by the Society.

MILDMAY PARK CONFERENCE.

FRIDAY EVENING.

Joy Unspeakable and Full of Glory.

By Rev. GEORGE C. GRUBB, Cahir.

My subject to-night is in 1 Peter i. 8: "Joy unspeakable and full of glory." As I pronounce those words, where are your hearts? "In heaven, of course," you say; "where else should they be when we speak of joy unspeakable and full of glory?" But allow me to tell you gently that the Holy Ghost applies those words to the life of believers on earth. "Well," you say, "perhaps there were believers in the Apostolic days that rejoiced with joy unspeakable and full of glory; but certainly now they seem to have become an almost extinct class." Thank God, Apostolic Christians are not dead; and if they be dead, I believe in the God that raiseth the dead. Let us pray to the Lord God, the Holy Ghost, to-night that He may come in the plenitude of his all-conquering power, so that the very stones here shall cry out! He can take away the stony heart out of us, and give us a heart of flesh, so that we shall prolong his praises—

"With harp and ith organ and voice,
The loud Hallelujahs prolong."

Oh, may the stones cry out this night! Is it indeed true that some of you have written "Ichabod" over your life? "Ichabod" is written in big, black letters over many a Christian's life. The glory is departed from Israel because the ark of God is taken by the Philistines—the ark of God is gone into captivity. The ark was the place where God chose to manifest his presence; and so long as that place is in captivity to the Philistines, so long "Ichabod" must remain written over your temple doors—so long no Shekinah will shed its gentle radiance within the temple or around it. O God, show us how to get rid of "Ichabod" to-night! What is your ark? Your ark is your heart, that has been made for the indwelling presence of God. The heart must be redeemed from captivity before the glory of God can visit it.

WHAT HINDERS?

Now, we must be very plain to-night as to how this glory is to be received, as to what it is that hinders the glory, and what are the conditions of its reception. We can understand nothing of the coming glory until the glory of the Lord Jesus is a definite reality within our own hearts down here. Therefore, I do not think that I am out of order in impressing upon each one of you to seek to know what the Apostle, by the Holy Ghost, meant when he said, "We rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." Sin has come into the world, and when sin came the glory left our earth. Now the glory has gone back to heaven, and we only catch glimpses of Christ when the heavens are open to our gaze. Ezekiel said, "The heavens were opened, and I saw visions of God," and the closing verse of the chapter tells us "this was the likeness of the appearance of the glory of the Lord, and when I saw it I fell upon my face." Thus it was with Nathanael. "Jesus saith unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto you, henceforth ye shall see heaven opened and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man."

WHAT ARE THE CONDITIONS of the reception of this glory? Before heaven can be opened to your gaze you must comply with certain conditions. I sum them up in one word—you must be a Nathanael. It was to Nathanael that Jesus gave this promise. What do I mean by being a Nathanael? Firstly, I mean that you must be a secret seeker after God: "Before that Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig tree, I saw thee." Has God ever seen you under a fig tree? Have you ever sought the knowledge of God in the loneliness of your own room, or your own heart? or are you only a public seeker after God, with your Bible, your hymn-book, your note-book and pencil? How many notes in your note-book are burned by the Holy Ghost into your heart? O God, make us private, lonely seekers after Thee. May we each one of us find out a fig tree and pour out our souls to God alone. Is your soul athirst for God—for the living God? "Oh! I must get a blessing; I cannot do without a blessing. Oh! bless me to-night."

AN ISRAELITE INDEED.

A Nathanael means, secondly, that you must be an Israelite indeed. What is an Israelite indeed? An Israelite indeed is a man who conquers God by clinging faith. "O God, Thou hast brought pain into my very inmost being." Jacob could well say, "Thou hast touched the hollow of my thigh, and all my bones are out of joint. I will cling to Thee in the strength of weakness; I will cling to Thee in the awful power of destitution. O my God, I cling to Thee; Thou must bless me, even me also. I will not let Thee go except Thou bless me." That is an Israelite indeed—one who has power with God and with man.

But a Nathanael also means that you have a guileless spirit: "Behold an Israelite indeed in whom there is no guile." You say, "I do not think anyone can reach that state down here on earth; that draws very near sinless perfection." Does it? I do not think so. "Behold an Israelite indeed in whom there is no guile." Jesus has said it, and Jesus never tells lies. O soul! have you a guileless spirit? Have you an honest and good heart? Has your heart been cleansed from inward corruption in order that you may deal honestly and faithfully with the word of God? For unless the message of God falls into a heart prepared by the Holy Ghost, it remains fruitless.

A Nathanael! Thou shalt see the heavens opened. Well, what will happen when heaven does open? Let me be very plain about that. In Matt. iii. we read: "And Jesus came up out of the water, and the heavens were opened, and the Spirit in the form of a dove descended upon Him. And lo, a voice from heaven saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Jesus was perfectly born of the Holy Ghost—sinlessly born; yet He needed to be endued with power from on high before He entered on those three and a half wondrous years of service which have astonished the world and the church, and will astonish us throughout eternity. How much more do we, then, need to get a definite baptism of the Holy Ghost before we presume to say a word in the name of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ? Oh that our lips might become silent, oh that our churches might have no services in them, until ministers were baptized with the Lord God, the Holy Ghost. Then, there would be such a flame, then there would be such an excitement, that crowds would come together when the tongue of fire was seen upon the disciples of Christ. The thing would soon get noised abroad.

THE DOVE-LIKE SPIRIT.

What are the marks of the reception of the baptism of the Holy Ghost? The first is the reception of the dove-like spirit. Some professing Christians are like wolves, tearing one another to pieces; others are like bears always growling; others have the cunning of the fox in them; others are like the chameleon—they change their spiritual colour according to the company they find themselves in. When the Holy Ghost is received in power, then the wolf-like spirit, the bear-like spirit, the fox-like spirit, and the chameleon-like spirit pass out of the man or woman, and the spirit of the holy dove takes their place. The guilelessness of Jesus—that holy trustfulness that cannot think a bad thought of a brother—the charity that thinketh no evil. May God give us the dove-like spirit.

But with the dove-like spirit we need the fire. Jesus did not need to be baptized with fire, we do. Jesus had nothing for the fire to b up. He had no dross to be thoroughly pu away; we have plenty of it. So we need only the dove-like spirit, but the fire to clea to purge, to consume, to destroy. I do not th you can attribute less than that to the w "fire." Most Christians have never got the The rest of faith is good, so far as it goes, God has more for you than the rest of fa The rest of faith is the preparation for baptism of the Holy Ghost. Then comes intensity—for I believe the Holy Ghost uses word fire to denote intensity—intense earn ness, intense love, intense passion for souls.

After the baptism there comes something e "Immediately the Spirit driveth Jesus into wilderness to be tempted of the devil." will have fiercer temptations after you rec the power of the Holy Ghost than you ever in all your life before. But with this glor difference—you will be uniformly victori Victory is yours because you use the swor the Spirit, which is bright and keen, sha than any twoedged sword. With that al you defeat Satan, and not with ecst experiences. Satan does not care one b farthing for the experience of any one of You can only defeat Satan with the swor the Spirit: "It is written"—whether you the thing or do not feel it.

STEPHEN'S GLIMPSE OF GLORY.

But I go a step further: Heaven is ag opening to my gaze, not this time on Jesus, on a suffering saint, a saint who is stand alone in the magnificently furnished cou chamber—the council chamber of the h priest of Israel. He is surrounded by the scr and elders of the people, by the synagogue the Cyrenians and the Alexandrians. But have these learned, logical men this angry lo Why the gloom and scowl of hell on their fa while this saint before them has the smile o angel upon his? What has made the di ence? It is the last words which Stephen just uttered: "Ye uncircumcised in heart ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost: your fathers did, so do ye." Then Steph "being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up s fastly into heaven, and saw the glory of G and Jesus standing on the right hand of G and said, Behold, I see the heavens oper and the Son of Man standing on the right h of God."

What a vision this is. How few of us h seen the vision of Jesus standing at the ri hand of God! Why? Because we are too spectable to go in for the stones. It seem be fashionable in these days to go and win so where you do not come in for showers stones.

But what does the Holy Ghost say?—t Peter on the day of Pentecost was filled w the Holy Ghost, and there were granted u him three thousand souls. Stephen was fi with the Holy Ghost, and there were gran unto him three thousand stones! God give you one day a shower of stones and anot day a shower of souls. Whichever way it go in for seeing the glory of God. Go in the glory, and then let the glory bring eit souls or stones.

AN IRISH STEPHEN.

Sometimes I think that a shower of sto pelted by a tongue is harder to bear th real stones thrown by the hand. Let me r you an extract from a letter from a conver Roman Catholic priest in Ireland to show that there are still some of these Stephens existence.

The writer is boldly testifying to his fell countrymen in Ireland; and if any of you to come over and help us in work amongst Roman Catholics, we can promise you plent stones:—

"I was first suspended, then excommu cated. The people were warned not to sp to me, not to listen to me, to burn my boo n fact, to boycott me. The Sunday on which was excommunicated I walked down to a ross-road near the Roman Catholic chapel, ook off my hat as the people came out from nass, and had the entire congregation around ne in five minutes. During more than fifty ninutes I spoke to them of a free salvation hrough faith in a crucified Saviour. The riests had brought a band of roughs from a eighbouring town, had plied them with rink, and paid them to hoot me down, or, if ecessary, stone me...

"My poor sister has especially suffered. Ier husband was so worked upon by the riests that he took all the money he could ay hold on, and deserted his wife and four elpless children...

"I am thankful that Jesus Christ has hought me worthy to suffer even a little for is sake. I am perfectly well aware that I valk in deadly peril, and carry my life in ny hands, but, all the same, here I shall, lease God, remain. Let them spill my blood, f they can find one abandoned enough to do . Who knows but some young Saul who ooks on at the deed may be God's instru-nent to carry on the work."

Oh, yes; there are some Stephens in exist-nce still. Let us pray for our brother in his eril, that he may be kept faithful to Christ. God forgive us Protestants in Ireland for our owardice. We in Ireland need to be filled ith the Holy Ghost, and that is what you eed here also.

THE COMING KING.

There is one more vision that comes before my nind, and this time heaven does not open upon esus as the Man of Sorrows, nor does heaven pen upon a suffering and persecuted saint elted with stones, but heaven opens upon our ictorious King with his army. "I saw heaven pened, and behold a white horse." Heaven pens, lastly, to give us a place with our lorified Head. If we suffer with Him down ere, we shall be glorified together. Are you onging for the time when heaven shall open, nd when you shall be caught up to meet your ord in the air?

I well remember the time in my own life hen the coming of the Lord Jesus became a efinite reality to my soul. Never up to that noment was I willing to separate myself from he world and its pleasures; but once I realised hat Jesus might come at any moment, all was hanged. "O Lord, I must be as busy as ossible for Thee; I think it would be better to isit that drunken man than go to this tennis arty. It would be better to go and confer ith that other man about his soul than spend ny time at that band, though I like music ery much." Let the coming of the Lord be reality to-night. He shall come "to be lorified in his saints, and to be admired in all hem that believe."

THE STONE OF UNBELIEF.

What are the hindrances to your enjoying his glory? There may be many, but I shall nly mention two. I hope I am not censorious n saying this, but I feel sure that there are a reat many in the Conference to-night who know ot what it means to "rejoice with joy unspeak-ble and full of glory." Then, what are the indrances? Why is it that the glory is idden from our gaze? Because of two things -because of a stone and because of a nest. What do I mean by that? In John xi. Jesus ays, "Take ye away the stone." It is the reat heavy stone of unbelief that is crushing own the glory. O soul, when wilt thou elieve thy Saviour? You say to Jesus, Lord could not bear to see my brother. Oh! he s so foul and corrupt, let him alone. I could ot bear to look upon the corrupt corpse of he brother I once loved. Do not let them ake away the stone." May God rebuke us to-ight for our unbelief. May the sword of the pirit slay the giant—the giant unbelief within s this night. "Thou shalt see the glory of od."

But there is something else that prevents you from seeing the glory of God. It is a hindrance that is mentioned in Deut. xxxii. 11, 12: "As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings; so the Lord alone did lead him, and there was no strange god with him." The hindrance of an undisturbed nest—

THE NEST OF SELF-COMPLACENCY.

That is the reason why so many come to conferences, but go away without a blessing. They do not want to have their nests stirred up by the Lord God the Holy Ghost. They have made a nice downy nest for themselves. It is well furnished, and they are comfortable at home. They do not want to hear the voice of the Lord saying: "Who will go for us even to the uttermost parts of the earth?" Your nest is too comfortable in England to allow God to disturb it, and so you will remain without the glory until you die.

What a wonderful possibility this verse opens to us. Tell me, ye in this Conference who limit the power of the Holy One of Israel—tell me, how high can God soar? After God has taken you on his wings, how high can He fly up? He is the Lord God Almighty, and He wants to take the young eaglets upon his great wing. You foolish little eaglet, your wings will get tired after a few yards; but God wants to take you on his big, broad wings, and to sail up to glory with you, even while you are down here. How high, I repeat, can God soar?

"Reposing calmly in my downy nest,
I had forgotten earth is not my rest;
Until, disturbed, I saw a gracious hand
Point upward to a brighter, happier land.

"He stirred my nest: then fluttering o'er my head,
I saw his radiant wings benignly spread,
To bear me up from earthly scenes on high,
To purer regions and a cloudless sky.

"My broken nest forsaken—on those wings
Upborne—my spirit mounts, and sweetly sings!
Victorious over all her foes she soars,
And glorious, untold realms of light explores!

"Oh, now a wide expanse, boundless, sublime,
Stretches before my sight; and earth, and time
Seem but a point, a bubble on the stream,
While on my soul eternal glories beam!

"O'erwhelmed with wondering joy, and filled with praise,
I now exult in grateful, ceaseless lays
To Him whose love amazing stooped to me,
And stirred my nest, and set my spirit free."

The writer of these lines understood what it was to "rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." I have now brought you up to glory. Please stay there. Do not come down again. Remain there by faith. God bless you, dear souls. Amen.

AFTERNOON GATHERINGS.

The Evangelisation of Israel.

THERE was a goodly attendance at a meeting held in the large Hall on Wednesday afternoon, when cheering testimony was borne to God's work among the Jewish people through the instrumentality of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. The chair was occupied by Mr. T. A. DENNY, who said he rejoiced to find that a growing interest in Israel is being evinced on the part of Christian people, who, he held, should neither be insensible of their indebtedness to the Jew, nor slow to follow the Apostolic order—"to the Jew first."

Rev. J. WILKINSON, in an address which was evidently delivered under a deep sense of thankfulness to God, touched on many things, but never lost sight of the importance of the work of evangelising Israel, and the remarkable manner in which, during many years, God has prospered his efforts in this special direction. The true ground of Christian interest in the Jew is the interest of God and Christ in the Jew; on no lower ground did he dare to urge the warm interest which he bespoke for the seed of Abraham. Receiving the Scriptures, we cannot but admit that the people had been elected of God and preserved by miraculous power for the purpose of flooding the world with blessing; therefore, in the interest of the millions still outside the range of Gospel knowledge and influence, we should desire to lay hold of the Jews. By doing this, we should not only be making reparation, as far as it is possible to do so, for wrongs inflicted upon the Jews in the past, and showing gratitude for blessings received from them, but we should hasten on the time when blessing will be dispensed through them to the millions of Gentiles who are still waiting to hear of God's love and salvation in Christ. Calling attention to Rom. xi. 30, 31, the speaker showed that as we, Gentiles, have obtained mercy through the disobedience of Israel, we should feel constrained to make known among them the mercy which has been shown to us by God, in order that they may enjoy participation in our faith and hope. God's indications of duty have, throughout the history of the Mission, been accompanied by ways opened and means supplied. This interesting fact led Mr. Wilkinson to give an epitome of the work, and especially to refer to the distribution of Hebrew New Testaments throughout the world. Between 80,000 and 90,000 of the total number of copies (100,000) have now been placed in the hands of Jews able to read them and who have desired to receive them. He also spoke of the great need of a centre for the important and growing work in the East-end of London. Already sums amounting to £4500 have been given or promised towards the £10,000 required to provide suitable and adequate premises.

Dr. JOHN DIXON, medical missionary to the Jews in London, gave some account of his work in the East-end. Being clannish, the people will visit a dispensary established specially for them, and when there they have the Gospel message presented to them. The work has its encouragements, old as well as young having had their eyes opened to see in Jesus the Messiah of ancient promise. Rev. J. ADLER followed with a narrative of his part in the distribution of New Testaments in the Russian empire, saying that he had uniformly preached Christ while engaged in the work, so that those who asked for books knew beforehand somewhat of their contents. Mr. DAVID BARON, who has also made several tours engaged in the same blessed cause, dwelt upon the great desire which many Jews have shown to know something of Christianity. There are, however, millions of Jews who have never had the Gospel placed before them. Not one in a hundred of those to whom he was privileged to give New Testaments in Continental countries and North Africa, had ever heard the name of Jesus before he met them. Many conversions have been reported, and every now and then fresh evidences are appearing of the seed having taken root, to the glory of God and his Christ.

After the meeting there was a season of prayer, Israel's highest good being made the subject of earnest petition to God.

North and South Africa.

A large meeting was held on the first afternoon in Room No. 4, under the presidency of Major-General HAIG, to consider the claims of the vast Continent of Africa, especially its northern and southern parts. After singing and prayer the Chairman introduced the subject of EGYPT.

He had spent the winter there, and he thought we had cause for pride as a nation at the improvement in the condition of the people since we assumed the reins of Government. Oppressive taxation has been largely relieved, and now every fellah has fair play in his relations with the authorities. There are many improvements in the irrigation of the land, while the courbash and forced service have been abolished. There are about seven millions of people in Egypt; of these one million and a half are in towns, and five and a half millions in the country villages. That shows the importance of itinerant missions. The two great cities, Cairo and Alexandria, are the only places in which any considerable amount of Christian work has been begun. There are, besides, fifty towns with populations varying from 3000 to 50,000, all without a single missionary. The American Presbyterian Mission has been in the country for a good many years, and is doing a great work, chiefly up the Nile as far as Assouan. They have eighty different centres of work, and in sixty of them Christian congregations have been gathered. There are many schools largely supported by the native Christians, who are almost entirely converts from the Coptic Church. There have been very few converts from among Mahommedans, though there are hundreds of Mohammedan children in the schools. General Haig made very touching reference to the work and worth of the late Miss M. L. Whately, of Cairo. The Church Missionary Society have a small mission in Cairo, which is about to be strengthened by the advent of another worker.

How much remains to be done! The work of the American friends is at present largely confined to Cairo and the Upper Nile. Out of the seven millions of population six millions are untouched. Though such a large number of the Copts have become professing Christians, their reflex influence on the Moslem population has been very small. Even among the real converts there lingers much hostile feeling towards the Moslems in consequence of former persecutions. There is need of prayer that a better spirit may prevail. The work has mainly taken the form of schools and selling the Scriptures; of aggressive effort by personal endeavour there is scarcely any. The time, General Haig believes, has now come for this. It ought to extend to the Bedaween, most of whom are quite accessible. There is also a very important work to be done among the so-called "Christian" peoples in Alexandria and Cairo. They are greatly neglected, and have no one to tell them of the Gospel. The moral condition of the people in Alexandria is simply frightful, and cannot be described. For those who cannot acquire Arabic there is here a great field where the Italian language can be used. There may be many ladies with private means having no definite ties at home who might take up such a work. The climate is fine, and the open doors are wonderful. The children and girls are readily accessible. Thousands of English people go now to winter in Egypt for the sake of health; will there be none to go there and work for Christ among these peoples, whose needs are so great?

Is there any hope of doing good work among the Moslems? General Haig said he found that the way in which the Moslems and Copts are socially mixed up has prepared the way wondrously for Christian effort. Their religious prejudices are not aroused, and they feel that they are placed on the same level as others. Those at a distance often make a great mistake in supposing that the doors are not open. Let us go and see, and we shall find that they are really open, so that there is no excuse if we do not enter in.

NORTH AFRICA.

Mr. E. H. Glenny essayed to give the meeting a bird's eye view of North Africa and its needs, making incidental reference to the work of the North Africa Mission and other efforts. Beginning with Northern Arabia, he said there was one worker among the Bedaween there; there are many tribes in the desert beyond for whom nothing has been done. There is one tribe of some 50,000 sitting in spiritual darkness. There is something being done in Southern Arabia, at Aden, and Mr. Lethaby is working at Kerak; but in the north it is very desirable that Mr. Van Tassel should be reinforced. There are few difficulties, and the people would welcome Gospel messengers.

Passing on to Tripoli, with a population of one or one and a half million, Mr. Glenny said the country was perfectly sunk in darkness. It is one of the great gates to Central Africa and the Soudan. Are there not some friends who will go and take up a post in some of the coast towns? In a thousand miles of coast line there are only two known Christians! Next came Tunis, with a population of two millions, under French protection. There is in the large towns the greatest facilities for taking the Gospel to the people, but there is no one, alas! to take it. Yet Tunis is within a week's sail of England. In the city of Tunis there are seven brethren and sisters, most of whom are as yet learning the language. Mr. Flad works among the Jews, and a French pastor is also in residence. There is a large Moslem population, and there seems to be perfect freedom for evangelistic effort. Something is being attempted among the Italians in the city, but those of that nation throughout the province generally are altogether neglected.

Then there are the four millions of Algeria—a very mixed population. In each of its three provinces there are a few workers, but immense populations are quite untouched with the Gospel. There is a specially wide field for women's work. Our sisters can get into the homes of the people, and thus gain the ear of many who could not otherwise be reached.

Morocco has a population estimated variously at from five to ten millions. At present there is very little done in the interior of the country, though there are some workers in the coast towns. There has lately been great encouragement in the work among the Spaniards and Spanish-speaking Jews in Northern Morocco. What might not be accomplished if the workers were greatly multiplied. Oh, for a more practical manifestation of interest in these lands so near, so needy, and so open. Why is the Christian Church so slow to enter and take possession of them in God's name?

A few minutes were given to Mr. A. S. Lamb, who has lately returned from Kabylia on a visit to England. The joys of the work, he said, far outweighed all the trials and sorrows that may be experienced. Is there not a danger of an excess of sentiment and nice feeling at such gatherings as Mildmay, without sufficient practical outcome? The harvesting time has not yet been granted largely in Kabylia; the grace of patience is needed for the workers. Let there be a spirit of humiliation among those at home, and the spirit of consecration to God. Mr. Lamb said he sadly wanted a fellow-worker as he went about the hills of Kabylia, often at the risk of his life.

SOUTH AFRICA

was the field allotted to Mr. W. Spencer Walton, who referred to the marked contrast between that field and the fields that had been spoken of. In the one case there are all the difficulties of pioneering, whereas in South Africa there is a ripe field, only waiting the sickle. Mr. Walton told something of his experiences gained during his recent visit to the Cape, and the way in which he had been led to form the Cape General Mission, with the details of which our readers have been made acquainted. Mr. Walton referred to the shocking prevalence of the curse of drunkenness in Cape Colony. Drink is cheap, and there are virtually no restraints on its sale. At Kimberley 500 black men on an average fall victims to it every year. These natives come from the interior comparatively pure and sober, but they get contaminated by contact with the whites, and go back to their homes corrupted. The presence and prevalence of Ritualism at the Cape was mentioned and deplored; there are also other hindrances from some who ought to help. It is the aim of the Cape Mission to have a number of itinerant workers going to different parts of the country. Special efforts will be made to get hold of English young men at the Cape. The efforts of scattered missionaries in Bechuanaland, Basutoland, and other places were mentioned in passing, and then reference was made to the plans for Gospel work along the railway lines. One worker for the railwa men is fixed on, and it is hoped to get anothe A party of seven go out in August to start th Cape Mission. The buildings, a Mission Hom and a hall in Cape Town, have been given, an all that remains is to furnish and equip them A Bible carriage for the gold fields is needed Like those who had preceded him, Mr. Walto asked prayer for the work he had been advoca ting, and for the workers.

Prayers for Missions.

Immediately following on this meeting, number of friends assembled in room No. to offer united prayer for missions and mis sionaries. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe led th proceedings, and kept up the interest by hi brief, burning exhortations. "Let us go to ou Banker," he said, "with big cheques to-day We are here to do business with the livin God; let it be a business meeting from be ginning to end." And truly it was so, thoug the business transacted was scarcely of a re portable kind. Various definite requests wer read out, and the stream of earnest petitio flowed on for work in different parts of th world, from the lips alike of sisters and brethren These prayers going evidently from the heart are before God and there need be no hesitatio in believing that the answers will appear though in some cases it may be many day hence. Besides several missionaries, there wer some present intending, if God will, to devot their lives to that noble service.

Young Men's Christian Association.

The Y.M.C.A. held a meeting in the North Tent on Wednesday afternoon. Mr. Georg Williams presided, and related some facts con cerning the foreign and Colonial operations o the Association. An effort is soon to be made t reach the native young men of India, many o whom understand the English language. Al ready a pioneer has gone to "spy out the land," and his reports have been of a very encouragin character. Mr. Williams suggested that Londo could furnish the support for a general secre tary at Bombay, to undertake the organisatio of a Native Young Men's Association. It i hoped that branches will also be opened i other large Indian centres. The work on th Continent of Europe is extending. In Spai the results have not been very encouraging but in Italy there are twenty-seven associations Turkey, Russia, Austria, Asia, and Africa also have active and flourishing branches. In al our large Colonial cities the work is progress ing.

Count Bernstorff gave encouraging testi mony as to the success of the work in Berlin Young men in every rank of life are admitted Meetings are arranged to suit the convenienc of young men engaged in various businesses and trades. All the members are given som definite work to do. The Association has ex perienced many vicissitudes in connection wit a building, but throughout it has prospered The provincial associations are also in a healthy condition.

Mr. Hind Smith gave a history of the move ment, and referred at some length to Ear Cairns' eulogy, in which he described th Y.M.C.A. as "the institution of the future." It has lately transpired that of the twelve young men who formed the first associatio three were Episcopalians, three Presbyterians three Wesleyans, and three Baptists. Eight o the twelve are still living. To-day there ar four thousand associations, with an estimated aggregate membership of 267,000, and property to the value of two millions.

Major Whittle interested the audience thoroughly by his reference to Mr. Moody's early career, and the experiences in connection with the formation of Young Men's Christian Associations during the American Civil War. The American work grew out of a revival in Chicago. After the revival the Y.M.C.A. was formed. It was at this time that Mr. Moody relinquished a business life, and devoted himself to Gospel work. When his friends heard what he was going to do they thought he was a hare-brained fellow, and inclined to madness. He had invested his savings so that he might support himself, and devote his life to personal effort. This little all was swept away from him; yet he decided to continue in the work, renouncing all ideas of personal ease. There was at that time a room in the Y.M.C.A. where the noon meeting—continued to this day—was held, and Mr. Moody obtained permission to live in this room. Here he slept on the hard benches, living on biscuits and cheese, and wrapping newspapers around him in the winter. People then called him "Crazy Moody," but for thirty years he has pursued his devoted labours, and has accomplished a glorious work. There are many people who wish they were in Mr. Moody's position now, but would they be willing to go through his early sufferings and privations?

Mr. E. J. KENNEDY, of the Exeter Hall Association, gave an interesting account of work. It is a wonderfully important work, he said, when we come to think of the influence surrounding one young man's life. Christian people hardly realise the temptations that beset young men in London. Impurity, intemperance, and infidelity are rampant; where drink is slaying its thousands, impurity is slaying its tens of thousands. Gambling is another evil that we have to face. The merest youngsters, coming up in the trains, read their sporting papers, and talk about the "odds." Mr. Kennedy detailed some interesting cases. One young man was saved through a member asking him to have a game of draughts; another through a member pairing with him at a gymnasium. A young barrister, formerly a member of the Oxford Union, was attracted to the debating club, and became a saved man. A bookmaker was converted, and in one week returned £2000 that he thought was unfairly gained.

Christian Post-office Association.

The meeting on Wednesday, in connection with this Association, in the South Tent, was exceedingly interesting. Many cheering reports were submitted of results accomplished in various parts of England and Scotland among the servants of the Post-office. In the absence of Sir S. A. Blackwood, who was prevented from presiding by important official duties, Rev. BARNES LAWRENCE acted as chairman, and delivered a suggestive address to Christian workers. The real power of the Christian labourer, he showed by numerous examples, lies in a consistent walk with God. Like Peter, we must be emptied of self before we can truly serve God.

Mr. DUDLEY A. KIDD followed with a brief exposition of Eph. ii. 10. Then came a number of delegates, who testified in succession to the rich blessing that attends the operations of the Association, which is increasing in membership all round. A bright lad, a telegraph messenger, representing the Junior Branch of the General Post-office, sent a thrill of delight through the meeting with this declaration: "Before I gave my heart to God, I was black with sin, and therefore miserable; but now, thank God, I find pleasure in Christ. Since our branch was started, thirteen or fourteen lads have come out boldly for the Lord, and are now following, serving, and rejoicing in Him." Said another youth, "We have to stand a great deal of buffeting and jeering at the hands of our Godless companions; but we find that serving Christ is not irksome—quite the contrary, it is pleasant and joyful."

Mr. MCLEAN, the Scotch delegate, had a particularly encouraging report to make. In Glasgow there are seven ladies engaged in visiting the postmen. Besides a flourishing senior branch, there is a telegraph messengers' branch, with its educational classes, and a branch for young women. There are now branches in Greenock, Edinburgh, Ayr, and Dundee, and the movement will shortly be established in Aberdeen and other places in the North.

The Opium Iniquity.

Under the Mulberry Tree on Wednesday afternoon a meeting was held in connection with "The Christian Union for the Severance of the Connection of the British Empire with the Opium Traffic." Many saddening facts concerning this great evil were rehearsed, with the hope of arousing in the hearts of the Christians attending the Conference a righteous indignation against the continuance of the trade between India and China, and inducing them to throw in their influence with those who are agitating to get it abolished.

After some brief remarks by Mr. ROBERT SCOTT, who occupied the chair, the deplorable effects of the Opium trade with China were dwelt upon at some length by Dr. J. L. MAXWELL, hon. secretary of the Union. Dr. Maxwell pointed out that the English nation is wholly responsible for having introduced the drug into that country; therefore, we are responsible for the fact that the Chinese are now cultivating it in enormous quantities themselves. He believed not a few high mandarins would be only too glad to stop this, for they fully realise the ruinous effects of it upon their nation; but, even if they wished, they are unable to do so while we continue to pour it upon them from our Indian Empire. The native growth is rapidly increasing, and presently it will have assumed such proportions that it will be very difficult to deal with it; but if we were now to cease sending it there, it might be that the native growth would be restricted, and thus a stop put to its further ravages. At any rate, whether the Chinese continue to grow it or not, it is the duty of the English Government to cease sending it there, and making revenue through that which is ruining thousands upon thousands of helpless people in a heathen land. For the sake of our own nation and for China's sake we are bound to do our very utmost to get this traffic abolished. Even if England wash her hands now of the evil thing, she has good cause to fear retribution at the hands of the Righteous Judge of all the earth for the wrong which she has committed against the millions of China. In closing, Dr. Maxwell drew attention to the Christian Union, which has now a membership of over 2800, and invited all to join it. Several joined straightway. Others wishing to do so should send their name and address, with 1s. in stamps, to Dr. Maxwell, at 104, Petherton-road, London, N.

Mr. B. BROOMHALL followed with a stirring address. He said he could not understand why the people of England take so little interest in the movement to put down this traffic, which he declared is one of the devil's mightiest barriers for hindering the propagation of the Gospel in China. He appealed to all Christian people to bring the utmost pressure to bear upon our public men, and those seeking to enter Parliament at the next election, to use their influence to secure the severance of the British Government from the traffic.

Mr. ROBERT BROWN, secretary of the Glasgow China Liberation Society, having made some remarks upon the political aspect of the matter, Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR spoke of the profound importance of keeping this question well to the front in Christian circles, and called for earnest and united prayer, that the consciences of British Christians may be aroused, and that they may be stirred up to compel our Government to deal with the matter in a righteous manner.

FROM NIGHT TO DAY.

AWAKE, in the gloom of the midnight hour,
Enshrouded in speechless dread,
A sinner, aroused from the trance of sin,
In the cerements of the dead.

My idols of clay are dissolved in dust,
The ghosts of my hopes pass by;
I writhe in a world with an iron floor,
And a roof of the brassy sky.

I would sink to nought—but it cannot be;
I would die—but am unforgiven;
But, hark! through the halls of the dead resounds
A voice which I know, from heaven.

It spoke to my heart, in the spirit-tongue:
"Why fight with a Father's rod,
Ever leading you back from the dayless night
To the nightless day of God."

I yielded at last. What a joyous morn
When the glory began to shine!
The heavens and the earth, and the new-born soul,
Ablaze in the light Divine!

Now the soul which I once would have cast away
Is to Jesus a ransomed gem;
To cut and to set it, to shine its best,
With the stars in his diadem.

LORD A. P. CECIL'S DEATH.

FURTHER details are to hand of the death of Lord Adalbert Cecil. One of his intimate friends, writing to a near relative on June 15, says:—"A few days before he (Lord A. P. Cecil) died, he wrote to me as to his movements. He had bought a large tent, which he expected to use during the summer for Gospel preaching; and it was on his way to this that he met with his death. On Tuesday of this week, Lord Adalbert took a boat at Belleville, and sailed that day as far as Deserontes, where there are a number of Indian believers in whom he was always interested.

"Next day he set sail for Picton, having with him a Christian man named Churchill, who, however, was not used to sailing. The wind blew strongly down the Bay, and the boat having two sails was difficult of management for one person, but they succeeded in nearly reaching their destination, and had rounded safely a projecting point of land, when, one of the sails requiring adjustment, Lord Adalbert stood up to arrange it, but, losing his balance, he fell overboard. He might then have gained the shore, which was only about one hundred yards distant, but he continued to swim after the boat, fearful, it is supposed, that Churchill might be lost, so that in death as in life his thought was altogether for others, and not for himself. He had but little strength, and when he sank, which he shortly did, he did not rise again; his life no doubt went out at once, a life of exceptional loveliness, of self-sacrifice, and of incalculable usefulness."

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE WORK AT NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE.—The ninth annual report of the endeavour put forth in the Central Hall, contains much that is cheering as well as a very great deal that is saddening in the extreme. In the north as well as elsewhere, the victories of temperance effort are few and small compared with the fearful destruction wrought on every hand by the drink traffic. If Newcastle has the reputation of being second in the list of England's cities in point of drunkenness, it is certainly not because of lack of earnestness and perseverance on the part of some of her noblest men and women. Operations have not been confined to the Central Hall, but detachments of workers have gone out into various parts of both town and country, and spoken in the cause of temperance in the name of the Saviour of men. The Police-court Mission has been fruitful of much good; many other doors are open, but want of funds prevents them from being entered. The hon. sec. is Miss E. E. Lambert, 4, Lovaine-place, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

XVI.—I'LL GIVE UP.

There was a time when missions were objects of superstitious dread and anxiety. "We are going to have a mission in our church," said one lady to another. "And pray what is a mission?" asked the other.

The former replied, "I do not know; but I will tell you what a friend told me once. She attended one, and heard an excellent sermon, you know, and after that she was told to go into the school-room for another meeting. As others were going, she went along with them as far as the door. Looking in, she saw that some persons were upon their knees, some were crying, and others to all appearance were very happy.

"'What is it?' she inquired of a man who was standing at the door. 'Oh,' he said, 'it is only an after-meeting.' 'But what are they doing?' asked the lady, half afraid. 'Oh, nothing, ma'am; you just go in and see for yourself.' 'But what shall I have to do?' The man replied, 'Oh, very little. You see, you goes in, and then you kneels down and says, "Lord, have mercy on me," and you says it again as often as you likes. Then you says, "I do belave, I do belave, that Jesus died for me." Then you sings it over and over again—that's all. Come in, ma'am,' said the man, going in himself; but the lady thought better of it, and made off. She told me that it frightened her very much."

The lady continued: "Upon another occasion, a gentleman said to me, 'I assure you that when the mission preacher walked down the aisle towards me, he made me tremble all over. My fears were vain, however, for he passed me by; but soon afterwards I heard him returning up the aisle, and again I felt as if cold water was running down my back, and yet he did not speak to me.'" "I can fully sympathise with him in that feeling," said the other lady. "There is something terrible in a mission."

Alas! such times are over now, and all such fears dissipated. People at the present day are used to missions, and look forward to them. More than that, I cannot help thinking that the devil has taken to patronising them. When bazaars fail, it is sometimes proposed, "Let us have a mission!" or "Let us have a mission to increase the congregation—let us have a mission to multiply the number of communicants"; or it is whispered, "We will have a mission, and bring people to confession and absolution."

This is not the Lord's work. A true mission is to rouse up believers to their privileges, and to save sinners from hell to heaven; it is for real work for eternity.

A mission is a very solemn thing, and by no means to be lightly regarded. At such a time, the fear of the Lord falls upon the people, and prepares them to receive his Word as from Himself. United and simultaneous prayer has been made for the manifested presence of the Spirit to work upon the hearts of the congregation, and upon the inhabitants of the neighbourhood generally.

A gentleman who had been accustomed to go to a certain church, and enjoy the sermon, happened one Sunday to hear a mission preacher.

"What is the meaning of this?" he inquired.

A neighbour said, "Why it is a mission sermon. Did you not know that we are to have a mission here?"

No, he had not heard about it, although due notice had been given, hundreds of bills circulated, and placards exhibited.

"A mission, is it? And how long is this to last?" inquired the gentleman.

"For ten days. There are to be services morning, afternoon, and evening for ten days."

"Thank you," said the gentleman politely, and went off to his luncheon.

He afterwards told me in a letter, that he then and there made up his mind to let the mission go on by itself, so far as he was concerned. Notwithstanding this resolve, some remarks of his wife induced him to come to church again in the evening.

The sermon, he said, was more extraordinary than that in the morning, and kept him awake in his bed until after the clock had struck twelve. He thought to himself, that man is a fanatic, he is all wrong, I will not be troubled with him and his teaching; and so fell asleep.

On Monday the talk in the house was about the sermons of the previous day, and he was asked if he would go again in the evening.

"Oh, dear, no," he said, "no, not I—I have had enough of that man," but he did come for all that, and felt more convinced than before—the man is altogether wrong, he is too excited to be right.

There is no knowing which way a man's thoughts tend. I remember once being awakened out of my sleep by a man saying in a loud but calm voice, "Fire, fire." I could not believe that a house was on fire, because the man was so calm and quiet about it. Still it was true for all that. I thought he ought to have been excited, when the flames of a burning house were before his eyes.

This gentleman, however, could not sleep for thinking, "Suppose the man is right—what then!" He did fall asleep at last; but awoke in the morning with a weight upon his mind.

He came to church again on Tuesday evening, and began to think seriously of the facts put before him in the sermon. "The man is right," he said to himself, "and I am all wrong, on the broad road to destruction. I will remain to the after-meeting."

When the time came, his courage failed, and he left the church as before.

"Something must be done," he said to himself that night, and accordingly put more earnestness into his prayers than usual. At his office, on the following day, he did little else than read the New Testament. It so happened that he opened it at the Epistle of St. James. In reading that he was greatly cheered, for there he thought he had found the lever with which he could easily upset all that had been preached. He read the epistle through with great interest, and then began a second time, pen in hand, to make notes for overwhelming questions. He intended to put these queries in the evening, at the close of the service.

It was a shame, he thought, that such men as myself should be permitted te come and disturb the minds of peaceable people. He was most indignant; he came home and said to his wife, "If it were not for the purpose of exposing the fellow, I would not go to church again, while he is in the pulpit."

As he sat in his pew, the preacher was led to speak of the difference between faith and works. One is dead without the other. Then he went on to quote St. James's Epistle, and to show that the Apostles St. Paul and St. James were perfectly agreed. In other respects also, he seemed to know every question in the gentleman's pocket, and answered them, one and all without hearing any. He went on to fasten up everything he had previously said, like the clenching of a nail.

It is of no use fighting against God, thought the gentleman in his pew. I'll give up! He knelt down there and then, and gave his heart to God, and, what is better still, God accepted his gift, and wrought a thorough change in him.

After this, he felt as if his eyes were opened to see and understand the things which were being spoken. He was a wonder to himself. At the close of the service he came forward and shook hands, giving me a hearty grip. I thought he would have spoken, but evidently his heart was too full, and he dared not trust himself to open his lips.

It is a great pity when people thus restrain themselves. The utterance of their sentiments would do them good, and perhaps many others besides.

However, this gentleman went home, and there let out the fulness of his heart in a letter. This document contains the facts and statements here given, together with warm and heartfelt acknowledgments to God and to his servant.

Afterwards his lips were opened to speak freely of the saving change wrought in himself, and to urge upon others the necessity of this important and vital need.

In missions, when prayer has been made for blessing, blessing should be expected, and even anticipated. It is not wonderful that answers to prayer are given; it would be more wonderful if they were not. God is willing to give abundantly more than we ask or think. This gentleman came forward to promote social gatherings once a fortnight or oftener, when, instead of card-playing, the reading of the Bible, and conversation upon the subject read was the occupation of the evening. Very happy and blessed evenings they were, which were spent together in this way. Such was one of the results of that mission.

EVANGELISING IN IRELAND.

The report of last year's work of the Irish Evangelisation Society contains much that is very cheering to those who watch the rising of light in dark spots in that country. During no previous year has this useful agency been privileged to do so much work; no fewer than 2757 meetings were held, in 157 places, at a cost, including tents, of £2155. Several letters from workers and friends are given in the report, from which it appears that, while there have been perplexities and drawbacks, there has been abundant evidence of the Lord's blessing in many parts. In some places whole families have turned from indifference and sin to serve the living and true God.

It is gratifying to note that the evangelists have not only been assisted by earnest resident Christians, clerical and lay, but also by English visitors, clergymen and others. The tent meetings seemed to have been specially encouraging, the audiences having in some cases been very large. One of the most interesting missions of the year was held at Castlewellan, co. Down, where for eight weeks Messrs. Carleton and Crawford laboured in a spacious tent. From the first a large number of people attended, and the hand of the Lord was manifest. The hon. secretary, Mr. James Barton, who was present at one of the meetings there, tells of seeing one after another led to decision and joy, while at the close a party of ten young men would not leave. Spoken to collectively, they seemed almost all in a few minutes to grasp the great Saviour, and went home at peace, and several have since shown the reality of the change."

In some words at the close of the report, the hon. secretary says: "We ask our friends to consider whether the work is to be continued on the same scale, or on a diminished or an extended scale. We are not doing at all the amount of work in the south and west that we believe might be done by our agency; we ask you to pray for openings there, also for the mighty Spirit's power, and for increased means to carry on the work. We feel, too, that there is much to be done amongst our Roman Catholic fellow-countrymen, and that, sooner than we expect, the Lord may open doors for Gospel preaching to them much wider than at present." Mr. Barton, of Dundalk, will be happy to send a copy of the report to any who may apply.

Bethlehem.—A correspondent writes to say that another helper is greatly desired in the English mission school at Bethlehem, Palestine. A much-needed Christian work is carried on there among the women and girls by means of this school, and there is great room for extension. Will not some young lady be led to offer herself for this work, one who desires to follow Christ and has the true missionary spirit? All particulars can be learnt from Miss Webb, 267, Vauxhall Bridge-road, London, S.W.

For the Young.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST.

ADDRESS TO THE YOUNG

BY REV. JAMES WELLS, GLASGOW.

"God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world."—GAL. vi. 14.

DEAR boys and girls, the cross of Christ had a wonderful power over the Apostle Paul. Great changes come in the lives of the young and of the old. There are some sitting in these pews who about fifteen years ago were interested in some toy, say a hobby horse; nothing in the world gave them so much amusement and interest as that toy, and if you had taken away that hobby horse you would have taken away from them a large part of the joy of life. But they have become men now, and have put away childish things. What a change! They are new creatures.

Some young lady here, many years ago, was greatly interested in her doll—in the dressing of it, and in the carrying of it out. Her most earnest thoughts and warmest joys had to do with it. She is now dead to it, and it is dead to her. You cannot imagine a greater change than has come over her.

In the same way we have great changes that come about suddenly. Augustine was very fond of revels, and had a great number of revellings in a certain house near which he lived with some heathen young men of his acquaintance. He got converted, like Paul; then revels were dead to him, and he was dead to them; they were crucified to him, and he to them. He tells us that when he came near the house where he had these revellings, he got almost sick at the thought of them. When he saw any of the companions of his revels he just turned out of their way.

Paul was a Pharisee and a persecutor of Christ, and there never was a greater change in any man than there was in him. He shows that this change was real. The world, he says, is crucified unto me, and I am crucified unto the world; I am no longer a man of this world. I am a man of the other world. If you ask me where he gained the power that wrought this mighty change, I answer, it was at Christ's cross. You want a power to conquer the world. You must be crucified to it or it will crucify you; and you conquer it, as Paul did, at the cross of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. You cannot conquer the evil world in your own strength—that is not possible; you need help, and you get that help from the Crucified.

Victor Hugo tells of a man who was crossing the sands for a short cut when the tide was out. He got in among the quicksands, and his feet got heavy like lumps of lead, and he sank, sank, till he went almost out of sight. Then he gave a yell, and gave himself up for lost. A bold man came, threw out a plank, reached him, got hold of him, and pulled him out. You are like that man in the quicksands of evil. We cannot help ourselves: we sink, sink, and we need help from without, from above. Paul got that help from Christ. And the beauty of this truth is: it is a power for all—this power of Christ's cross.

A great scientist said that the Patagonians would never be civilised. He had been in their neighbourhood. "They are nothing but brutes," he said. After a few years, he visited Patagonia again. In the interval, missionaries had gone and told them about Christ's cross. A number of them had been converted; the world had been crucified to them, and they to the world; and they began to settle down and to work, became educated, clothed like other men, refined, civilised. Darwin did not believe in the Gospel, but he was an honest man; he looked at the facts with his own eyes. He examined these men who had been "nothing but brutes," and he saw they were changed. "I have been mistaken," he said. "I will give a contribution for the mission that has done such good work among these sunken savages."

This power is a power for all—for the wildest and the most ignorant, for young and for old. It has been a power among all sorts of people in all lands during the last eighteen hundred years. If ever you meet a savage in your travels, or a wild man at home, you are never to allow yourself for a minute to think that Christ cannot save and rescue that man.

I have another word: The Gospel is a most gentle power, nothing in the world is more gentle. Sometimes men are terrified by their sins, and you read of men being in awful fear of hell, and of conscience. But the power of Christ is a gentle power. It finds its way, somehow, to the hearts of men; it works by love and creates the grandest changes ever seen under heaven.

When I was in Norway, I saw men working away with a great mass of snow that had fallen on the highway in a pass in one of the mountains. They were digging and shovelling at the masses of snow and working very hard. We had great difficulty in getting over the pass. But the sun was rising higher day by day, and it kissed the great masses of ice that had gathered during the winter, that the men were toiling and sweating and digging at. The sun simply smiled and melted the snow and ice, so that they became water and disappeared. That is the way God's grace comes. Do not be afraid of it. Do not suppose it will strike terror into your heart, or do any terrible thing to you.

How changed the world is to-day from what it was five months ago. How grand and rich the fields look, everywhere covered in beauty and fertility. I was in the country yesterday, and I thought I had never seen crops so full of splendid promise for many a year. One of the oldest inhabitants told me he had not seen such crops during his many years' residence there. How has it all come about? Spring came in gently, without any noise or any violence. So the day-spring from on high visits hearts. Thus the cross of Christ in the quietest, sweetest, gentlest way reaches the heart, and makes the grandest and the happiest change that can come to a human being.

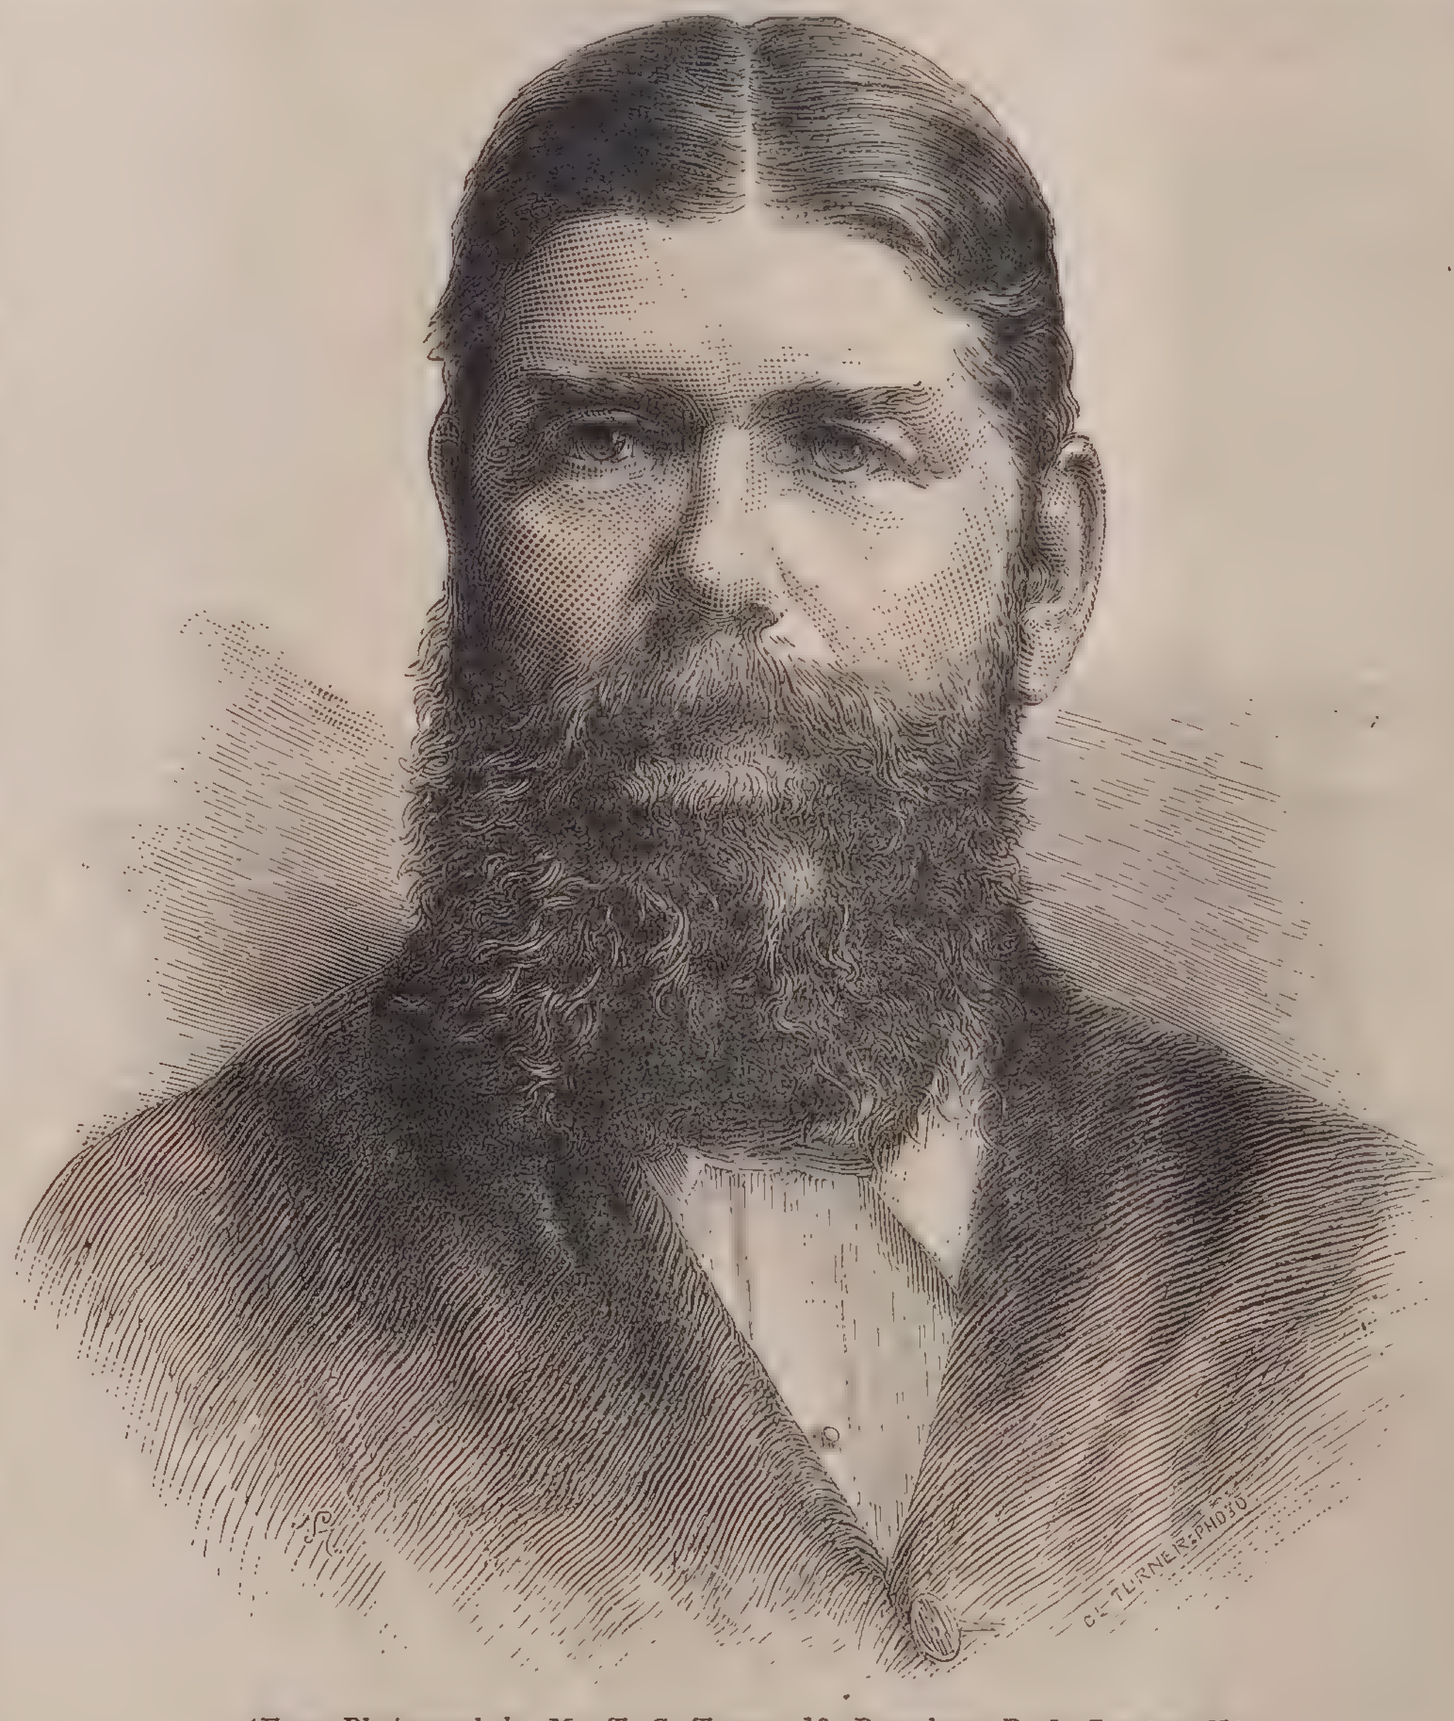
Therefore, welcome Christ and welcome the love of Christ into your hearts, and never be afraid of it. Throw the doors of your heart wide open, so that Christ may come in and work this great change in you. I am afraid some of you think very little about it. I asked a friend of mine, who more than twenty years ago had to do with a great deal of good work among people in poorer places than this is, and who has now to do with people similar to those who live in Pollokshields. I asked him what were some of his strongest ideas? "Well," he said, "the truth that strikes me most is this: that the Gospel has far more power among wild and wicked people than it has amongst decent Christian families. There is nothing in my life that has struck me so much as that. Among wild and wicked people the Gospel is fresh and new, and it brings such a wonderful change." My dear children, take care lest the very fact, called "drinking in the Gospel with your mother's milk"—knowing all about what Christ has done for you—should hinder you from realising how grand and glorious a thing it is, and how much brightness and light and love it may bring into your hearts. Remember, it is intended to effect a change as grand, beautiful, and fruitful as it brought into the heart of the Apostle Paul, who says: "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world."

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., July 14, 2 Chron. xiv. 1—15; Mon., July 15, 2 Chron. xv. 1—15; Tues., July 16, 2 Chron. xvii. 1—13; Wed., July 17, 2 Chron. xviii. 1—17; Thurs., July 18, 2 Chron. xviii. 18—34; Fri., July 19, 2 Chron. xix. 1—11; Sat., July 20, 2 Chron. xx. 1—13.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION

The following are the present approximate arrangements for the seaside services during this summer:—During July: Mr. J. S. Tyler, Margate. Rev. Duncan Sillars, Carnoustie. Mr. R. Vivian Cory, Penarth. Revs. H. Braddock and C. F. Jones, Swansea. Messrs. Albert E. Walklett and H. R. Alexander, Lowestoft Mr. Josiah Spiers, Lytham, July 22 to Aug. 9; Southport, Aug. 10—23; South Shore, Blackpool, Aug. 24 to September 13. Mr. George Banaster, in the yacht Kingfisher, Llandudno, in July, and at various watering places in Scotland during August. Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith, Llandudno, all August. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Bridlington. Mr. C. H. Nash, Scarborough. Mr. E. T. M. Dennes, Whitby. Mr. F. Aldous, Saltburn. Mr. E. Salisbury, Cromer. Mr. H. W. Figgis (of Dublin), Brighton. Rev. Martin J. Hall, Bournemouth. Mr. W. H. Roberts, St. Leonards and Hastings. Mr. C. F. Harford-Battersby, Eastbourne. Mr. W. R. Moore and Dr. Carless, Ilfracombe. Mr. J. C. Rainey, Paignton. Mr. H. G. Harris, Weston-super-Mare. Mr. Howard Staines, Penmaenmawr. Mr. T. L. Sayer, Rhyl. Mr. G. R. Kirlew, Lytham. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Littlehampton. Rev. W. T. Storrs, Sandown, I.W. Messrs. C. and E. Collier, Herne Bay. Mr. J. H. Greene, Dunoon, N.B., and Morecambe. Mr. Livesay Carrott, Deal. Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Yarmouth. Mr. C. Bell, Clacton-on-Sea. Mr. G. H. Chaplin, Felixstowe.

JOHANNESBURG, TRANSVAAL.—A correspondent in this rapidly growing town writes to say that there is great need of some special Gospel work on behalf of the careless masses. Evil influences are rampant, and there is a call for earnest testimony, especially through open-air work.



MISS SHARMAN'S ORPHAN HOMES.—Another year of work has been completed in connection with these well-known Homes. In a circular letter Miss Sharman says it will be impossible to get out the annual report before the autumn. Meanwhile she intimates that the time has come for sending the little people off to the sea-side. The past winter told upon the feeble constitutions of some of them. Miss Sharman remarks: "Our friends have helped so liberally in the past that I trust they will not fail us now that the number of orphans in the Homes is larger than ever before." Miss Sharman's address is 20, West-square, London, S.E.

SERMON-LANE MISSION.—For many years associated most honourably with the name of the late Mr. George Fuller, this well-known Mission, having its head-quarters in Liverpool-road, Islington, continues to prove a conspicuous blessing in a region where Gospel influence and sympathy are very greatly needed. Mr. W. West is now superintendent; and the various agencies of the Mission are still directed to the supreme and definite end of winning souls to Christ. Young and old are alike cared for, and by special gatherings much is done to benefit various sections of the community. The Youths' Institute and Young Women's Welcome are both in a prosperous condition, and, we are glad to learn, becoming increasingly useful. The hon. sec. of the Mission is Mr. Daniel Cooksey, 52, Amwell-street, Pentonville, N.

THE LATE MR. GEORGE STOTT,

Of the China Inland Mission, Wun-chau.

WE have lately been told that modern missionaries to the heathen are by no means perfect, either in their conceptions of the work they have undertaken, or their methods of performing it. They would be the last, we believe, to claim any such perfection; but we have no hesitation in claiming for them, as a whole, that they represent the highest outcome of the Christianity of their time. The religion of Jesus Christ is built upon self-sacrifice, and if there is any type of Christian disciple which exhibits that cardinal virtue in a higher measure than the foreign missionary, we have not yet been able to discover it. The devoted worker whose missionary career we desire here to sketch in outline, will be admitted by all who knew him to have been a shining example in this respect; and we rejoice to think that he was but one of many like-minded servants of Jesus Christ in all parts of the heathen world. When the average Christian at home attains to the heights of self-abnegation and consecrated zeal shown by the great body of missionary workers abroad, it will be a day of happy omen for the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour.

(From Photograph by Mr. T. C. Turner, 10, Barnsbury Park, London, N.)

GEORGE STOTT was a native of Aberdeenshire, and was born towards the end of 1835. At the age of eighteen he met with a slight accident, which necessitated, some two years later, the amputation of his left leg. As he lay a helpless captive in his room from the effects of this operation, God was pleased to reveal to him his spiritual condition, and he became the subject of converting grace. His after-life showed that his had been what Mr. Spurgeon recently called an "old-fashioned conversion." On recovering the power of locomotion, Mr. Stott betook himself to the work of teaching: he had been brought up to agricultural pursuits, but the loss of a limb unfitted him for that kind of life, and the solid education that every true Scottish father tries to give to his boys stood him in good stead.

For seven or eight years he continued his scholastic avocations; then, in the far-reaching providence of God, he heard, through Mr. George Crombie, of the spiritual needs and claims of China's millions. He reflected that if he gave up his teaching, there would be many to take his place, not one of whom probably would go to China. Some one asked him why he, a man with one leg, should think of going so far. His unanswerable reply was that as men with two legs were not going in sufficient numbers, he felt that he must go. He entered into communication with Mr. Hudson Taylor, and on coming up to London in the spring of 1865, he was accepted as a missionary for China. The "China Inland Mission" had not then been formed. In October of the same year he left England for the Flowery Land, which he reached in the spring of 1866.

While studying the language, Mr. Stott resided at Ningpo and its neighbourhood; and in the autumn of 1867 he settled in the city of Wun-chau, in the seaboard province of Cheh-kiang. He thus had the honour of being one of the early pioneers of the noble band who are now scattered throughout the vast Chinese Empire, acting as ambassadors from the Court of Heaven to that ancient and wonderful people. Wun-chau continued to be the scene of his earnest labours for the space of twenty long and busy years, with the exception of a brief furlough in 1877. He was the first to take the message of salvation to that place; and for years he had to suffer hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ.

The Chinese are still sufficiently conservative as to the welcome they afford to foreigners, but in those days they were far more exclusive and intolerant than now. On the way to his post of service, Mr. Stott passed Tai-chow, where Mr. Jackson, a member of the same Mission, was beginning work. They proceeded together to Wun-chau, and lived for some time in an inn, while they endeavoured to rent premises for mission purposes. Sometimes, when possession of a house was almost accomplished, the money paid would be given back, and admission refused. After many such attempts, a house was at length secured, and Mr. Jackson returned to his own station, leaving Mr. Stott to fight the battle single-handed. He began work by opening a school for boys, but very soon he experienced hot opposition on the part of the literati, who no doubt felt, like the Ephesians of old, that their craft was in danger. The city was placarded with handbills in which these accusations were made:—

> He has opened a charity school, to deceive boys, and secretly poison them. Such amazing wickedness and deceitful talk is, in comparison with the White Water-lily religion, still more despicable. Therefore, fellow-citizens, with united effort drive him out: do not suffer him to dwell...Fellow-brethren, with one heart and mind drive him out; pull down his house; do not allow even one piece of timber to stand up.

Mr. Stott's house was surrounded by a mob ready to do him personal violence, if not to kill him. Undaunted, he went out and faced the angry crowd; drawing himself up to his full height, he said, "You see I cannot run away from you if I would. But I have come here; and I mean to stay. You can kill me if you like; but, if you do, you will be called in question for it by the Government of England. If you let me alone you will see that I mean your good." The crowd seemed taken aback with his quiet answer and his strong confidence, and, after some further grumbling, they dispersed. He had other experiences of a similar kind, but these also passed off; and Mr. Stott never left the city for a single night, till, in the spring of 1870, he went to meet the lady who was to become his wife.

That was a year of great trial in China, and is marked in history as the year of the Tien-tsin massacre. Mr. and Mrs. Stott encountered great difficulty in their work. Posters were put up stating that all the many foreigners in Tien-tsin had been murdered or expelled. In Wun-chau there were but two; and it would be an easy matter to dispose of them. Some children were missing; it was rumoured about the city that the foreigners had decoyed them away and no doubt they had been murdered. For nearly three months the missionary and his wife lived almost in a state of siege. These were samples of the hindrances they had to meet during the first years of their work. When, in 1877, Mr. and Mrs. Stott returned for a time to England, owing to the failing health of the latter, much patient sowing had been accomplished, but comparatively little reaping. They left a mere handful of some twenty native Christians as the result of ten years' assiduous labour. Shortly after their return to China, however, the blessing began to manifest itself; and year by year increasing numbers were brought to confess the Lord Jesus Christ.

During the Franco-Chinese War in 1884, the inhabitants of Wun-chau broke out into riot. In one evening they burnt down all the mission premises—schools, chapels, house: everything that Mr. and Mrs. Stott possessed was destroyed, including even the missionary's Bible. The French had destroyed Foo-chow, and this was done in retaliation. The Chinese Government, however, awarded them compensation, and Mr. Stott was able to rebuild his ruined home. The trial through which they passed at this time was, in the good ordering of God, the instrument of a somewhat remarkable conversion, which was unknown to them at the time, but which afterwards came to their knowledge as a channel of special encouragement. Rev. David Hill, of the Wesleyan Mission, wrote to them that he had baptized a man. He had been in Wun-chau on business, had heard the Gospel from the missionary, and had become interested. A few weeks after, being in the city, this merchant saw Mr. Stott being pursued and stoned as he made his way to the Yaman, or official residence of the Governor. The missionary endured the persecution quietly, without retaliating or showing any bitterness towards his enemies. The man was greatly struck with the thought of there being a religion that could produce such fruit; and he concluded it was worth looking into. On returning to his home in Hankow he attended the Gospel services there, and was ultimately baptized by Mr. Hill.

The last year that Mr. Stott spent in China was one of special blessing. At the commencement of the Week of Prayer, he had pleaded with God that there might be continuous blessing throughout the year. Week by week he kept this petition before God, asking that there might be at least one conversion every Lord's Day. In December, when looking over the church roll, he was greatly interested to see that exactly fifty-two had been baptized and received into church fellowship during the year—one for each week. This he regarded as a direct answer to prayer; he was grieved that he had not shown stronger faith, and had limited his request to one soul a week.

In all Mr. Stott's labours Mrs. Stott was his constant sympathiser and fellow-worker; her field of effort being mainly among those of her own sex. Some of our readers will have heard from her lips the touching story of how, after long and patient toil, a work of grace broke out among the girls in the schools, which was accompanied by truly wonderful results. Mrs. Stott was also much used of God in her work among Chinese mothers.

As a striking example of the thoroughgoing way in which Mr. Stott implanted the truth in the minds of the boys in his school, the following incident may be related: One lad was brought to an open confession of Christ when about thirteen. At the age of fourteen he went to a city forty miles away, to attend on a native preacher. One day he strolled into a Buddhist temple, and there found an old man worshipping idols. He waited till the man had finished his devotions; then, seating himself by the side of the devotee, he said: "Venerable grandfather, do the idols see and hear you when you worship?" "Yes." "But you see they are made of clay; how can they answer your prayers?" Said the man, "I do not worship the clay; but inside the idol there is a spirit that can see and hear." The boy, who had often heard Mr. Stott answer such questions as these, said: "You say there is a spirit in the god: but look at this one—it has a dirty face; it has not been washed for ever so long. There is another whose nose is broken off; and it has not had the sense to have it mended. This other one has had part of its moustache taken away; yet it has not been able to protect itself. What is the use of a spirit inhabiting a body that cannot protect it better than this? We have a spirit within our bodies: but rats do not run away with our moustache. I can speak to you and you can hear, because of the spirit within. Let the spirit leave our bodies, and we are dead, like the idols, and cannot protect ourselves." The old man was struck with the wisdom of the boy, and asked where he had learned such wonderful things. He replied, "In the school at Wun-chau. But I can tell very little. If you go to the preacher, he can tell you more." The old man went, and took his wife with him. They learned of the Saviour, and at last believed. That was the beginning of a good work in the city, where there are now about a hundred professed Christians.

Mr. Stott gave much time to the Scriptural training of young men: so that he had a goodly band of native volunteer preachers who went out into the villages and towns on the Lord's Day, preaching the Gospel, and returning to their occupations on the Monday. He used to say that if he could saturate the native Christians with the Word of God they would become a living power among the people. This longing gave tone and character to all his labours; and his preaching to the believers was more of the nature of Bible lessons than sermons. That his work was fruitful is shown by the statistics of the Inland Mission published at the beginning of last year. From these it appears that at Wun-chau, and station and out-stations in connection, there were 255 communicants in fellowship, and that the number baptized from the commencement was 349. Mr. Stott had native helpers, and, during a portion of the time, European fellow-labourers; but the results of the work at Wun-chau are without doubt chiefly owing to the blessing of God upon the faithful labours of himself and his devoted wife. They worked and prayed together, with one mind and heart; and they rejoiced together with the joy of harvest.

The seeds of the disease that terminated Mr. Stott's earthly service must have been sown in his otherwise strong constitution on entering his house after the rebuilding. Both he and Mrs. Stott were much reduced in health, so that they took leave of China, for a time as they hoped, with the view to recruit. Nothing of a serious nature, however, was anticipated; and it was not until he left China that congestion of the lungs was developed, affecting the action of the heart. On returning to England, kind friends in different parts of the country entertained Mr. and Mrs. Stott; and it was hoped that the complaint might be conquered, and restored health granted for further service among his loved Chinese. The last two years of his life were full of suffering, but they were marked by such patient submission to the will of God that, although it involved intense weariness, not one word of murmuring ever escaped him. The cheerfulness and patience of his life were the wonder of all who saw him. He was used even to the very end in blessing to others; and all with whom he came in contact felt it a privilege to have known him.

In the summer of last year Mr. and Mrs. Stott accompanied Dr. Gordon, of Boston, and Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, during the greater part of their missionary tour through Scotland. Mr. Stott was unable to take any active part in speaking at the meetings; but this work was very effectively done by Mrs. Stott. Her husband's Christian converse and interesting recitals of his experiences in China were, however, a source of much cheer and stimulus to others of the deputation. Some months were spent with friends near Dartmouth; and, as a last expedient, Mr. Stott, with his wife, went to the South of France in search of recuperation. But the disease had fastened itself too firmly in his frame: dropsy set in, and all hope of recovery had to be abandoned. Mr. Stott heard the opinion of the doctors calmly and cheerfully, and in the midst of his suffering looked forward with eager expectancy to his passing from earth into the presence of the King whom he had loved and served.

A very interesting "In Memoriam" sketch prepared after Mr. Stott's death (2d. Morgan & Scott) contains a long letter written by a friend who was present at the closing scene of his life, and he thus writes:—

> During eight hours we witnessed the King of Terrors doing his worst. The combat was a fierce one; blow after blow was dealt, strong pains were tearing at the vitals; the anguish of dissolution was there, but not for one moment did the spirit falter. With every moment's respite from pain he collected his little strength to give forth some word of testimony that the LORD was near, and doubt and fear far away. "It is only the poor body that is suffering," he said; "the soul is happy." Early in the evening he said, "I bless GOD that thirty years ago He washed me from my sins in his precious blood, and now the sun is shining without a cloud." And thus, with unfaltering faith and unwavering hope, he went down into the valley of the shadow...Our tears were flowing fast, though we hardly knew why. He was looking on things which to us were invisible, and hearing sounds our dull ears could not catch. We could hear him say in a low whisper, "Come, LORD JESUS—LORD, take my spirit"; then he said, "Coming, coming—come!"

So on Easter morning, 1889, he passed peacefully and triumphantly away from the region of faith and service to the land of vision and of enjoyment. His mortal remains lie in the cemetery at Cannes. He sleeps in Jesus after a life's day of busy and unremitting toil: and truly his works do follow him.

GAS WORKERS.—I read in THE CHRISTIAN of the 5th that "the men who in gasworks have to clean the purifying boxes of the lime through which the gas passes are so affected by the foul gas as to be temporarily blinded." I am not a chemist, but I have been told that oxide of iron may be substituted for lime in this process. Perhaps some scientific or practical reader may be able to find a remedy for the evil in this direction. J. J. M.

Sunday School Convention.

THE World's Sunday-school Convention, held in London last week, was happily conceived and admirably carried out. The sessions were spread over four days, and, what with additional engagements of an interesting character, the delegates, several hundred in number, found their time very fully occupied. The s.s. Bothnia, which arrived at Liverpool on Saturday, June 29, brought a party of 250 from America. On Monday evening the Lord Mayor of London gave a reception, which was attended by 700 or 800 ladies and gentlemen, and on the following day the sessions of the Convention began. They were presided over by Mr. F. F. Belsey, chairman of the Sunday-school Union Committee, with much ability and true heartiness. The discussions were for the most part of a thoroughly practical character, and when published in book form they will undoubtedly prove valuable to many earnest workers. A memorial was adopted, calling upon the potentates of Europe to exercise their personal influence, and put forth the constitutional power in their hands, in order to secure for the day of weekly rest the place given to it in the Decalogue, and recognised in all Christian lands. Among the many resolutions adopted was one expressing the opinion that every Sabbath-school should be, in effect, a temperance training school, fitting the rising generation for active and aggressive efforts in this and every other department of Christian work. It was decided to appoint a Sunday-school organiser for India, where the work is capable of development on a large scale, both among Europeans and natives.

The Convention closed with a

held in Exeter Hall. The chair was occupied by Lord KINNAIRD, who is President of the Sunday-school Union. In opening the proceedings, he struck a note of praise for the blessing which God had vouchsafed upon the proceedings of the four days. The home delegates represented 5½ millions of scholars and 500,000 teachers; while those from the United States represented 8½ million scholars and nearly 1½ million teachers. There were also delegates from Canada, Australasia, and the Continent present. His lordship referred to some of the points which have been emphasised during the Convention. First, we have been reminded that if we do not get the children before they are twelve or fourteen years old, someone else gets them; also, we have learned that we have to give the scholars something worth listening to, if we are to retain them. Moreover, we have come to feel the great need for a fresh impulse in our heavenly journey. The work is urgent and difficult, and, in order to prosecute it successfully, we must have wisdom and grace from above.

Mr. E. M. HITCHCOCK, from Geelong, spoke on the work in Australia. The population hardly reaches four millions, but there are 5400 Sunday-schools, with one and a half million scholars, taught by 45,000 teachers. The schools were planted in the old English fashion, but, copying the United States, important modifications have since been adopted, so that they are not, as at first, confined to the poor, and include grown-up people as well as children. Libraries are established with the schools, so as to secure the interest of scholars of maturer years. Of late the work has gone much in the way of American ideas, and the conversion of the scholars is the definite aim of the teachers. One of the difficulties encountered in Victoria is the fact that the elementary education is severely secular; though the name of God is not avoided, every reference to the world's Saviour is eliminated from the day-school reading books. Another difficulty arises from the disposition of a large number of people to make the Sabbath a day of amusement rather than rest, and worship, and Christian work. Alive to these dangers, the friends of Sunday-schools endeavour to be consistent themselves, and to secure an improved public sentiment on religious matters.

whose voice had been several times heard before during the Convention, spoke of Sunday-school endeavour in Germany. In Berlin there are about eighty-four schools, with 20,000 scholars, taught by 1000 teachers. What makes the work at present very interesting is the fact that cheering progress is being recorded. Certainly during the past twenty-five years, the religious life of Germany has received much help from the Sunday-schools. Most of the Church governments now support the movement; and though, of course, the work does not depend upon them, it is gratifying to know that they are helping it. Speaking on the observance of the Lord's Day in Germany, the Count mentioned the great improvement which has taken place since the present Emperor came to the throne. Previously, it was customary for all the races of Berlin to be held on Sunday. His Majesty expressed a wish that this practice should not continue; that wish was regarded as a command, and during the past winter and spring, all the races have been held on week-days. The young Empress is similarly earnest in the prosecution of Christian work, and the children of the Royal family are brought up in a simple and religious manner.

In the day schools of Germany religious instruction occupies an important place. The consequence is that the children acquire a good deal of religious knowledge, and the endeavours of the Sunday-school teachers are accordingly confined to driving the Divine truths home. Leaving the elements of knowledge, the Sunday-schools have aimed at impressing upon the hearts of the young the duty and privilege of loving the Lord Jesus Christ, and in this manner they have certainly done much to advance the spiritual life of the community, and to multiply earnest Christian workers. Another feature of the work in Germany is that there is hardly a Sunday-school without its preparation class, at which the teachers receive loving, practical help from one another. These preparation meetings are also blessed occasions for Christian fellowship, The superintendent gets to know the teachers, and they also learn to understand him and each other.

Rev. J. MCKILLICAN, representing Canada, spoke of the steady progress of Sunday-school work in the Dominion. Great blessing has attended it, churches having in a large number of cases grown out of Sunday-schools. A comparatively brief period has seen some two thousand Sabbath-schools established, and the movement advances alike in back woods and populous places. Devoted men and women have thrown their hearts into it, and the material has to a considerable extent been of that excellent character which England sends and follows with prayer and blessings.

Dr. JOHN HALL, of New York, spoke briefly of the great importance of the work of the true Sunday-school teacher. He took occasion to utter against the idea that the preparation is simply intellectual; it should be more than that—nothing less than personal devotional study of the Word of God. Referring to the tendency to make little of the distinctive truths of God's Word, and a great deal of a general religious and devout sentiment, which disregards doctrine, he said: I am for religious sentiment, most certainly; but I say that religious sentiment must be based upon intelligent religious conviction; and intelligent religious conviction is to be had by an intelligent study and acceptance of the infallible Word of the living God.

Rev. P. WILLIAMS, in a powerful address, dwelt upon the Sunday-school movement as an agency of evangelisation, and upon the many opportunities it offers for men and women alike. No one who is not willing to participate in the work has a right to criticise it. The speaker maintained that, next to loyalty to the Lord, we want sympathy with human life. This is based on goodness. Attempts to influence childhood without personal goodness must end in disastrous failure. The scepticism and secularism we meet to-day, especially among young men and women, are due far more to the inconsistency of Christians, and to the unsympathetic attitude of the churches, than to intellectual conclusions about Christianity. We need more than a theory; we need a life. Sympathy is invincible. When Jesus wept at the grave of Lazarus, even those Jews who were never moved by his teachings or miracles were compelled to exclaim, "Behold how He loved him!"

Mr. B. F. JACOBS, of Chicago, one of the chief promoters of the well-known International Lesson series, followed with a speech which was inspiriting in a high degree and thoroughly practical. Taking into account the work performed, the results secured, and the expenditure incurred, the Sunday-school is, he maintained, the most hopeful and the most economical agency known in the Christian world.

WHY MOST HOPEFUL?

Because it concentrates attention upon the children. The destiny of Great Britain and America is in the hands of the children, and those who can influence the children are to a large extent responsible for the future of the world.

Having emphasised the need for more tender sympathy on the part of teachers, and referred to the secularising and Romanising movements which are careering so ostentatiously in America, the speaker urged to a more thorough faith in God. He told stories of devoted women in the Western States of America who collected children from sparsely inhabited regions into their houses, and taught them the truth as it is in Jesus. He pleaded for conventions throughout the world, with a view to renewed activity on a larger scale than ever, and, urging to united effort, he quoted the dictum of a divine who said, "Brethren, if we cannot agree, let us adjourn until the Millennium, and then talk over our differences." Thorough organisation must, he said, include a house-to-house visitation, in order to get the children into the schools. Rejoicing in the deepened feeling of responsibility prevailing among teachers, he reminded us that in eleven years the century will close. The work is urgent, and the appeal for good and true men and women to engage in it was accentuated by visible emotion on the part of the speaker, as he said, Let us decide that, if the Lord tarry and we live, the coming years shall find us working earnestly with and for Him. Moreover, let us arise and get to our work at once to-morrow may be too late to begin!

BAND OF HOPE BREAKFAST.

It was an excellent idea to bring the Convention delegates into definite touch with the work of imparting temperance teaching to the young. This was brought about, through the kind generosity of Mr. George Williams, by a breakfast gathering on Saturday morning at Exeter Hall. The area of the Lower Hall was well filled with the guests, the American friends being fully represented. Abundant provision was made for the supply of nature's cravings; and after this had been partaken of, everybody settled themselves for the feast of reason and of heartfelt speech that poured out from the platform.

In his prefatory remarks, Mr. WILLIAMS very feelingly alluded to his recent sore bereavement, through the death of his daughter, and to the kind Christian sympathy that had been expressed on every side. He said that at an early age his daughter had given herself to the Saviour, and she had been ctively engaged in Sunday-school work; nly a fortnight back she was teaching her ass in school. Her promotion to the higher phere of service ought to stimulate teachers to ake the best possible use of their fleeting pportunities. Then, touching on the importnce of temperance work in its bearing on the oung, Mr. Williams told of a clergyman, in a orthern town, who had endeavoured to find ut about the after life of a hundred Sundaychool boys. Of the one hundred he traced eventy-seven, and of these seventy-seven he iscovered that thirty-nine had fallen into ntemperate habits. Surely this drink evil one of the weeds that spring up and choke he good seed of the Word as it is sown in the earts of the young. Long experience of usiness in the city of London, said Mr. Villiams, had taught him that even Sundaychool teachers are not free from the terrible nare of strong drink. Though there are some 700,000 abstaining young people in our Bands f Hope, some four millions of Sunday-school nildren are unreached in England alone. efore closing his earnest little speech, the hairman spoke a weighty word of protest gainst the pernicious habit of smoking, that is ften so closely allied with indulgence in rink.

In a brief, but comprehensive, statement of he work of the Band of Hope movement, Mr. . Walkley, the secretary, cited the opinion of hief Justice Coleridge, that strong drink prouces nine-tenths of our crime, and that of Sir ndrew Clarke, that it is responsible for sevenths of our disease. The Band of Hope nion is strenuously endeavouring, by its staff f lecturers, to create a sound and healthy entiment on the subject among the young and the community generally. Much has still to e done in connection with our day-schools. Ve in Great Britain are as yet far behind merica in that department; but it is hoped hat temperance physiology will, before long, nd a place in the education code.

In rising to address the meeting, our everreen friend, Dr. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, was armly cheered. The Band of Hope Union, e said, is a wing of God's great army, and is engaged in fighting one of the most tupendous of the evils that curse the civilised orld. Saving drunkards is a very difficult nd discouraging business; let us see to it that he boys and girls are not drawn into the rst currents of temptation. Every Sundaychool teacher, exclaimed Dr. Cuyler, ought to e a total abstainer. The cheers which greeted his declaration were renewed when he went n to say that every minister of the Gospel hould be the same. We want a great deal hore pluck and backbone in this matter of oycotting the drink. The many and great vils of the time had cured him of being too ptimistic, but he tried to be a real, earnest, heerful pessimist, assured that God is not oing to forsake his world, and that Christ did ot steep its soil with his blood in vain. He ooked forward to a glorious Sunday-school onvention in the skies, where we shall clasp ands, fling our crowns at the Saviour's feet, nd shout, "Glory to God, Hallelujah!" for ver and ever.

After the old man eloquent, came the young han witty as well as eloquent, Rev. John McNeill. He was in fine "fettle." After the reliminary pleasantries, he insisted on it that Sunday-school teachers are to be practical hey must have something to say to the childen on all the evils that lie ahead of their ath. Among these he put gambling, over ressing, evil "recreations" so-called, frivolous terature, and the drink. He put in a plea at he same time for sticking to the primitive octrine of man's fall and the universal need of egeneration. It is no use telling our children hat they are little angels or budding saints, nd so training up a generation of young hypoites and Pharisees. Coming to close quarters ith the drink question, Mr. McNeill said he ad discovered that Christian workers in Lonon are much further behind with respect to it than he had imagined. He had detected something about a good many of them that had never suggested to him an odour of sanctity. He disliked the smell of smoking about as much as the smell of the drink. The bearing of these indulgences on the sorrow and suffering caused to the children was pathetically brought out, and in a splendid closing outburst he invoked the judgment of High Heaven upon the accursed traffic in intoxicating liquor.

Rev. Newman Hall followed on with an earnest and weighty utterance on the ruin that is wrought among the young by the drink. He would hail repressive legislation, but if we wait for that, we may have to wait long. With many a forcible simile and with rousing appeal, he called on Christian workers, and especially Sunday-school teachers, to engage in this warfare. Rev. Charles Garrett, of Liverpool, told some remarkably encouraging things about the growth of the working-class opinion in that city on the subject of closing drink-shops. He had recently entertained to tea over eighty young fellows of the dangerous larrikin type, and they all agreed that the public-houses ought to be shut up. As a parting shot, Mr. Garrett called on Christians to banish the drink from the Lord's Table.

We had brief speeches from Rev. John Bright, a Kansas delegate (who made the proud boast that in that Prohibition State the boys and girls were free from the temptations of the saloon), from Mr. F. F. Belsey, Mr. J. H. Raper; and the company certainly could not say that they had not "a good square meal," intellectual, as well as physical.

RECEPTION AT DOLLIS HILL.

A very delightful finish to the Convention proceedings was furnished by a visit to Lord and Lady Aberdeen's suburban residence at Dollis Hill, on Saturday afternoon. In response to the kind invitation of the Earl and Countess, a whole train load of delegates left St. Pancras shortly after three o'clock. The day was one of the sultriest of an unusually hot summer, but a fresh and cooling breeze circulated around the hill-top on which the house is situated; and the grateful shade of the fine old trees enabled the four or five hundred visitors to pass the time with all possible comfort. The noble host and hostess greeted their guests individually as they arrived, and soon everybody was at his ease.

There was plenty of variety in the entertainment provided. Some youthful pipers from the Royal Caledonian Asylum flung out pibrochs and other peculiarly Highland airs; while there came alternately the strains of a boys' brass band from the Farningham Home for Little Boys. Mr. Duncan Miller and his Royal Handbell Ringers cleverly wielded their wonderful collection of bells little and bells big, including a miniature imitation of "Big Ben." Some striking effects were produced by one of the troupe in his rapid manipulation of the "Xylophone," in which pieces of resonant wood were made to give forth charming music; while the conductor's merry humour accorded well with the brightness of the occasion. The refreshment tent was very popular, and several groups of the visitors were photographed, one of them being honoured with the presence of the host and hostess, with their children.

The happy surroundings and the cheerful social converse made the time speed quickly on, but before the party broke up an informal meeting was arranged on the lawn in front of the house. Lord Aberdeen expressed, on behalf of himself and his wife, the pleasure they felt at receiving so many delegates to the Sunday-school Convention, and dwelt on the great and growing importance of the movement that had brought them together.

Mrs. Pearsall Smith said she was specially delighted at the thought of so many earnest hearts and minds being arrayed on the side of the children. She remembered how she longed, when a child, for someone to speak to her on religious subjects. Our relations with our children teach us more of what God's attitude is towards us than anything else in the world. She used in her young days to be taught that God only loved her when she was good, but hated her when she was naughty. She besought the instructors of the children to make them understand that God loves them at all times, though He hates their naughtiness. She told a very pretty narrative of the conversion of one of her own boys, through the simple unsophisticated prayers of a sister and another little friend that he might have a new heart. The boy's life was really changed from that time, and she thought if we were more simple and trusting in our dealings with the children many more of them would be savingly led to Christ when young.

Mr. B. F. Jacobs, in speaking on behalf of the American friends, said he thought their gathering was a little foretaste of heaven. He expressed the gratitude of American Christians to England for her support of every good cause. He very eloquently pressed home the responsibility of all who have the moulding of young life, and as eloquently expatiated on the grandeur of the good old Book which is our guide in the work of teaching. He closed with a glowing picture of the joys of the coming glory. As he ceased to speak the meeting struck up a verse of the hymn, "What must it be to be there?" Lord Kinnaird was the fitting mouthpiece of the company in heartily thanking Lord and Lady Aberdeen for their kind reception and hospitality; in this he was well seconded by Mr. F. F. Belsey. Three rousing cheers were given for the hosts, and an additional one for the children. Then the Earl and Countess both briefly responded, and the visitors found their way back to town, carrying many happy memories of a profitable outing.

On Friday between fifty and sixty delegates visited the Bible printing establishment of Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode, at Hackney, and inspected the various processes of work, from type-setting to binding. In the course of some addresses of welcome and congratulation, the large undertakings of the firm were spoken of, and their very important work of producing copies of the Holy Scriptures happily described as "the peerage of printing." On leaving, each delegate was presented with a Variorum Reference Bible as a memento of the visit.

ASHBOURNE, DERBYSHIRE.—A commodious hall for night schools and Gospel services has been erected in this town. The opening services were held on the 2nd inst., when deeply interesting addresses on the Christian life were delivered by Rev. F. B. Meyer and Mr. John McAuliffe.

FEMALE CONVALESCENTS.—The annual meeting of the After Care Association for Poor and Friendless Female Convalescents on leaving Asylums for the Insane took place at 83, Lancaster-gate, W., on Thursday, July 4. The objects are to facilitate the re-admission of poor and friendless female convalescents from lunatic asylums into social life. The Earl of Meath presided, and the speakers included Dr. Norman Kerr, Dr. Hack Tuke, Dr. G. H. Savage, Dr. T. C. Shaw, and Dr. Fletcher Beach. There was a good attendance, and much interest shown in the proceedings. All information to be obtained of the secretary, H. Thornhill Roxby, "Arden Lea," The Drive, Walthamstow.

THE STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.—At the monthly meeting of the Christian workers on Friday last, Mr. J. T. Isaac, hon. sec., stated that now that many helpers are away holiday-making, outside assistance will be more than usually welcome, especially by such as can converse in Italian, Scandinavian, and other languages. A work of much promise has been commenced among the little children of the neighbourhood. In order to carry on the endeavour already begun among the rough lads, the services of friends who could spare one evening a week are much needed. Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson delivered a powerful lecture on "Power with God and with Men: a study of the name 'Israel.'" It was at once instructive and stimulating, and highly appreciated by all present.

Farewell to Missionaries.

HARLEY HOUSE, Bow, E., is not only an increasingly useful institution for the training of evangelists for the foreign field, but a truly interesting centre of missionary life and influence. Of this fact, fresh evidence was furnished on Tuesday, last week, when meetings were held to take leave of labourers about to start for Africa, China, India, and Jamaica. The first meeting, held in the College Hall in the afternoon, was presided over by Mr. J. E. Mathieson. Eleven Zanzibaris were in attendance; they belonged to the late Major Bartellot's company of porters, and on their arrival in London Dr. Guinness was communicated with, in the hope that someone from the College would be able to converse with them. There was at the time no one who could hold intelligent intercourse with the poor fellows, who seemed docile, as well as of good physical capabilities. Their presence at the meeting was a powerful plea for the millions of their benighted nation.

In a brief address, the CHAIRMAN expressed his heartfelt sympathy with, and thankfulness for, the work which Mr. and Mrs. Guinness and their family are carrying on with so much blessing. Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR followed with some helpful words. Calling attention to 2 Tim. i. 12, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day," he maintained that the men and women who are wanted for Christian service abroad and at home are those who know God. Such workers can never be alone, for God is their Friend and Guide, and by faith and prayer they commune with Him. He linked these thoughts with Paul's experience, as stated in Phil. iii. 7, 8: "What things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ....I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord." The Apostle lost nothing; rather, by spiritual barter, he incurred temporal loss to secure eternal gain. Not only are we to give up things that are sinful, but much besides, even as Christ left the bosom of his Father to save men. In conclusion, Mr. Taylor quoted Eph. iv. 16, showing that from Christ the Head the entire body must make increase. All members should be workers, and those at home should be no less heroic than those who go abroad. All love and effort must, however, be from vital union with the Head.

MRS. GRATTAN GUINNESS followed with a description of Central Africa with its sad needs, and a plea for increased interest in its millions of inhabitants. She said: Many true Christian people have strongly rebuked me for "wasting," as they say, so much time and attention upon foreign countries. Whatever some may feel, I feel, and so do many others, in hearty agreement with the Apostle Paul, whose earnest desire was not only to preach the Gospel to those near at hand, but also in the regions beyond. God thinks of the regions beyond, and so ought we. God thinks of the world, and hither He sent his Son; unless we also love and pity, we are not Godlike. Mrs. Guinness went on to speak of Central Africa as a new world just discovered. Thousands of miles have only been known one year; hundreds of thousands of miles were unknown ten years ago. In the sixteenth century the Christian world was co-terminous with the Roman Church, and so, when South America was discovered, a horrible corruption of Christianity was disseminated, which instead of blessing that new world cursed it, so that now it is a realm of darkness and degradation. In the mercy of God, however, we can give the true pure Gospel to the

which is being so sadly overrun by slave-raiders and made a very habitation of cruelty.

Having described the various concessions on the East and West coasts of the Continent, and enlarged upon the importance and promise of the great Congo Free State, Mrs. Guinness endeavoured to impress upon her hearers the immensity of the country, and the gross ignorance and wickedness of its people. It was gratiying to hear that in some parts the races are vigorous and industrious, and that the land has been blessed beyond measure by God, for the production of the necessities and luxuries of life. As a market for manufactures, the country makes great offers. Beyond everything else, however, it is desirable that the people should be delivered from the horrors of superstition, and be told of God's love in Christ. At present there are not more than 150 missionaries in the interior. That cannot be called evangelisation—one messenger to a million people! Where the Gospel has been preached, there have been encouraging results; at Uganda, natives have gone to martyrdom rather than deny the faith, and on the Congo there are churches whose members know what it is to have true fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ.

Going back in history, Mrs. Guinness told the cruel story of the deportation of stolen blacks from Africa to America four hundred years ago. God maketh the wrath of man to praise Him, and now there are millions of coloured people in America, well educated and to a very large extent professing Christians. Under the grinding wheel of slavery they turned unto the Lord, and He delivered them out of their distresses. Now He is laying it upon their hearts to take the Gospel to their brethren and sisters in Africa. In fact, it is hoped that they will go back by thousands to the Dark Continent and preach Christ. This led to a reference to the present visit of Rev. H. Grattan Guinness to America. That visit has, said the speaker, already told considerably in bringing Christian work in Africa before the

COLOURED PEOPLE OF AMERICA.

Mr. Guinness has addressed the students, some three thousand in number, in the colleges in the Southern States, and many churches have had the subject placed before them. One of the results is an arrangement whereby workers may be sent to Liberia free of expense, under the auspices of what is called the Colonisation Society. It is hoped that this is but the ripple of a great stream of holy influence from America to Africa. With whites to guide and encourage them, the Southern blacks will, it is believed, make excellent heralds of the cross in the land where darkness has so long reigned. In conclusion, Mrs. Guinness urged her hearers to rise to their responsibility and privilege in the matter of evangelising the world. She held the work to be urgent, and could not but hold that the man or woman who had no pity on the heathen was sinning in the sight of God. It is Godly, or Godlike, to be compassionate. In this, then, let us all be imitators of God.

MR. W. SPENCER WALTON

spoke of the pressing needs of South Africa, whither he hopes soon to go. The Cape General Mission, which he will direct, will include in the scope of its operations blacks as well as whites. Seven or eight fellow-workers will, it is hoped, sail with him, on August 16. In the meantime efforts are being put forth to get the Mission "machinery" in good order. Mr. Walton asked for a Bible carriage and several other things which will assist the work.

After tea, a second meeting was held on the Lawn. Mr. E. H. Glenny pleaded the cause of North Africa with much earnestness. Mr. Wilkinson, a student, soon leaving for the Congo, told the story of God's leadings, as he had recognised them while following the path of duty. Three other young men, from the College, going to India and elsewhere, also spoke. Mr. and Mrs. D. Matthews were present, with Paddy and Jennie Swift, Australian aborigines. Mr. Matthews was heard with pleasure, on his very interesting labours at the Antipodes. In the evening a third meeting was held, presided over by Mr. Glenny, and addressed by several friends.

TRAINING SHIPS IN THE THAMES.

ON Monday week the annual distribution of prizes took place on board the Arethusa, in connection with the two training ships at Greenhithe. A steamboat left the Charing Cross pier in the morning with a numerous company en route for the ships. Down the river went the crowded little steamer, the sun shining, a pleasant breeze blowing, and the boys' band playing lively airs.

When the company reached the Arethusa, out went the lads upon the yardarms to receive them with a salute. Everything looked spick and span. The boys aloft were all in snowy-white suits, with light blue collars. Luncheon was served on the cool main deck below, from which the visitors were afterwards summoned to see the boys march, drill, and sing some stirring ocean choruses. Mr. W. E. Hubbard presided, but there was no speechifying. Just when Mr. W. Williams had commenced to give the visitors some information, the steamer Duke of Edinburgh passed up the river, having on board the Shah of Persia and the Prince of Wales, who had gone to meet the royal visitor. The meeting on the Arethusa was therefore broken up rather unceremoniously.

However, the day passed off pleasantly enough without speeches, as there were a variety of exercises, in which the boys had to engage. The prizes were given for diligence. Bible knowledge, swimming, general smartness, exemplary conduct, practical seamenship, cleanliness, and other acquisitions. A popular prize is that given to "the best boy in the ship." As Commander G. O. Moore, R.N., the head of this admirable institution said, they had introduced "boyhood suffrage," and the boys themselves decided who was to be the happy recipient of the prize. There was also a prize to the boy who had been most attentive and careful when nursing his sick comrades. The captain said he was "never in the way and never out of it." There were also two prizes for "the best account of a sermon." It was interesting to hear that many of the boys had written "splendid sermons of their own," but only two managed to give strict account of the words that fell from the Chaplain's lips.

After the distribution came contests in rowing, and then the visitors were conveyed back to the smoky city. It should be mentioned, as an instance of the good results attending the work of these Training Homes, that one of the "old boys" had secured an extra-master's certificate at twenty-nine years of age. Two boys also took prizes for "good conduct" on their first voyages. As one gentleman remarked, "There's good stuff in the boys," and surely it would be difficult to find a set of more active and bright lads than those on the Arethusa and Chichester, who waved hearty farewells to the departing visitors.

ANGOLA.—Bishop Taylor is coming to give a new impulse to his Angola work, and we expect a number of new missionaries with him. God is making bare his arm, and saving souls. Here at Malange a few have professed faith in Jesus, and a number have thrown away their idols. These people as a whole are eager to hear the Gospel. Thank God the Church is waking up, and a great missionary spirit prevails. The harvest truly is great, but the labourers as yet are few. Mr. Héli Chatelain has translated the Gospel of John into the language of this people. We have received part of his grammar. He wrote us by last mail saying the grammar would be completed in about a month. Friends can help by sending Portuguese Gospels and tracts. ROBERT SHIELDS.

MEDICAL STUDENTS AND MISSION WORK.

A DEEPLY interesting meeting was held at St. Bartholomew's Hospital a few days ago, when Mr. Cecil J. Davenport, late house surgeon, about to leave for China, to labour in connection with the London Missionary Society, was committed to the Lord in prayer by a number of students and friends.

Dr. R. THORNE THORNE, who presided, expressed regret that Professor W. P. Mears, M.D., of Durham University, who is also soon going to China as a medical missionary, was prevented by illness from being present. Having spoken in admiration of Mr. Davenport's purposes, and wished him God speed, the chairman mentioned that, finding there were a number of Bartholomew men in the mission field, the students not long ago started a Missionary Association among themselves; the endeavour being, in the first place, to maintain touch with the absent ones by meeting periodically to pray for them; and, in the second place, to supply them with instruments and drugs, which they are not always able to obtain, although they sorely need them. Having held that positions of isolation should be occupied by the best qualified men, the chairman rejoiced that Mr. Davenport was carrying a fellowship of his college out with him to China. He had a strong conviction that the advance guard of mission work ought to consist, in the first place, of medical missionaries, and, in the second place, of women. He said that every man who enters the medical profession ought to be a Christian. From beginning to end of the Bible, sin is identified with disease, and it is impossible more successfully to teach men that the greatest of diseases, sin, needs to be cured than by applying remedies to maladies of the body. Urging those intending to devote their lives to Christian service abroad to do so in early life, the speaker said: "What Christ wants is the vigour of our days and our whole life—not our crippled old age, when our lives have been tainted with service under the prince of this world."

Mr. A. G. PARROTT, in the course of a brief address, said that while engaged in mission work in China, he became so convinced of the importance of medical qualifications, that he resolved, on returning to England in search of restored health, to acquire a knowledge of medicine and surgery so as to be able to go back in the capacity of a medical missionary. The Chinese are so intensely practical a people, that a foreigner has small chance among them unless he can do them some immediate good. There is so little medical knowledge and skill among the people that practitioners are hailed with delight.

Dr. HOWARD TAYLOR, who is shortly proceeding to China as a medical missionary, spoke vigorously of the sad need of the million-peopled empire. Rev. W. R. MOWLL followed with a few hearty words. He said that when at Cambridge he had it laid on his heart to go forth to the mission field. That longing had animated him since, and was animating him still; but he was waiting for the distinct message to go. To run before the Holy Spirit must mean failure. He spoke of the importance of "Jerusalem," or home, testimony being borne before other work is attempted. God has, he said, a right to the very best of our time and talents. Let Christians bear daily witness at home, and then, in his own time, if it is his will, God will send them to work and testify in the uttermost parts of the earth.

Mr. DAVENPORT, in a brief address, said that the station to which he had been appointed was Ching-King, with a population of 200,000, situate about five hundred miles from Hankow. He remarked that his present purpose was in compliance of a resolve he made in the quiet of his lodgings at Hampstead three years ago, that He would serve God wholly and fully, and in whatever place and way God might call him. He asked his friends to have the glory of God always before them, and rest in the assurance that in the path of duty all things will work together for their good.

The chairman stated the interesting fact that students at the London Hospital proposed following the example of St. Bartholomew's, by forming a missionary association. Several brief, earnest prayers were offered in the course of the procedings.

CONFERENCE AT DOLLINGHOO.

DOLLINGHOO is a Suffolk village of two hundred inhabitants, and some particulars of a gathering lately held there will interest our readers. Rev. H. C. G. Moule, of Cambridge, and Rev. Evan Hopkins, of Richmond, were invited by Rev. W. S. Watford, rector of Dollinghoo, to give addresses on July 2 and 3 on the "Deepening of the Spiritual Life in Believers." The proximity of two stations, a neat mission-hall, a spacious garden, and large refreshment tent, combined to make Dollinghoo a suitable centre for such a meeting.

On July 2 the clergy were specially invited, and about sixty responded to the call. Mr. Moule, at the forenoon Communion service, spoke briefly, but most helpfully, on Heb. x. 15—17 and Luke xxii. 20. The Conference proper commenced at 2 o'clock, in the Mission-room. Mr. Moule, after stating impressively that he came to teach no new truths, but to emphasise old ones which the Holy Spirit had deeply blessed to his own soul, spoke with quiet power on 2 Tim. ii. 21 and 2 Cor. iv. 10, compared with 2 Cor. xii. 9—the absolute despotism of Christ, the necessity and blessedness of absolute and momentary submission to his control by faith.

Rev. E. Hopkins followed with a clear, vigorous exposition of 2 Tim. ii. 1. By "the grace in Christ Jesus" he understood the grace of perpetual deliverance from sinning, perpetual supply, momentary cleansing, strengthening, and guiding. In order to receive this grace there must be knowledge of God's promises, willingness to be "separate," and faith to accept the gift.

After half an hour's interval questions were asked, and admirably answered by the instructors.

At the evening meeting Mr. Moule spoke on Col. ii. 10. Mr. Hopkins, after expounding 2 Cor. iv. 10, and other Scriptures, urged his brethren to claim and accept Christ as their sanctification. Fervent prayers were poured forth, and a deeply solemn meeting closed at 9.30.

On the day following audiences were, of course, larger, but many of the clergy reappeared. Mr. Moule dwelt on the fulness in Christ for all believers (Eph. iii. 14, 15), and from Phil. i. and iv. 13 showed how Paul received of that fulness for all his needs. Mr. Hopkins proved that before enduement with power there must be spiritual adjustment (Heb. xiii. 20, and 1 Pet. v. 6—9). Between the various meetings it was pleasant to hear promenaders conversing on what they had heard. This second day ended with a searching sermon on 2 Pet. v. 18, and Phil. iii. 12.

The expenses of entertaining so many visitors, and lodging not a few in the village, were met by the generous bequest of a Christian lady, now deceased. Clergy and visitors came from Ipswich, Woodbridge, Lowestoft, Saxmundham, and villages for twelve miles round. Christians in East Suffolk cannot be too thankful for these days of blessing. It is surely the Lord's doing that, in a small country village, sixty clergy and numbers of Christian workers gathered to hear true Christian leaders testify of Jesus as the believer's sanctification.

MESSRS. WHITTLE AND MOXEY.

BEFORE coming up to Mildmay, the second and last week in Hawick brought Major Whittle's campaign in Scotland to a close, at least for the present. Although in the height of midsummer, and of glorious weather, the meetings got fuller and fuller, and on the last Sabbath Rev. Dr. Orr's church was filled to overflowing with women in the afternoon, and the Exchange large hall was full of men in the evening. Many thankful acknowledgements of blessing received were expressed during the last days, and at the end of the men's meeting, on the last night, when Major Whittle asked those who had received definite blessing during the mission to rise and confess it, nearly half of the large audience stood up. Among these there were rows of boys and young lads.

The number of children who professed conversion was quite a feature of the work, and to see them night after night coming early so as to secure the front benches, and sitting wrapt and still, drinking in the words of life, was an inspiration to all. The Major gave two, and Dr. Moxey four, illustrated addresses to the little ones; and, as the Major intimated that everyone would be considered young up to a hundred years of age, there were interested listeners of all ages.

Since Mildmay, the evangelists have been holding a mission in the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, S.W., close to Victoria Station. The week-day meetings are at 5 and 8 p.m., and the Sunday meetings at 3.30 and 7 p.m. The mission closes on Sabbath, the 14th, and the prayers of our readers, and their attendance at the meetings where possible, are earnestly requested. Lord Radstock, Mr. W. H. Seagram, and other friends have been assisting in the work. From the very first, souls have been brought to Jesus, and some striking conversions have been reported. An artist who was present at one of the meetings with his friend, a military man, told of his marvellous conversion a few years before. A pure worldling, going from one place of entertainment to another, in order to kill time, he included a church bazaar in his round. There he joined in a lottery, and, putting his hand into a "lucky-bag," drew forth a book, entitled, "Life, Warfare, and Victory," by Major Whittle. The perusal of it was blessed by God to the salvation of his soul. He then handed it to his friend who, like himself, had spent nearly sixty years in the service of Satan, and it was also blessed to him. At one of the after-meetings, the latter gave testimony in fervent words of gratitude to God's servant, and a devout expression of thanksgiving to God for a love that had met and redeemed such a sinner as he had been.

On the 15th inst. Major Whittle and Dr. and Mrs. Moxey start (D.V.) for Ireland, where a Conference at Fenaghy, near Ballymena, on the grounds of Mr. William Young, J.P., is to be held. Christian life, especially in connection with soul-winning, and a series of evangelistic services in large tents, are announced. Extensive preparations have been made, and it is hoped that thousands will attend the gatherings, which continue for three days. Revs. H. M. Williamson and H. Montgomery, of Belfast, are actively co-operating with Mr. Young, and a large list of probable speakers has been issued, including Rev. John McNeill, Dr. G. F. Pentecost, Lord Radstock, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, Mr. W. R. Lane, and others. We commend this great camp meeting to the prayers of God's people.

ANTI-INFIDEL TRACT ENTERPRISE.—We have made up another 200 parcels of our anti-Infidel literature, and these will be sent free to tract distributors on receipt of twelve stamps to defray cost of carriage, packing, &c. Each parcel is of the value of from ten to fifteen shillings. Working men should apply for these for distribution among their sceptical mates.

AN AGGRESSIVE CHURCH.

THE second anniversary of the ministry of Rev. W. Knight Chaplin, at the Poplar and Bromley Tabernacle, on July 1, was the occasion of a visit to East London by the president of the Baptist Union, Rev. J. T. Wigner, and the vice-president of the London Baptist Association, Rev. John T. Briscoe.

This church of vigorous Baptists has been so much blessed in its aggressive efforts that the Tabernacle is crowded every Sabbath with eager listeners to the Gospel; and during the two years of Mr. Chaplin's ministry 251 new members have been added to the church. Agencies for "reaching the masses" by "going to them" have multiplied. Streets, alleys, hospitals, docks, and public-houses have been visited again and again; and uncompromising resistance to every form of evil has been very graciously owned by signs of Divine approval. Many conversions have been recorded. The anniversary meeting was presided over by Mr. G. H. Atkinson, of Melbourne, and marked an epoch in the eventful history of a live church.

AN AMERICAN MACEDONIA.

SINCE my arrival in Chili, I have visited the ports and some inland cities, for 1200 miles along the coast. I have been struck with the fact that while England has ten times more commercial interest in Chili than the United States, there is ten times more American interest in the mission work here than English. This should not be. The Taylor Mission of the American Methodist Church has five boarding and day schools, and three Spanish and English preaching stations. There is a Seamen's Mission in Valparaiso Harbour, the Valparaiso Bible Society, and the Chili Mission of the American Presbyterian Church, with five preaching stations. The South American Missionary Society of England has the Tierra del Fuego Mission, and one missionary at Lota. So far, while progress has been made, yet the needs are so great that attention is drawn most to the latter.

Here is a Macedonia that needs help; who will come? Until fully equipped by a perfect familiarity with the language, the writer is supporting himself by employ at railway work, when he will take the field. The trouble with most mission work is that the missionaries have not the Tentmaker's spirit, but are like the man who was "a Christian by profession and a Methodist by marriage." An offer was made to send a missionary, or rather a minister, here, if £800 per annum could be guaranteed and a church built. Such velvet-covered, flower-trimmed crosses, will not attract or save souls. Such people as these want to see some degree of similarity with that church which in thirty years from the resurrection morn had preached the Gospel in all the then known world.

There are few more Godless places in the world than this, and there is no Catholic country where the same amount of toleration is to be found; it is the door to Spanish South America. If some help, live earnest Christians, will come, this people can be won to Christ. Here are a people who, if approached with the only power that can hope for success, will gladly hear the Gospel. All over the country, when the few labourers can get time and means, the largest available halls are filled with eager native listeners, it is the foreign element who are callous and blasphemous.

Iquique, Chili.

LEIPZIG.—The widow of a professor of medicine named Wagner has given 50,000 marks (£2500) to establish a Deaconesses' Home in this city.

OBITUARY.

CANON HARVEY.

THIS aged minister of Christ entered into rest a few days ago. His last charge was Hornsey, of which he was rector for the long period of fifty-two years. Forming only a very humble estimate of the work he was privileged to accomplish, he discharged his duties diligently as unto the Lord. As Canon of Gloucester, he was able, during recent years, to do occasional duty for other clergymen, and such duty always afforded him genuine delight.

MR. W. F. TURNEY, FULHAM.

Though only thirty-five years of age at the time of his death a few days ago, this Christian worker will be sadly missed at Fulham. His life had been full of voluntary labour in the cause of Christ, and his memory is fragrant of loving sympathy and earnestness. He was superintendent of the Dawes-road Baptist Sunday-school, and was not only highly esteemed among his own people, but well known throughout the district as an active friend of every philanthropic work and movement.

REV. SAMUEL SILVEY, STANLEY POOL.

This devoted young missionary recently expired while returning to England on account of ill-health. Before joining the Congo Mission, he spent some time at the Cameroons. His last letter, dated March 25, was devoted to an account of his three personal Congo boys. who had all given their hearts to Jesus. Two of these boys were on board ship with him at the time of his death, and had to return to the Congo. A missionary sister of the deceased is still labouring at Bolobo, on the Upper Congo.

NIGHT SHELTERS FOR WOMEN.

SIR,—In your issue of November 16 last, you inserted an appeal I made concerning "Shelters for Women." I am thankful now to say that this appeal has been by no means made in vain. My desire was that the very outcasts of society, who for want of money for a bed, walk about the streets all night, should be cared for and provided with a rough shelter, and now I am happy to say that my desire is about to be accomplished—and this in such a manner as will cause the greatest amount of relief to be given at the smallest outlay of money.

Having consulted with my friends of the St. Giles' Christian Mission, I discovered that they themselves had some idea of doing a similar work. It was soon agreed that we should unite in carrying out this work of seeking to reclaim outcast women.

A large old house in Drury-lane has been taken, and fitted up in a plain manner for the accommodation of about sixty women. In the Seven Dials another house has been taken and fitted up for about thirty women, who will be selected from time to time from Drury-lane. And a third house has been taken in Leighton-road, Kentish Town, as a "Home" for those from the other houses who have given sufficient proof that they are desirous of leading a new and better life. These will be trained as laundry-maids, servants, &c.

I now propose therefore to transfer all money that has most kindly been sent to the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN for "Night Shelters for Women" to the treasurer of the "St. Giles' Christian Mission." Those of us who are especially interested in this new and much-needed branch of work are confident that, in thus acting, we shall have met the views of all kind donors.

Need I add that the chief end we have in view is not merely the outward reclamation of the inmates, but that they may be brought to a saving knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. These Homes were opened on June 25. As may be supposed, a considerable sum will be required annually for expenses. Donations for these Night Shelters for Women will be thankfully received and acknowledged by Mr. George Hatton, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C. PHILIP GOUGH.

33, Cambridge-street, London, W.

SANTIAGO, CAPE VERDE ISLANDS.—Mr. F. T. Lane, writing to Echoes of Service, on his way to Central Africa, seeks to bring under the prayerful notice of Christians this inviting spot. There are about 3000 inhabitants, mostly coloured, very clean, and exceptionally nice, without a missionary or anything being done for them spiritually. What an opening for a worker!

Personalia.

The late Mr. A. Balfour.—The citizens of Liverpool are erecting a handsome bronze statue to the memory of the late Mr. Alexander Balfour.

Mr. Charles Inglis is purposing to devote the months of September, October, and November to work in the Western States of Canada and America. He hopes to visit some of these places where an evangelist seldom goes.

Rev. W. F. Adeney, Congregational minister, Acton, has been appointed Professor of New Testament Exegesis and Church History, in New College, London. Mr. Adeney has already done much literary work of a high quality, especially in the department of Church History.

Mr. George Gillingham, of Plaxtol, Kent, a worker of many years' standing, is open to receive invitations to preach the Gospel or give addresses to Christian people. He was associated with the Leigh Mission from 1873 until shortly after the decease of the late Mr. Samuel Morley.

Mr. J. W. Wilson, town missionary of Redruth, sails on August 17, for Australia, the land of his birth. Our readers will, we are sure, follow him with prayer that the God who has blessed his efforts to hundreds of souls in England will use him still more mightily at the Antipodes.

Mrs. Fawcett continues her exertions on behalf of young children who are employed in theatres. In a further letter to the newspapers she begs the public not to allow their judgment on the subject of the employment of little children to be formed by those who profit by employing them.

Mr. E. T. Smith, the well-known reciter of the late Mr. Gough's orations, has had a very busy winter in different parts of the country. His remarkable gifts in this direction are everywhere appreciated, and his labours are a distinct force in the formation of temperance sentiment and practice.

The Hon. Gertrude Kinnaird recently visited Southampton, and gave some forcible addresses to the navvies engaged at work on the new dock. With their wives and families they thronged around her. During the men's dinner hour Miss Kinnaird visited them at their extension works, and gave addresses which were most attentively listened to.

Mrs. Lewis, wife of Mr. W. J. Lewis, of Ryde, I.W., for many years engaged in Christian work in the East-end of London, is lying very ill. Though brought so low as to be beyond hope of recovery, she is calm and bright, for her reliance is upon the living Saviour. Many will join us in prayer that the sufferer and those about her may have grace suited to their needs.

Miss Von Finkelstein.—The Princess, a lady's newspaper published in Brisbane, has, in its issue of May 14, a portrait supplement, representing Miss Von Finkelstein grinding at the mill. She has visited Brisbane after her return from Palestine, and has excited much interest by her lectures on Oriental life. The Governor of Queensland and his suite were present at two of the lectures.

Mrs. Booth, of the Salvation Army, recently underwent a third electrical operation. At the beginning of last week she was in a very precarious state, but during the past few days there has been a slight improvement, which has been maintained and increased. The progress of the disease in some directions has been stayed a little, and although there is still great weakness and prostration owing to the operation, the outlook is more cheering than it has been for some time. With our readers we deeply sympathise with our dear sister and her husband and children in this long and painful illness.

Rev. Canon Barker, of Marylebone, and his work, are pleasantly sketched in the current number of The Quiver. The writer states that when the Canon went to the parish church of Marylebone six years ago only about thirty-five persons attended the Sunday evening services; now there is an average attendance of 2000. The Canon, as everybody knows, is an ardent teetotaller, and, of course, temperance effort is vigorously carried on in the parish. He is at present contemplating an extension of his work by the addition of a hall, with mission-rooms, club-rooms, and class-rooms or technical instruction.

SHIPWRECKED MARINERS.

THE fiftieth or jubilee annual meeting of the Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Society, the central office of which is at Sailors' Home Chambers, Dock-street, London, E., took place on Saturday, at the Hôtel Métropole, Whitehall. Lord George Hamilton, M.P., the First Lord of the Admiralty, presided. The annual report stated that the Society had completed its jubilee year. Looking back, the committee of management claimed on the Society's behalf that it had year by year, with a worthily sustained success, fulfilled its charitable mission. For the year 1888, to which the report primarily referred, it quoted some interesting Board of Trade statistics of wreckage and loss of life, fortunately exhibiting a not inconsiderable diminution upon the average figures for more recent previous years, chiefly due, apparently, to the exceptionally favourable character of the weather throughout the year. The total wrecks of vessels reported in 1888 numbered 817, with the loss of 1,647 lives. In 1888 there were 11,004 persons charitably succoured at the Society's hands, through its central office in London, or immediately on the spot, by its upwards of 1000 local honorary agencies. Rewards for saving life from shipwreck at sea were granted in six cases. The report concluded with expression of the ardent hope that the Society might still be enabled in the future unceasingly to labour in pursuance of its noble cause.

Among the speakers at the meeting were Admiral Prevost (chairman of committee), Sir G. Baden-Powell, M.P., Admirals Sir E. Inglefield, Sir G. Willes, Hon. F. Egerton, and Lindesay Brine, with Mr. Robert Williams (treasurer), and General Julian Hall.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on an open-air Gospel mission in the villages of Shrewton, Telshed, Chitterne, Imber, and West Lavington, Wilts., commencing July 13.——For blessing on eight days' special services, commenced on Sunday last, at Hensbridge, Somersetshire.

CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW.—At the monthly muster of the "Christian Lifeboat Crew" in the Sailors' Welcome Home last week, Miss Child spoke of the different branches of the work, and in the prayers afterwards they were remembered. Miss Sargent, from the Sailors' Rest at Smyrna, said she had often heard of "the fo'c's'le" from the sailors there, and now that she had seen it she thanked God for it. Miss Cox, from Italy, told what great persecutions Italians have to endure when they give up the Romish faith. Two or three testimonies followed from sailors.

MR. F. S. ARNOT'S MISSION.—Communications in Echoes of Service, for July, state that Mr. F. S. Arnot and his party reached Benguella on May 9, in the best of health. Efforts to secure carriers proving unavailing, Mr. Arnot decided to secure a supply of 12 mules from the Cape Verde islands. They will be able to make a trip between the coast and Bihé every three months; beyond Bihé carriers are procurable. Mr. Arnot says he is sure the King Msidi will come a long way to assist the missionaries with men. It is believed that the second party, with Mr. and Mrs. Morris, will find Mr. Arnot still at Benguella on their arrival. "The young men," says Mr. Arnot, "promise to get along famously, and are in splendid health."

EGYPTIAN DISCOVERIES.—On Friday last, at a meeting of members of the Victoria Institute, M. Naville, the celebrated Egyptologist, gave an account of his most recent investigations in the land of the Pharaohs. After discovering Bubastis, M. Naville unearthed numerous inscriptions, dating back to the Fourth Dynasty, among others some referring to Cheops, showing that he reigned over all Egypt; some to the invasion of the Shepherds, or Hyksos, who, from some of their monuments found, were clearly highly cultivated, and came from Mesopotamia. Among their statues discovered were two of Apepi, the Pharaoh of Joseph, also inscriptions in regard to the Pharaoh of the Exodus. All throw welcome light upon the activity of a time which stands out prominently in Scripture history.

Old Testament Commentaries.

A NEW COMMENTARY ON GENESIS. By Franz Delitzsch, D.D. Vol. 2. T. & T. Clark. This completes another important addition to the well-known "Foreign Theological Library." Translated by Sophia Taylor, it embodies the most recent conclusions of the celebrated Leipzig Professor. It matters not to what school of thought one may belong, this work is indispensable to a thorough study of the Book of Genesis. In regard to critical questions, Dr. Delitzsch, as is well known, occupies independent ground; he holds to the documentary theory, but follows no one in stating or illustrating it. The utter confusion which exists among those who regard the Pentateuch as a more or less ill-edited body of documents by various authors, amounts, in our judgment, to a demonstration of the unreliable character of the analytical method which some scholars vaunt so much. We are glad to say that, generally speaking, Delitzsch's interpretation is quite unaffected by speculative questions. For its many intrinsic excellences, this work deserves warm commendation.

THE PROPHECIES OF ISAIAH. Expounded by Dr. C. Von Orelli. Translated by Rev. J. S. Banks. This volume of T. & T. Clark's "Foreign Theological Library" will be specially welcome to students who have come to appreciate the author's other valuable works on prophecy and the prophetical books of the Old Testament. A firm believer in the supernatural revelation, Orelli is an accomplished critic of the conservative school, like Delitzsch. The plan of this commentary embraces a division of the book into sections without regard to the chapters, a careful translation, an exposition at once compact and lucid, and a large body of illustrative information and notes. The author regards chapters xl. to lxvi. as constituting a second book, but critical questions which some writers have brought so much into prominence are by him made subservient to his real purpose of thoroughly opening up the book to thoughtful readers. Characterised by consummate ability throughout, this work will undoubtedly take high rank among expositions of the "Evangelical Prophet."

MISCELLANEOUS.

BENJAMIN RICE: FIFTY YEARS IN THE MASTER'S SERVICE. By Edward P. Rice. 2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. A faithful and filial tribute to a life well and honestly spent in the Indian mission field.

THE GREAT VALUE AND SUCCESS OF FOREIGN MISSIONS. Compiled by Rev. J. Liggins. 3s. Nisbet & Co. This is an English edition of a work published in America and reviewed by us some time ago. It contains a weighty and valuable body of testimony from persons of authority in varied walks of life as to the fruits, direct and indirect, of foreign missions. The compiler has shown great assiduity in the collection of these testimonies. Defective editing in the matter of dates and grammatical construction, which we referred to in our previous notice, is still conspicuous, and detracts from the worth of the volume as a work of reference.

THE WRITINGS OF THE APOSTLE JOHN, with notes critical and expository. By the late John Tindall Harris. Vol. 1—The Gospels and Epistles. Hodder & Stoughton. Though evidently the work of a devout and thoughtful man, the teaching of this commentary is in several important particulars such as we believe to be unscriptural. Holding that our Lord inaugurated the "dispensation of the Parousia" at the time of the destruction of Jerusalem, the author regards the Lord's Supper as an obsolete ordinance. He maintains that the reason why John does not describe the last supper is that the true communion had been realised when he wrote his Gospel, the glorious "coming" having begun at the Lord's resurrection, and been outwardly signalised when the old dispensation came to an end at the destruction of Jerusalem. We cannot regard this as a satisfactory position; in our belief it is founded on misapprehension, and supported by misinterpretation. No theology can be complete which ignores or explains away those Scriptures which find such beautiful expression in the Lord's gracious words, which John himself has left on record: "I will come again, and receive you unto Myself."

ROSEMARY, the Summer Number of The Girl's Own Paper, has a very attractive bill of fare, one of the papers being an interesting sketch entitled, "How three working girls saw the Rhine." (6d. R. T. S.)

INSTRUCTIONS TO YOUNG CONVERTS. By Dougan Clark, M.D. S. W. Partridge & Co. The author gives sympathetic advice to a class who cannot always command it. The instructions are arranged in seven chapters, exhorting the reader to be definite, diligent, faithful, patient, holy, filled, and established. There is a want of clearness on some points in the chapter on Holiness, but those who imbibe the spirit of the teaching will have no difficulty with the terms in which it is expressed. We shall be glad to hear that this little work, so frank in manner and helpful in matter, has found its way into the hands of many young converts.

THE MORE EXCELLENT WAY. By Rev. Thornley Smith. T. Woolmer. This is a practical exposition of what the author calls Paul's "Psalm of Love," in 1 Cor. xiii. He writes to do good, and the book is calculated to achieve its purpose. As an exposition it is faithful and sound, and abounds in practical applications of love to subjects of everyday interest. The author has read extensively, and makes the best use of the results of his reading. His book is thoughtful and instructive, written in a style, not sparkling or brilliant, but quiet and interesting, such as his theme requires. We cordially commend the book as one by which which every devout reader is sure to profit.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Leonard Weaver has concluded a sixteen days' mission at Clapton Hall, London. Many have professed faith in Christ, and Christians have been stirred up.

Messrs. Hyde and Stevenson continue their meetings at Arklow. In every town they visited they have been warmly supported. As they purpose remaining in Ireland during the coming winter, prayer is asked that an entrance may be given them to other towns.

Messrs. Fullerton & Smith have held a three night's mission in Falcon-square Chapel in connection with the good work which Mrs. Fisher has long carried on among young workwomen in the City. The attendance was good, and the word was with power. Several young people chose the good part, and the workers were greatly cheered by seeing them decide for Christ. Mrs. Fisher asks for the prayers of Christian people that the good impression that has been made may yet bear fruit to the glory of God.

Major J. H. Cole has had much encouragement in his recent Gospel labours at Helena, Arkansas. A local chronicler says that the population have never been so greatly stirred before by religious meetings. Judges, business men, planters, and professional men, and labourers have been reached through the labours of the revivalist Men of the highest social standing—some who were addicted to excessive whisky drinking and morphine eating—stood up at the meetings, gave their experiences, and promised reformation. Major Cole left Helena for Ocean Grove, N.J., where he goes to join his invalid wife, otherwise he would have remained in Arkansas during the summer.

FATHER CHINIQUY'S EIGHTIETH BIRTHDAY.—A movement is on foot, not only for celebrating this event, on July 30, at St. Anne, Illinois, but also to commemorate it by raising a testimonial fund to enable Father Chiniquy to continue his important work in America. Rev. P. Boudreau, of St. Anne, president of the movement, in a circular recently issued, refers to Father Chiniquy's lifelong labours in the cause of freedom, temperance, and religion, and says that his eye is still undimmed, and his powers of mind and body remain unimpaired.

The Army Scripture Readers' Society has, for the last thirty-five years, employed between seventy and eighty readers, who, by their faithful services, have endeared themselves to the men among whom they work. To raise an income of about £10,000 has always been a hard struggle, and, through the bad times and the death of many of our early friends, a debt has gradually been contracted of nearly £1500, which threatens to cripple our operations and oblige us to remove readers from important garrisons.

Letters to the Editor.

VIVISECTION AND CRUELTY.

DEAR SIR,—It is not often that one is privileged to read a "defence of vivisection" from the pen of a Christian doctor; and, though I respectfully differ from Dr. Carless on this question, it is nevertheless a real pleasure to have as one's opponent such a man.

It seems to me, in the first place, that while the Bible sanctions, as a concession to human infirmity, the sacrifice of animals for food, &c., it gives us no warrant at all for torturing sentient creatures to death; indeed, I believe the reverse of this is affirmed in the doctrines of Scriptures. Compare, for instance, the last verse of Jonah, and the remarkable words there given as having been uttered by God Himself. Confer, too, James ii. 13, and other passages. We may well ask ourselves, "What would our Lord have done" in this case? For my own part I cannot think of Him in the character of a vivisector; yet if there be anyone who thinks that Christ would really approve of the mutilating of his dumb creatures, I have nothing more to say, naturally.

Secondly, Dr. Carless affirms, or seems to believe, that little or no pain was inflected on the 1200 animals recorded as having been experimented on in Professor Erichsen's last report. I would ask you to refer to The British Medical Journal of May 25 last, where Dr. Stockman reports a long series of experiments with cocamine; here he himself declares that a great deal of pain was inflicted on his victims. He says that in cats symptoms of "extreme weakness" were produced, "vomiting," "violent diantrea," "great pain," "intense irritation," &c.

Or, again, turn to the Royal Society's last report, and you can read a heartrending account there of excruciating experiments performed on the kidneys of dogs, by Rose-Bradford, under the partial administration of that "hellish" drug curare, which, paralysing all movement, increases the subject's agony. These are a few of the more recent English experiments, not yet reported as having been performed, but of which we shall be told in the next "return" that they were unattended by pain.

As to the assertion that "triumphs are distinctly due to vivisection," in the case of abdominal surgery, we all know how Professor Lawson Tait, one of the greatest living surgeons, emphatically denies this, stating that he knows well how that instead of vivisection aiding the surgeon, it has very often led him astray. Are we not, moreover, to take into account the fact that great men like the late Sir William Fergusson and Sir Charles Bell opposed the practice in the interests of true science?

But I would as soon think of supporting vivisection because of its utility as I should of excusing the theft of £1000 on the ground of possible advantages accruing therefrom.—Yours truly,

E. H. BLAKENEY.

DEAR SIR,—I yield to no man in my admiration for the humane principles which are actuating the leaders of my profession in their efforts to obtain proper provision for scientific research. No one will dispute the question that my co-workers are "to the front" in all sustained efforts for the alleviation of human suffering. But there are "black sheep in every fold," and I shall always support measures for keeping in proper check those who in the past have been guilty of wanton cruelty by repeating experiments ad infinitum.

On the question of cruelty to dumb animals that cannot speak for themselves, there surely should be no room for difference of opinion.

With the impulsive ardour of a young enthusiast I have done my share of vivisection. Many a dog and many a rabbit have I tortured to death with the hope of gaining applause, and a gold medal for my graduating thesis. This was long before the Cruelty to Animals Act was put in force.

Mr. Carless, in defence of vivisection, tells us that he has "with a truly loving heart, in the course of busy surgical practice, constantly stood by the bedside, watching the body writhing in agony...and knowing that human resource is useless." I don't doubt this for a moment. It is our daily experience. But what has become of "the resources of civilisation" anent vivisection for the relief of such suffering? Is not such "knowledge" gained far better at the bedside than on the operating table, by the careful administration of sedative drugs, which need not seriously hurt either man or beast?

I will not dispute the question that we have made very considerable advances in scientific research by carefully planned experimentations, but, as you say, many of these triumphs "certainly require proof."

As a surgeon, I very much object to the observation that "operative surgery" is "a type of human vivisection." Such a strange comparison is surely untenable, when we remember that the grand purpose of all operative surgery is for the immediate relief of suffering, and is always done at the request of the sufferer or his guardian, for the prolongation of life and for the removal of disease.

Let us never forget that God's covenant with Adam for "dominion" was made during Adam's innocence in the Garden. With "the Fall" there came the destruction of all flesh—the representative man and the representative animal alone being spared. With the "replenished earth" after the Flood, God established an "everlasting covenant with every living creature of all flesh that is upon the earth" (Gen ix. 16). God delivered them unto the hand of Noah for safety and protection, certainly not for destruction, except as "meat" and for "the daily sacrifice." What is just now happening to the poor little persecuted rabbit found indigenous in almost every part of the earth except our Australian colonies and other isolated countries? Man, being wiser than God, resolves to make it indigenous there, and, oh, with what terrible destruction to our pastures!

Of course this cannot be tolerated. Dividends upon pastoral property must be obtained at all cost. The rabbits must be exterminated, and "chicken cholera," a most fatal disease, is to be introduced by vivisection. A plague to stop a plague! How can it be? Alas, for the folly of man when he seeks to do without God. "Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?"

Let us beware lest in our attempt to destroy the rabbit by experiment and by extermination, "We be found to fight against God." For it is written, "I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent" (1 Cor. i. 19). For obvious reasons I withhold my name, but subscribe my permanent address, so that all may find me out if they will.—I am, &c.,

SPIRITUALISM.

DEAR SIR,—That spiritualism is a dread reality no one who, with the Bible in his hand, has intelligently investigated the subject can doubt. Some readers will be very much surprised if, Concordance in hand, they will search out all the passages relating to having dealings with familiar spirits, witches, wizards, peepings, mutterings, the living seeking to the dead, &c., with which the Bible abounds, to find how frequent they are, and how terrible are the denunciations against those having dealings with them. It was for this sin, and all its consequent abominations, that the very land of Canaan is said to have spued out its inhabitants.

I agree with every word of Dr. Bartlett's article on "Demoniacal Possession," in your issue of June 14, with the exception of his first question in its conclusion: "How should it be that this condition of things should have been so common then, but wholly wanting now?" Are they wholly wanting now? is a conclusion implied to which I altogether demur. Not in their then demonstrative form and public manifestation, I allow, but none the less dangerous to those brought under the sway of demoniacal possession by familiar spirits. That this is one of the powers which will again influence the world I no more doubt than I doubt the words of Christ Himself, who warns us: "There shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect" (Matt. xxiv. 24). To the same end Paul writes: "The Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy" (1 Tim. iv. 1, 2), plainly intimating that the manifestations of the latter days may not be in the grosser forms of physical possession, but in the more subtle forms of spiritual possession.

The discrediting of spiritualism, as a new revelation, has been, I firmly believe, brought about, under God, by the faithful warning of those who discerned its devilish origin under the new form of table-turning, spirit-rappings, &c., by which many were deceived into ascribing the phenomena to some occult science dawning upon the world. To all I would utter the word of warning concerning it that came to myself when I had thoroughly examined the phenomena: "Touch not, taste not, handle not."—Yours, &c., HOMO.

MALOGA ABORIGINAL MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—We would like to explain a matter in reference to the Aboriginal population of Australia. From recent inquiries we found it roughly estimated at 200,000, that is for the whole island. We were sorry to find our friend and brother missionary, Rev. J. B. Gribble, of Warangesda, had, by mistake, stated this to be the number of Aborigines in New South Wales, and was critically questioned by Rev. Dr. Steel, of Sydney, in a late number of THE CHRISTIAN. Both are men of noble missionary spirit, and long to see the poor blacks brought to the knowledge of Christ.

During our brief stay in England, we wish to bring under the notice of the Christian churches the claims of this unfortunate race. Fifteen years' experience among them has taught us that they are our brothers and sisters, and may by faith in Jesus be accepted in Him. We are trusting in God for wisdom, and all needed grace, for the great work to which we have been called.

As we purpose on our return to carry the Gospel to the native tribes of Queensland, where many thousands are sadly neglected, and to gather in the young children whose lives are sad, we crave an interest in the prayers and sympathies of the Lord's people in this land of Gospel light and privilege.

We, with our two Aborigines, Paddy and Jenny Swift, would be glad to tell our story of "Life among the blacks of Australia" at any meeting, or to private friends.

With reference to the article headed "Maloga Aboriginal Mission," in a recent issue, the statement that 150 Aborigines are now in the Maloga Mission was a mistake. As the outcome of our work at Maloga, two other missions have been started in New South Wales, and the Association carrying them on have also charge of the Aborigines we gathered in to our Mission, who are now established on an area of land granted by the Government for their use, and which is adjoining Maloga.

Our object now is to lead out some of the Aborigines who are Christians, and long to be missionaries to their own people, and start missions in Queensland or any of the colonies on the principle of Maloga Mission, and to help on the Missions now in existence by building orphanages on them, or in any other way the Lord may direct.—Yours in the Master's service,

DANIEL and JANET MATTHEWS.

Care of Mr. J. T. Matthews,

VACATION WORK.—A very timely and suggestive article on this subject, by Rev. H. C. G. Moule, of Cambridge, appears in the July Church and People, the organ of the Church Pastoral Aid Society, Temple-chambers, Falcon-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

COSTERMONGERS' COTTAGE MISSION.—The seventeenth annual report of the work carried on at Vinegar-grounds, Old-street, City-road, E.C., tells of much patient endeavour among a very needy class. The agencies are numerous, and specially interesting so far as they affect the women and children. Services among the latter are marked with surprising attention and orderliness, while the men include a goodly number who are very grateful for the solicitude of the mission workers, and are gaining reputation for steadiness of character. Mr. Walter Penrose is the superintendent of the work.

KASHMIR MISSION HOSPITAL.—This institution, connected with the Church Missionary Society, is certainly preparing the way for the Gospel in and around Srinagar. It aims at dispelling from the minds of the people the prejudice which exists against Europeans and those whom they consider "infidels." So far the work has been eminently successful. Over a wide area the Gospel has been proclaimed, and the field is ready for extended operations. Vernacular schools are sadly required in the villages to combat the dense ignorance which prevails. The report for last year says: "In no previous year has so much been done, and yet we have not preached to one twentieth of the population, and have not visited a fiftieth of the villages. If this be the case in Kashmir, how about Central Asia as a whole!"

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes.

SUNDAY, JULY 14.—Deuteronomy XXVI.

THIS is the concluding chapter of the charge of the great Lawgiver.

Ver. 1—4.—Besides the sheaf of first-fruits offered for the whole land on the day after the Passover (Lev. xxiii. 10), each man was to take the first of all the fruit of his patrimony. Whatever ripened first, and therefore seemed most attractive to the husbandman, was to be put carefully aside for presentation to God. How well would it be, if we used our first flowers, or fruits, or earnings, for the service of God, by alleviating the sorrow and need of others around.

Ver. 5—10.—There is much beauty in this confession, beginning with the lowly origin of Israel (Hos. xii. 12). There is special reference to the hardships suffered at the hand of Laban (Gen. xxxi. 29). There is also a recapitulation of the marvellous exodus, and a thankful acknowledgement of God's goodness in settling them in Canaan. How good is it to acknowledge that all we have is the gift of God's love to us (1 Chron. xxix. 14). But the mere giving is not enough, unless there be the reverent, devout action of the soul going with its gifts; giving itself. "Thou shalt worship."

Ver. 12—15.—We have already considered the special tithe made at the end of three years (xiv. 28, 29). When this was made each Israelite was bound in these formal words to clear himself of all complicity with evil—no part used in connection with death, or false gods. And they were not only to plead for blessing on themselves, but on their land and people (15). We must be catholic in prayer (Ps. lxvii. 6).

Ver. 16—19.—What a covenant is this; and the new covenant, ratified by the blood of Jesus, is even better, because He is its surety. All of each of us is for God, and all of God is for each of us. Before all worlds, God and we are bound together in an eternal union. And the outcome of it is holiness. God will be satisfied with nothing less (Eph. i. 4). And this will give us true dignity and pre-eminence.

MONDAY, JULY 15.—Deuteronomy XXVII.

Ver. 1—10.—It is probable that only the words of the Ten Commandments were to be inscribed on these sacred cromlechs. But there, in the midst of the land, they stood, as a silent witness for God's truth and national righteousness. There was a close connection between the overflowing plenty around and those majestic stones; when the latter were disregarded, then the former would become bare and sere (1 Kings xvii.). The prohibition of ver. 5 was directed against the sculpture of any kind of image which might lead to idolatry. Not only did the inscription speak for God, but the altar in front, demanding whole-hearted obedience and consecration. Well might Moses and the priests insist on obedience (9). For sin is always aggravated by a clear knowledge of what God requires. These instructions were faithfully carried out (Josh. viii. 33).

Ver. 11—26.—In Ephraim's territory were two mountains, close together, with a narrow valley between; the one called Gerizim, the other Ebal. The people stood, six tribes on Ebal and six on Gerizim, answering with their "Amens," as the Levites pronounced the curses due to sin, and the blessings to righteousness. Only the curses are mentioned here. Is the reason—that those who are under the law are under the curse; that sinners can never win blessing by their obedience; that we must wait for Christ to come and sit on the Mount of Beatitudes, pronouncing his blessings? (Matt. v. 1—12). It is well for us to test ourselves by these items. We may be yielding to more evil than we realise, and it is well solemnly to ask ourselves whether we are incurring God's displeasure by walking carelessly in any of these respects. We may not be exposed to God's curse, which expended itself on our Substitute (Gal. iii. 13), but we may be losing our peace and power.

TUESDAY, JULY 16.—Deuteronomy XXVIII.

Ver. 1—14.—These verses enumerate the blessings of obedience which will overtake us still, if we keep the commandments of Christ. Obedience will not save us, or wipe out the penalty of past sin; but it will enable us to appropriate without stint or hindrance all those blessings which are ours in Christ, awaiting our appropriation. We cannot enjoy our true position or privileges in Jesus, so long as we are consciously offending against the will of God. But when we are living up to our light, we can lay claim to the unsearchable riches of which we are heirs (2 Peter i. 3; Eph. i. 3.) These words are an inventory of blessings which are ours in Christ, including the bountiful supply of every want (3, &c.); victory (7); establishment (9); success in soul-winning (11); and all God's good treasure (Eph. iii. 8.)

Ver. 15—44.—Here are the curses incurred by disobedience—many, grievous, terrible. They would pursue the sinner wherever he went, and in whatever he undertook. How marvellously is all the machinery of nature in arms against the man who is at enmity with God. "The stars in their courses fight against him."

Ver. 45—68.—In these remarkable words, we have a description of the national captivities which were to befall the Hebrew people, first at the hands of Assyria and Babylon, but more especially of Rome. Here are the Roman eagles (49); the horrors of the siege of Titus (53); the present dispersion of the Jews, which has lasted for eighteen centuries (64); the Jew-hate which has again and again broken out (65). All has befallen, and here is a mighty proof of the truth of Scripture. But there is a ray of hope flung on the edge of this great thunder-cloud by the words of the Apostle (Rom. xi. 25, 26). And for this the scattered Jewish remnant is waiting, scattered in every land, at home in none; mingling with every people, but distinct.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 17.—Deuteronomy XXIX.

Ver. 1—9.—Strong inducements are here presented to urge their obedience. The great Lawgiver, however, bitterly laments that they were deficient in those spiritual sensibilities which are so necessary to the right appreciation of God's dealings. God would no doubt have imparted these spiritual gifts, if He had seen any desire on their part for them, or any will to receive and use them. Keep therefore, and do, that ye may prosper (Ps. i. 3).

Ver. 10—13.—Again the covenant is renewed: that they, on their side, should obey, and that God would be their God in an especial sense. It would be well to study the opening chapters of Hosea, to show how much was involved in the respective words: my Lord or Husband, and my people.

Ver. 14—21.—The case is here supposed of a man who stood amid the crowd as the words of the covenant were recited, and who secretly resolved that he would continue to do as he chose, and to follow the imagination and caprice of his own nature; and the Heart-searcher said that such a man would be singled out of the midst of the nation to suffer in his sole person these curses. We are here reminded of that solemn scene when Achan was brought to view and punishment amid Israel's thousands (Josh. vii. 14, &c.).

Ver. 22—28.—What utter desolation sin entails, not on men only, but on all that they touch, so that nature herself suffers (Rom. viii. 20). Is not the state of Palestine to-day a standing sign of God's dealings with disobedience. "Because they have forsaken". God never forsakes till we forsake.

Ver. 29.—All the reasons of God's dealings are not disclosed to us; but enough is revealed to indicate the great principles of his procedure. Let us not be wise above what is revealed, but let us reverently study the written Word, asking for the illumination of the Holy Spirit, to open up the deep things of God (1 Cor. ii. 10, &c.). We must know, not to gratify curiosity, but that we may do (John vii. 17).

THURSDAY, JULY 18.—Deuteronomy XXX.

Ver. 1—10.—What infinite comfort for all backsliders there is in these words! Notwithstanding the desperate condition into which sin might bring the people, there was offered them forgiveness and restoration. Return, and God will turn; obey, and God will gather. These promises were often fulfilled in the national history under the Judges (6; Ps. cvi. 44). But they are yet to be realised on a large scale, when they look on Him whom they pierced, and mourn. And there is here predicted a marvellous change, which is to pass over the chosen people, when God shall cleanse and regenerate their inmost heart (6; Col. ii. 11). And as the result of this blessed operation of the Divine Spirit, they should become obedient (8). We are reminded of Heb. viii. 10. Is not this inner circumcision what we all want, especially before entering the land of rest? (Josh. iv.).

In these ten verses Moses, twelve times over, calls God the Lord thy God, from which we learn that no sin on the part of God's children can break the holy relationship into which He has entered with them (Rom. viii. 38).

Ver. 11—14.—The commands of God are so clear and simple that no one can plead their obscurity as a reason for disobedience. Not in a strange foreign tongue, but in words constantly in their mouth. Not wrapt up in outward rites only, to be performed by priests; but in the heart of each worshipper. This is specially true of the Gospel (Rom. x. 8). We need not fetch Christ to us; He is risen, He is here, He is by our side for evermore.

Ver. 15—20.—What marvellous eloquence is in this last appeal. Surely we must each choose! If we choose life, we choose love, and love is length of days, and a settled rest of heart in God's promised heritage. Is not Jesus Christ our Life? "He is thy life" (20; Col. iii. 4).

FRIDAY, JULY 19.—Deuteronomy XXXI.

Ver. 1—8.—Moses' life breaks into three forties: the first in Egypt, the second in the wilderness, the third as leader of the exodus. His natural force was not abated, but his career was closed by the Divine decree (xxxiv. 7). He, however, comforts them by saying that though he could not go, yet Israel would have the presence and care of God (3), with the assurance that He would precede them, destroy before them, and give their enemies into their hands. Does not God always treat his people thus? Expect it to-day. The courage of ver. 6 may be ours, because of Heb. xiii. 5. Throughout the Bible, the watchword rings out, Be strong (Hag. ii. 4; 2 Tim. ii. 1).

Ver. 9—13.—The solemn public reading of the law took place in the Jubilee year, when the people were free from their ordinary toils; and at such times the women and children must be present that the rising generation might be informed of the way of the Lord. How important is it to use well our days of leisure (Neh. viii. 1—8); and to train the children (2 Tim. iii. 15).

Ver. 14—22.—Moses and Joshua had a sad prevision of Israel's unfaithfulness. The people would forsake God, and God would hide his face from them. A song was therefore to be prepared, which should be easily remembered, and serve as a standing witness for God and against sin. (See Eph. v. 19.) How careful is God to do all that may be done to warn men of the evils of backsliding, and to leave the door open for their return.

Ver. 28—30.—There was a solemn assembly of elders and officers called to hear this sacred song, that they might teach it to others. Moses had no hope that the nation he loved so well would be turned from their evil ways. He had at least the consolation of having done his best. And herein is the comfort of the faithful but unsuccessful worker. God sends us to do his will; and it is sufficient for us to do this, earnestly and faithfully, leaving the results with Him. We must seek, not success, but to be found faithful.

SATURDAY, JULY 20.—Deuteronomy XXXII.

This sublime song has entered deeply into the texture of Scripture, and deserves to be carefully studied. It was Moses' swan-song. How eloquent had this man become under the touch of God's finger (Exod. iv. 10, 11). What exquisite imagery is employed!

Ver. 1, 2.—The opening stanza appeals to angels and men as witnesses, and describes the effect of his words, which should fall as summer showers on the parched and weary earth (Isa. lv. 10, 11; Micah v. 7; Heb. vi. 7).

Ver. 3, 4.—The glorious character of God is here published. For the first time in Scripture He is compared to a Rock (Isa. xxxii. 1, 2; Matt. xvi. 18). His work is perfect; He makes no mistakes. His character is unimpeachable (Ps. xcii. 15).

Ver. 5, 6.—What a contrast between this and the character of Israel. We should live as those who remember that they have been made, bought, established, and blessed by God.

Ver. 7—14—An enumeration of God's gracious dealings with Israel. Whenever our heart is hardening, and our steps straying, let us recapitulate the gracious attributes and dealings of God. What tender imagery in ver. 10, 11. God does sometimes seem hard in forcing us to take flights in the unwonted air, but it is only to teach us the luxury of flight, and He takes care of us, lest we fall. Compare ver. 10 with Zech. ii. 8. Does not the fair land of Canaan typify those heavenly places where believers have a right to be (Eph. ii. 6)?

Ver. 15—18.—Israel's sins may be traced to their abuse of God's mercies. Luxury and prosperity are great temptations: they chose strange gods, and forgot God.

Ver. 19—35.—Oh, terrible judgments, which have been terribly verified! Love will not spare the fire if required. Yet what pity mingles with the wrath (29).

Ver. 36—43.—God cannot cast off his people. He will turn again, and have compassion, and save them. He will repay his adversaries and be merciful to his land and people.

Oh that we might set our hearts to all these exhortations and commands, that we may taste of that abundant life, which is the gift of God, and lies in scrupulous and loving obedience!

SAMUEL THE REFORMER.—1 SAM. vii. 1—12.

GOLDEN TEXT: ISA. i. 16, 17.

ALTHOUGH God had refused to honour the superstitious confidence in the ark which was manifest in chap. iv., He yet followed the ark through all its wanderings with evidences of his power. It was still the symbol of his presence; but even his people had not yet learned that the benefit of his presence depended, not upon their possession of the ark, but upon their being right with Him.

Ver. 1—2.—Kirjath-jearim was a city of Judah, about nine miles west of Jerusalem. Probably Abinadab and his son Eleazar were Levites. The ark remained here about forty years, but the incidents of this chapter took place after twenty years had elapsed. "All the house of Israel lamented after the Lord" (2).—Their many years of cruel oppression had resulted from their getting away from Him; their deliverance depends upon their getting back to Him. It is noteworthy that while, in iv. 3, they had trusted the mere symbol, and said "it may save us"; now they lament, not after "it," but "after the Lord." It is a hopeful sign when a backslider not only feels the bitterness of wandering from God, but yearns for a return to Him (Jer. ii. 13, 19, 27). This hopeful condition was produced partly by the distress which they endured, and no doubt, also, by the faithful efforts of Samuel. Since before the taking of the ark we have heard nothing of him, but this change in the people's attitude toward God is proof that he has not been idle.

Ver. 3, 4.—Samuel's message in ver. 3 does not seem to have been delivered at any one particular time and place, but was the theme of his preaching as he moved about throughout the land. What gross idolatry these two verses reveal! Men never know how far they have wandered from God until they begin to return to Him. Getting back to Him is like getting into the light, which searches out and reveals what is evil. We did not know of the worship of Baal and Ashtaroth until the people wanted God. And now their repentance is tested. Is it mere feeling, or deep heart conviction? Do they so yearn after God as to be willing to forsake their idolatries for Him? Mere sorrow, however great, is not repentance. To "turn from idols" is needful, in order "to serve the living and true God" (1 Thess. i. 9). Baalim was the plural form of Baal, the supreme male deity of the Phœnician and Canaanite nations. Ashtaroth was plural for Ashtoreth, the corresponding female deity, and was worshipped with lascivious rites, like the Greek Venus. The worship of these had become popular, and the people gave convincing proof of the sincerity of their desire for God by their willingness to put away these idolatries.

Ver. 5, 6.—The yearning for God, which had already led so many to put away their sins and turn to Him, was to find public expression at Mizpeh. This town stood about 3½ miles north-west of Jerusalem, and commanded an extensive view of Central and Southern Palestine. Here they made public confession of sin, with fasting, as expressive of their deep grief for sin, and their resolute determination to return; and with the significant symbol of pouring water on the ground, representing (1) the outpouring of their hearts before God; (2) their own deep distress, and, probably, (3) the binding nature of the vows they were then making. The advantage of such a public confession is unspeakable. It was like loosing the cable that bound them to the old life of idolatry. It committed them to a change, and made it more difficult for them to withdraw. And while they thus confessed, Samuel prayed for them (5). The power of Samuel in intercessory prayer is referred to by God in Jer. xv. 1; and Samuel's sense of the importance of it is seen in 1 Sam. xii. 23.

Ver. 7—12.—The gathering at Mizpeh must have lasted for some days, and when the Philistines heard of it they gathered together against Israel. The contrast between ver. 7 and chap. iv. 5—9 is very great. There the Israelites were so confident, and the Philistines so fearful. Here the Israelites are fearful and appeal to Samuel for help. Their confidence now is not in the ark, but in God alone through the prayers of his servant. No exultant shout falls upon the ear of the Philistines, yet they have much more need to fear now that the Israelites are so faithfully dealing with themselves before God. "Samuel took a sucking lamb" (9).—Not only did he pray, but he presented this burnt offering to God. Lev. i. tells us that the burnt offering was a "sweet savour unto the Lord." It typified Christ offering Himself without spot to God; and also represented the surrender of the people to be God's alone. "As Samuel was offering" (10).—While the sweet savour was ascending, the Philistines drew near, and God answered by a great thunder, and discomfited his enemies. He never wants for servants to do his bidding. To make the thunder his instrument for destroying the Philistines made it more conspicuous both to them and to his own people that this was God's work. Yet the people had their work to do. God gave the victory, but they must take it, and this they did, pursuing their enemies to Beth-car. The site of this place is now unknown, but it lay not far from Ebenezer, on the road back to Philistia. Such a victory was deserving of a special memorial. Hence the stone of help, which gave to the place its name of Ebenezer. Twenty years before, this had been the place of Israel's humiliating defeat, and the taking of the ark of God. When we are right with God He turns defeat into triumph, and gives us our greatest success where we have suffered our saddest failure.

LESSONS.

(1) To wander from God leads to certain distress.—For forty years the people had experience of this, though they were so slow to learn the true cause of their trouble (Jer. ii. 13—17).

(2) Return to God is illustrated by the Israelites.—The steps were: (1) Desire for God; (2) Forsaking sin; (3) Confession of sin; (4) Public surrender to God; and (5) Confidence in the God-appointed sacrifice. When Coifi, a Druidical priest in Britain, was converted to Christianity, he gave proof of the sincerity of his conversion by leaping upon horseback and riding with lance in hand, full tilt against the sanctuary and idol before which he had formerly ministered.

(3) God certainly delivers those who surrender to Him.—The people were delivered as soon as they yielded to God. Full surrender always means full salvation.

JERUSALEM AND THE TEMPLE in the time of our Lord are admirably brought to view in Herr Tenz's models, which have been highly spoken of by many scholars and others who have examined them. Explanatory lectures have been highly appreciated by numerous audiences. Persons desiring to arrange lectures, or secure miniature models or explanatory books, may communicate with Herr Tenz, 21, John Campbell-road, Kingsland, London, N.

BRITISH TEMPERANCE LEAGUE.—The annual Conference of the British Temperance League was held last week at Scarborough. The report stated that everywhere the cry of those engaged in the trade is telling of alarm as the result of a knowledge that temperance work is going steadily forward, and a fear that serious measures of repression are close at hand. The fact that the County Councils (says the report) now obtain a revenue from licences will prove a sore temptation to many to refuse to exercise any repressive action. The Conference passed a resolution expressing its opinion that the time has come when the Churches should be directly urged to use non-alcoholic wines at the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Rev. O. Thornley, of Sheffield, pointed out that 3,000 only out of 30,000 churches use unfermented wine, and said that £25,000 is spent annually in sacramental wine, the drink-sellers thus being benefitted to that extent. It is very essential, he said, that unfermented wine should be used on two grounds—viz., that life-long total abstainers, when they join the Church, might not acquire a liking for strong drink, and that reformed drinkers may not be tempted to break the pledge.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

BERLIN.—A Home has been founded here under the auspices of the International Association of Friends of Young Women. Young women and girls, travellers or otherwise, will ever find at hand a friend willing to advise them. The address is Kochstrasse 52, and the superintendent Miss Tietz.

ICELAND.—Though by no means hospitable as to natural characteristics, this country contains a truly model population, as is made clear from the following lines taken from our French contemporary, Le Témoin de la Vérité:—"This northern island is entirely Protestant, with a population of 70,000. It has neither theatre, nor police, no prison, and not even a justice of the peace!"

TEMPERANCE IN SWITZERLAND.—The Blue Cross Temperance Society, in Canton Vaud, has 801 active members, and 949 adherents, in all 1750 abstinents. More than 200 reclaimed drunkards are still holding on who joined over a year ago. In the Canton of Neuchâtel temperance work makes similar progress. The members of the Society number 1358, showing an increase of 260 on the year.

METHODISM IN FRANCE.—The thirty-sixth Conference of the Methodist Church of France and Switzerland was held recently at Paris. The retrospect of last year's operations was full of encouragement. Rev. G. W. Olver, of London, attended as delegate from the Wesleyan Missionary Society. The need for truly aggressive work was duly recognised by the Conference, which will next year meet at Nîmes.

LAUSANNE.—The restoration of the cathedral, which has been devoted to Protestant worship since the time of the Reformation, has raised the question of the fate of the old statue of the Virgin, which stands above the doorway. The architects have shown a disposition to spare the monument, out of regard for its historical interest. This has not only caused a loud outcry against the obnoxious exhibition, but occasioned an energetic campaign against Popish practices.

VICTORIA.—A Criminal Law Amendment Act is sadly required in this Australian colony. It was recently discovered that a woman in Melbourne who advertised for a young person "to assist in housekeeping" was really bent upon ensnaring girls for infamous purposes. Mr. Henry Varley took the matter up, but it was found that there is no law on the statute book of the colony to meet such a case. Mr. Varley has since been exposing the villany, and it is hoped he will do something towards precipitating much-needed legislation.

ROME.—A monument has been erected in memory of Giordano Bruno, the well-known mathematician and pantheistic philosopher, a victim of the inquisition in the year 1600. It occupies the very spot where the heretic was burnt, and its unveiling last month afforded occasion for a popular demonstration in favour of liberty of conscience. The authorities at the Vatican have been much chagrined by the proceedings. A Continental contemporary sums up the situation thus: "The Papacy repudiates nothing of its past, but in its desolation sighs that persecution is no longer within its power."

ADMIRAL DE COLIGNY.—The long-projected monument in memory of this distinguished martyr of St. Bartholomew's Day will be unveiled at the close of the present month in Paris. The total cost will reach about 137,000 francs, one-fifth of which has been received by way of State convention. An open Bible at the base of the monument displays the Scripture passages: "The righteous shall be had in everlasting remembrance." "He endured, as seeing Him who is invisible." An extract is also given from the Admiral's will, expressing a readiness to forget any injuries or outrages merely affecting himself, provided his Huguenot brethren might have peace secured to them in the worship of God.

THE BIBLE SOCIETY OF FRANCE.—The seventieth annual meeting was held in Paris a few days ago, Professor Pédézert presiding. The year's circulation of Bibles, Testaments, and portions reached a total of 24,280. The balance-sheet showed a deficit of 5800 francs. M. Lelièvre stated that the Bible was first translated into French in 1523 by Lefèvre d'Etaples. Three years later its publication was forbidden by Royal decree; but printing was continued in Geneva, and copies were secretly introduced into France. In the wake of love for God's Word, and zeal in its dissemination, there followed a severe persecution, in the course of which Christian heroes were not only haled to prison, but in many cases put to death.

VAUDOIS OF THE UPPER ALPS.—Madame Schneider, of Creuzot, the generous widow of the late President of the Corps Législatif, has forwarded to the Protestant Society of Colonisation a sum of twenty thousand francs, to secure the emigration to Algeria of four or five more of the famished French Vaudois families of the Val Freissinières, Hautes Alpes. The misery of these poor people has greatly increased of late years. Though very industrious, they find it all but impossible to secure the means of subsistence on the rocky wilds, which are, during a large part of the year, covered with snow, and afterwards swept by torrents and avalanches. Algeria offers them the home and comforts which they need, and the French Protestants hope soon to be in a position to transplant several more needy and worthy families.

World-wide Prayer Union.—The secretaryship this Union, vacated by the death of Rev. C. M. Pym, has been accepted by the Rev. N. Sneyd Taylor, Babbacombe, Torquay. Those who wish to join the Union, or to make inquiry concerning it, are requested to communicate with him.

CUCKOO CLOCK and WEATHER HOUSE (COMBINED).

A handsomely carved wood clock, 22in. in height, with ivory hands and figures, strikes the hours and half hours on a powerful wire gong. Each time the clock strikes a charming little cuckoo pushes open a door at top of clock, and comes out, and cuckoos the hours and half hours, then retires, and the door closes after it. Above the clock is the Weather House, containing beautifully modelled figures of male and female peasants, 3in. high. The man comes out if about to be wet, and woman if fine. We warrant these clocks to for years, and for time-keeping qualities no better clock an be obtained at any price, while they are ornamental and to decorate a palace.

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS.—CASE of Mrs. SCOTT, of STROMNESS, N.B.

Eighteen months from the time I write (May, 1889), Mr. A. Scott wrote me relative to his wife.

(From such a distance it would be almost impossible for a patient to come to see me; but there is such a comprehensive series of questions given in my book that, if fully answered, it is perfectly unnecessary, although in some cases more satisfactory, to pay a personal visit to Coombe Lodge. Thousands of patients are thus treated, by letter.)

Mr. Scott had seen the cases reported weekly. Moreover, he says: "Your treatment has been so highly spoken of, I feel it my duty to apply to you for my wife."

Weakness of the chest had been manifest from childhood, since measles had attacked her, followed by whooping cough. She was now suffering from severe night cough and expectoration, great difficulty of breathing, flushings, loss of flesh and strength. These symptoms had come on since an attack of inflammation, which was followed by sub-acute bronchitis, which all remedies had failed to cure, or even to relieve.

After perseverance, according to my advice, for two months, Mr. Scott writes: "My wife soon felt the healing virtue of your medicine. The expectoration became much easier, and she has gained flesh. She could not make up her own bed when I first wrote to you. Since then she has enjoyed health she did not know before."

To enable her to continue more regularly, I reduced the charge, at the request of Mr. Ricketts, of the Mission. She persevered for over twelve months, and on the 15th of April last Mr. Scott writes: "The result of your treatment has been marvellous. She has had a son, and is now stronger and better than ever she has been throughout her life. You can publish this marvellous cure if you please."

(Mr. Scott asks me not to print his full address. Should any person specially interested in the case desire to know, I will supply it privately.)

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Society for Promoting Female Education in the East.

THIS Society has been before the public for 55 years as one honoured and blessed of God; being the first of its kind, it has been the pioneer of all others labouring more or less upon the same lines; it has been permitted to see the work, which was once considered Utopian, fully recognised, not only as possible, but even as indispensable; and surely, therefore, it presents strong claims upon the sympathy and the liberality of the Lord's people.

A few who witnessed its establishment in 1834, are spared to see its object, so looked down upon at first, now one of the most popular of the day, taken up with hearty goodwill by all the churches, and by many private individuals. But what of the Mother Society? Old helpers enter into their rest, and their children do not fill their places, but push on newer plans. In consequence, the Mother Society suffers, and its funds diminish. This renders it necessary to utter a loud cry for help.

The Missionary ladies sent out by this Society have been permitted to bring in many "sheaves" with joy; though the earlier ones in the field had often to sow the good seed "weeping." Several of their stations have proved nurseries for native labourers, who are now a goodly array of workers among their countrywomen as Zenana Missionaries, School Mistresses, House and Hut Visitors.

The work carried on by the European ladies who have gone forth includes the establishment of Orphanages, Boarding, Day, and Infant Schools, Bible and Sewing Classes, Mothers' Meetings, Zenana and Harem Visiting, and Medical Work.

The sphere of the Society's operations includes China, Japan, India, Persia, Africa, and the Levant.

But this Society, with its band of faithful workers, and its rich harvest of souls, is not adequately supported, and, like many others since the prevailing depression, has the sorrow of announcing a deficit. They have had the pain of refusing many applications for labourers and for help; nor is this all. Already the Committee have been compelled to "draw in," instead of extending; and unless speedy and liberal help be afforded, further reductions will have to be made. Surely "these things ought not so to be."

Shall the Committee appeal in vain?

Contributions will be gratefully received by the Society's Bankers, Messrs. Herries, Farquhar & Co., 16, St. James'-street, S.W.; and by the Secretary, Miss Webb, 267, Vauxhall Bridge-road, S.W.

Several additional Colporteurs have been recently appointed. Funds greatly needed.—Rev. H. M. WILLIAMSON, Belfast, and Rev. JOHN ELLIOTT, Armagh, Secretaries, by whom contributions will be gratefully received; or they may be paid at the Office of this paper.

WANTED, LADIES to VOLUNTEER for WORK in PALESTINE.

"In Palestine," says Miss Lloyd, "March is a glorious season. The fields and hills are covered with flowers. Tourists and pilgrims come from all countries. The inhabitants of Jerusalem, too, come out to breathe the warm air, and sit in the fields around the Holy City. All the long days and afternoons the women sit and literally do nothing. We opened our hall door one Sunday afternoon, and invited all who would to come in. Very soon we had a large congregation of women and children. It was interesting to see them first peeping in timidly, and then venturing in and sitting down. All, of course, wore veils, but as they got courage they removed them by degrees, and sat open-eyed, listening in wonder to the harmonium and the group of English ladies singing Arabic hymns. We intend pursuing this mode of teaching the Gospel to women.

"For the healing of the sick we find we have many opportunities; the villages all round Jerusalem, Bethany, Siloam, Lifta, the villages on the Mount of Olives, and the leper village near Aceldama—all are visited by us. Two sisters, mounted on donkeys, carrying a bag of medicines, start from our house. This is a blessed service, the gratitude of the people is unbounded, and their entreaties not to fail to come regularly very touching. In one village, said to be dangerous for Europeans, they were particularly well received, and finding they would have many patients, they spread their mats in the street, and sat flat down, having their medicines and ointments all around them, and were fully occupied until the evening. They came home rejoicing at being able to alleviate some of the pain and suffering they saw. The agonies of the lepers are dreadful. One poor man begged them to cut off his foot—the pain was so intolerable. The story of the ten lepers much affected them, and one of them entreated us to leave them the Book. They were nearly all Moslems, and never heard of Jesus.

"We are now able to see 'open doors' in all the villages and cities of Palestine by which to enter and bring light and healing to the women and little ones who are living and dying without the Light of Life. This house in Jerusalem will be our centre for training and learning Arabic, but many other places are opening to us. Truly, 'the harvest is plenteous, but the labourers are few.' We sorely want more ladies willing to give themselves to this service for Christ. Women and children in all Moslem lands can only be touched with the Gospel by women; and the Lord has now need of their service in His own country."

PARIS CITY MISSION.

FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED

To meet the necessities of the PARIS CITY MISSION. A powerful Gospel work is now being done in the great pleasure city, and in every department this Society is taking an active part. Its eight missionaries in turns take charge of the Salles Evangéliques, from which a continuous circulation of Bibles, Gospels, and Tracts are made to the myriads of visitors to the Exhibition. In many halls they preach the glorious Gospel, and are diligent in visiting from house to house.

SPECIAL NEED is the cause of this appeal.

Information given and contributions gratefully received by the Chairman of London Committee, G. H. BENSON, Esq., 150, Leadenhall-street, E.C.; by the Hon. Secretary, J. M. WEYLLAND, 31, Carlton-hill, St. John's Wood, N.W., and at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

PEGS for PREACHERS: POINTS for WORKERS.

Being a Collection of 431 Bible Subjects SUITABLE FOR
BIBLE READINGS AND GOSPEL ADDRESSES.

By CHARLES INGLIS,
EVANGELIST.

Price 2s. Cloth boards, bevelled edges.

"The object of this volume is to help those who seek to speak for the Lord Jesus, and yet have little time at their disposal for the preparation of their message. Most of these Bible Readings it has been my privilege to deliver to thousands of workers in all parts of the world; and many of my hearers, who have received blessing and profit, have urged me to issue them in a printed form.

"We have gone through some thousands of references with a great deal of care, but should our readers find a blemish here or there, they will remember that many of these Bible Readings have been searched out on long railway journeys and ocean voyages.

AN APPEAL FOR THE NEW CUT.

TO help defray the cost of taking One Thousand Children for a Day in the Country, and to provide a Good Tea. And who will help us to send Forty Delicate Children into the Country for a fortnight.

Contributions will be thankfully received on behalf of the Working Men's Mission, by our Bankers, Messrs. BARCLAY, BEVAN & Co., 54, Lombard-street, London, E.C.; or may be sent to the Superintendents, T. and J. YOUNG, 32, Nelson-square, Blackfriars-road, London, S.E.; or to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT.

Thousands of Fishermen are engaged all the year round in providing OUR TABLES with fish. These men, who FOR US hazard their lives and toil through furious blasts and sleety storm (not only cut off from the comforts of home, but at two days' distance from medical or surgical aid), may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy. THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS, carrying to the Fishermen the message of Divine mercy and love, affording relief in sickness, and cheering dull lives by their presence.

HELP WANTED FOR THE TOILERS OF THE DEEP.

TEN Mission Vessels now cruise with the Trawling Fleets, each being at once a CHURCH, DISPENSARY, LIBRARY, and CLUB. Funds are required to provide a Mission Vessel for EVERY FLEET, and for the maintenance of the HOSPITAL MISSION SHIPS Queen Victoria and Albert. The urgent necessity of these floating Hospitals is shown by the fact that during last year over 7,000 cases of accident and sickness were successfully treated on board the Dispensary of the Mission Vessels. WHO WILL HELP? Large or small Offerings will be thankfully acknowledged.

THE CRIPPLES' HOME FOR GIRLS,

17a, MARYLEBONE ROAD, W.

SINCE the opening of the Home in 1851 NINE HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-FOUR GIRLS HAVE BEEN RECEIVED, hundreds of these being malformed and crippled, many of the most helpless having received large benefit from skilled surgical treatment.

After Christian training and being taught a trade—chiefly needlework and straw bonnet making—numbers of them are living useful, self-supporting lives.

Rebuilding the Home has REDUCED THE RESERVE FUND BY NINE THOUSAND POUNDS, which involves a serious loss of income.

As shelter is provided for upwards of ONE HUNDRED CRIPPLED GIRLS, the yearly expenditure will be large. FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED.

Further information will be given and Contributions gratefully received by

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Rev. Marmaduke Miller, ex-President of the United Methodist Free Church Conference.

In these days of uncertain sounds and doubtful doctrine, it is refreshing to read the July charge of Dr. Maurice Day, Bishop of Cashel. After some preliminary remarks on the present circumstances, Bishop Day writes :—

> We Protestant Christians of all classes ought at this time to be drawn very closely towards one another; not in any political combination, but in Christian sympathy and love, as those who have so much in common as regards the most important of all matters.

Bishop Day then proceeds to define "the true Church" and of what it consists; would that his episcopal brethren, both in England and Ireland, would note and re-echo his weighty words. He says the true Church consists—

> Of all those, and of those only, who are quickened by the power of God the Holy Spirit to spiritual life, and who manifest that life by a living faith in the Lord Jesus as their Saviour, and by a life according to that faith. These, wherever they may be found, and these only, are the true Church of God, the living body of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Further on he remarks, "If there be a right spirit in all true Christians, their union will be seen even in the midst of external diversity;" and, after a quotation from Hooker, he closes this portion of his weighty charge :—

> If we keep this view of the true spiritual Church of God clearly in our minds, it will not only comfort us in the face of all outward divisions, but it will also lead us to look upon as brethren, in the highest and truest sense, all those, by whatever name they may be called, who, as far as we can judge, have the faith and love of the Lord Jesus Christ reigning in their hearts.

Let us next see what is the opinion of the Bishop of Cashel on "the importance of preaching." He says :—

> I think there is a danger at present of its being made little of, and thrust into a corner; that while services are more carefully looked after, and music attended to (all which is very right), it is counted a secondary matter with some what sort of sermon is provided....Set it before your minds as beyond all exception the most important part of the work which is given you to do. The preaching of the Word is not only its public preaching, but the continual deliverance of our message in private as well as in public....

We cannot lay too much stress on these words, nor upon those which follow on the duty of prayer; we earnestly commend this charge to all who are called to the ministry, and pray that the loving Christian spirit of the saintly Bishop of Cashel may find a hearty response in many a soul.

Temperance reformers would not have much to hope for from the House of Lords, if the conversation last week between Lord Wemyss and Lord Salisbury were to be taken as a true gauge of the interest that the Peers feel in the matter. Lord Wemyss thinks Prohibitionists are a very tyrannical set of people, and he wants the Government to checkmate them if possible by getting information from America to show that Prohibition is the fruitful source of crime and pauperism. He is more anxious about "the liberty of the subject" than about the evils of drunkenness, and very apprehensive that any prohibition of the liquor trade would cause the moral deterioration of the people by inducing contempt for a law which they did not intend to obey. We are astonished that his lordship should not have discovered ere now, what most other people are convinced of, that nothing produces such moral deterioration and contempt for law as this very traffic which he would preserve intact. In fighting for a shadow he lets go the substance.

The Prime Minister is also filled with alarm at the bare idea of devoting two or three sessions to public-houses, because it would be a very serious impediment to public business. We scarcely know what "public business" embraces nowadays, but we should be inclined to say that two or three sessions seriously devoted to public-houses and their influence on the national well-being, would be about the best way of spending the time of our not overworked peers. Lord Salisbury was careful to state that he does not personally sympathise with the cry for Sunday closing in England, but he notes the current of public opinion in favour of larger restrictions. We are, therefore, not without hope that a growing opinion on the subject of prohibitory legislation generally, may help his lordship to a more friendly attitude.

A correspondent sends the following suggestion :—

> Would it not be a very favourable opportunity, while the Shah is in England, to ask him not to allow Deacon Abraham, at Oroomiah, to be hindered in his work?

Dr. Barnardo's appeal from the order of Mr. Justice Mathew and Mr. Justice Grantham has been heard before Lord Esher, Lord Justice Cotton, and Lord Justice Lindley, and the decision is announced as we go to press. The decision of the inferior court is upheld, with two very important differences. The severe comments of Mr. Justice Mathew and his colleague intimated (1) that in their belief Dr. Barnardo had sent the child, Martha Ward, out of the kingdom on December 22, because he knew the Court was going to be moved, and to evade its jurisdiction; and (2) that the letters written by Dr. Barnardo afterwards, and produced in court, were not bonâ fide intended to effect the recovery of the child, but further to evade justice. The Lords Justices of Appeal entirely exonerate Dr. Barnardo from these imputations, which they consider undeserved, although they confirm in other points the judgment of the Lower Court as to the child.

When George Brealey passed away a prince and a great man ceased in Israel. He was a true soul-winner, and the record of his life is written in the moral and religious elevation of the whole neighbourhood of the Blackdown Hills. When about to leave for Demerara, he was asked at a fare-well meeting to go to this hill country and preach the Gospel. He went, and cottage meetings were so blessed that the villagers begged him to stay and preach to them. He told them he was leaving to preach to the black people. "Oh, no, maister," an old woman replied; "you've made a mistake; we be the blacks; we've got black hearts." The words were prophetic, and providential events evidently led to his remaining. Thousands of Christians ought to go abroad; but, perhaps, as in the case of Dr. Barnardo and George Brealey, the Lord of the harvest may intend greater blessing to distant lands through detaining some among the blacks at home. The truths of the Gospel of God made manifest in the conversations recorded in these memorials of George Brealey, by his like-minded son (2s. 6d. J. F. Shaw), are better calculated than much theological study to make men and women mighty winners of souls.

It is satisfactory to note that defeat by a substantial majority attended the attempt made in the House of Commons to expunge the clause inserted in the Cruelty to Children Prevention Bill prohibiting the employment of children under ten in theatres. The only effect of the discussion was to refute still more effectually the arguments, moral, physical, and educational, which are urged in favour of children of tender years being so employed. We trust that the Upper House will not disturb the excellent decision deliberately arrived at by the Commons.

In the recent discussion in the House of Commons upon the Scottish Universities Bill, speaking in support of the retention of the present theological tests for the theological chairs, a member of the Government said :—

> In dealing with a question like theology, tests are an absolute necessity, unless it is intended that the whole teaching of theology shall be dissolved in some perfectly amorphous and shapeless system. When a religion is based on doctrines, it is impossible to eliminate the dogmatic element from the discussion. If all tests for theological chairs are abolished, it will be possible to appoint to those chairs professors who do not profess any form of Christianity.

These words are noteworthy, seeing that one of the subtle dangers of the present day is the tendency to so-called freedom and "breadth of thought" in religious and doctrinal matters. Without the sure anchorage of a definite faith and belief, the Church and the individual are alike at the mercy of any sudden breeze of rationalism, and it is especially important that those who have the responsibility of training and influencing future ministers should be men sound in the faith.

There was a discussion last week in the London Presbytery on Home Mission work. Some advocated the establishment of mission halls without reference to ecclesiastical leanings; others, more timid, thought that the work of evangelising the masses should be strictly in connection with the regular churches. One expressed the opinion that the silks and the prints, the fustian and the broadcloth, did not coalesce in the churches.

Then Rev. John McNeill rose and gave the talk a very practical turn:—

He had only five minutes before he must leave for the weekly open-air service he conducted at King's-cross, assisted by his office-bearers. If the Conference adjourned along with him to that open-air meeting it might help them in the consideration of the matter under discussion. The problem was being solved at Regent-square Church, where the silks and the prints got on well together. They needed to bring into their ministrations more direct evangelistic preaching. The right class of people were being attracted to Regent-square, and on the previous Sunday he received nearly sixty new members, a larger number than ever joined at one time under his ministry, even in Edinburgh. There was life in all their churches, but they needed it more abundantly.

Mr. McNeill is solving the problem by doing the work. The great thing is to have the Gospel message taken to the people in some way; the exact shape of the agency may very well be moulded by circumstances.

The Calcutta correspondent of The Times recently wrote thus:—

A Bombay newspaper announces two recent marriages: in one case the bride was aged two years, and in the other fifteen months, while the bridegroom was thirty years old. Pundita Ramabai is giving a series of lectures to crowded audiences on female education.

These sentences denote respectively the poison and the antidote; the latter indicating the lines along which must run the reform of the degrading customs of child-marriage and enforced widowhood, and of other grave social abuses. The womanhood of India must first be enlightened; the zenana is the social fortress which must be captured, and it is for the women of England to lead the attack. The increased attraction of India as a sphere of work for women, especially in medical missions, is a hopeful sign. At the Mansion House the other day it was stated that there are now in India twelve female hospitals and fifteen dispensaries, and that two hundred and twenty women are receiving the required medical education for the work. But the slender ranks require strong reinforcements, and the best energies of Englishwomen can be consecrated to few nobler purposes.

KILBURN HOUSE OF REST.—At the last all-day meeting, Miss Mason asked prayer for guidance in connection with a house she is about to take for aged and disabled Christian workers, that the right locality may be chosen, and the most suitable inmates selected for its first occupants. Someone may know of a suitable house, or some may be disposed to give a house for the purpose. These all-day meetings will be resumed on October 4, when Rev. F. B. Meyer will give the address in the afternoon.

CRUELTY TO HORSES.—Rev. H. R. Haweis, of St. James's, Marylebone, preaching last Sunday, condemned the cruel use of bits and tight reins. At garden parties at Lambeth Palace and Fulham Palace recently he saw hundreds of fashionable carriages with the horses' necks strapped back, and the creatures tossing in agony, while their owners were in the grounds enjoying themselves and regardless of the torture which the animals were undergoing. He suggested that the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London should make an order that every carriage standing within the episcopal precincts should unloose bearing reins, and that a groom should be told off to see the order obeyed. A great moral impression would then be created throughout London. At least, it would be said that these bishops, while in accordance with the Apostle's injunction they are "given to hospitality," are not unmindful of that older precept, "a righteous man regardeth the life of his beast." Such action at such places as Lambeth and Fulham would call instant attention to the curse of bits and bearing-reins throughout England, and be a practical sermon on humanity worth a thousand pulpit utterances.

THE PRESENT VISITS OF MESSRS.

Hudson Taylor & Grattan Guinness

TO AMERICA.

"As Thou hast sent Me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world. And for their sakes I sanctify Myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth. Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on Me through their word; that they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us: that the WORLD may believe that Thou hast sent Me."—John xvii. 18—21.

A few days ago Mr. Hudson Taylor sailed from Liverpool for New York. Let me emphasise one truth he dropped as I saw him off—viz., that the progress of foreign missions is dependent on the consecration of the Church at home. Last year I was an eye-witness to the brotherly reception the churches in America and Canada accorded Mr. Taylor. Before his steamer had got out of our river a telegram was despatched to catch the prayer-meeting of the C.I.M., which meets every Saturday afternoon from 4 to 6, at the Mildmay Conference Hall, announcing his embarkation, and requesting special prayer that the outcomings of this second visit to America should not be for the good of China only, but for the other foreign missions; for the good of the churches in the United States and Canada, and for the other nations of the American Continent, and for the whole world. By this time Mr. Taylor may be hard at work. Our long-tried friend of the heathen, Mr. Grattan Guinness, is also in America, pleading for Africa, as well as for other parts of the earth; and these two friends may shortly meet at the Convention of Niagara, where so liberal and spontaneous a response was made last year.

Is it too much, then, to crave that earnest expecting prayer on the lines of the telegram referred to may be made? It includes much, for it embraces a quickening and consecration of the churches on the other side the Atlantic, whilst we could not but similarly include our own churches and ourselves also, that they and we, being so quickened and consecrated, might be instrumental in a mighty world-wide ingathering out of the dark places of the whole earth.

Unless our churches are to die down, and it may be die out, is it not imperative that they advance upon the heathen? Is it possible to find a way for us to continue in neglectful disobedience and avoid dying out, or else dragging on a crippled existence?

Mr. Spurgeon says in a notice of Arnot's "Garenganze" that he has read it with the conviction that the Church must wake up, and send out a hundred men where she has hitherto sent one.

Rev. J. H. Horsburgh, missionary of the Church of England Missionary Society, writes me from China: "We must have a more apostolic order of missionaries coming out, not in UNITS, but in BANDS, to overspread the dark heathen world." He adds that he has been living in native houses, in native inns, and in native boats, eating the simple native food, and of course wearing the native dress. He says the life is thoroughly practicable both in the heat of summer and the cold of winter; it is also thoroughly healthy and ridiculously cheap. There ought to be hundreds of missionaries in every province. There is no reason why there should not be.

Permit me to remind your younger readers that the great ingathering that took place in the British Isles in 1859—60 was emphatically connected with the power of prayer, and not the power of fine preaching. The preachers and their friends prayed that the unsaved souls assembling might be saved before the meetings ended, and so they were. The people saw their neighbours going out unsaved and coming back saved, and testifying that Christ had saved them. It would be impossible to estimate how many were saved by the simple testimonies of these men, women, and children. Thus the work spread, bringing glory to God as the answerer of prayer.

But though it is no doubt a fact that that awakening sent forward to the front to labour amongst the heathen not a few missionaries, yet it must be admitted that the imperative and urgent command of the Lord to share out the bread of life to the heathen was at that time sadly neglected to be explained and enforced to the multitudes of converts.

Let us not now repeat our mistake. There has been during the last four or five years much spoken and much printed about the heathen. But when shall we begin to be business-like? Christ gives it to us as the chief, the main work of the Church, but we take it up as one of the many small inferior works of the Church. The Moravians at their very start made the heathen their main work. But where is there another denomination doing so now?

Oh that I and many, many beloved brothers and sisters on both sides the Atlantic and all over the world, for the glory of God and the good of Jew and Gentile, may take the words of our blessed Lord from the head of this paper, and in their very spirit plead them to our heavenly Father till we have them. Forget our nationalities, forget denominations—be all one—and, loving all saints, plead the one Name. Our Father delights to be prevailed with.

Reginald Radcliffe.

WANDSWORTH-ROAD, S.W.—The Howard-street Gospel Mission and Sunday-school, New-road, Wandsworth-road, is a small work patiently carried on by a band of devoted Christian people. The last annual report tells of varied effort attended by encouraging results. During the winter much had to be done to meet the necessities of the poor, over 10,000 free meals having been provided. The work has many firm friends, but if others would rally round it, development would be more rapid. The superintendent is Mr. John Soames.

BRITISH SEAMEN AT BILBAO.—The Luchana Reading Rooms at this Spanish port serve a very useful purpose. During last year a grand total of 35,204 visits were paid to the rooms, the many conveniences of which continue to be highly appreciated. The spiritual work is not without its encouraging side, while the temperance cause has been successfully advocated throughout the year. The "post office" connected with the institution is a valuable adjunct, no fewer than 41,380 sailors' letters passing through it during the twelve months. All business communications should be addressed to Rev. A. Burnell, at the Reading Rooms.

BETHNAL GREEN FREE LIBRARY.—The young men and women who attend the evening classes at this institution were handsomely entertained on Saturday afternoon, at Caen Wood Towers, Highgate, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Francis Reckett. Tea was served in a marquee, and addresses were given by Mr. G. F. Hilbken, the librarian; Mr. Arthur Farnan, a member of the Clothworkers' Company; and Mr. Skinner. The work carried on in connection with the reading-room and the classes appears to be of the most valuable kind, from a Christian standpoint, and a scheme is on foot to institute a Students' Union. The space in the present library building is very restricted, and hopes are entertained that the scheme for providing new premises, at a cost of £2000, will be well supported by the public.

The Church and the Theatre.

AFTER reading of the proposed new brotherhood to reach the masses of the people, which was so strongly recommended at the Convocation of Canterbury, it is painful to note that at the Ruridiaconal Conference in Liverpool held the following week, the question of the stage was discussed; and that the discussion was of such a character that The Daily News of Saturday last says concerning it: "The prevailing tone of the Conference was decidedly not one of hostility to the actor's calling, but betokened, on the contrary, an earnest desire to strengthen its claims to the respect of right-thinking people." This, according to The Daily News, is "a cheering fact"; to most of our readers it will be regarded as a fact of an entirely opposite character. The Church's power depends upon her separated life, and the unreached masses of the people will estimate at their true value those ministers who publicly appear as patrons of the stage. "I am not going to hear that man preach," said a man of the world, "for he plays cards." "Why," said his friend, "you need not say anything, for you play cards yourself." "Yes," the man replied, "but I am not going to entrust my soul to the preaching of a card-playing parson." The masses who frequent the theatre are too well acquainted with its character to have any confidence in the theatre-going clergyman.

Some of the remarks made at the Conference can only be read with a deep sense of shame and humiliation. One minister, Rev. S. A. Sylvester, vicar of Roby, is reported to have said that "the stage, if true to its pictures of life, may in many cases act as a teacher with greater effect than the sermon in the pulpit." How unworthily Mr. Sylvester regards the sacred office to which he believes he has been called! If this is really his opinion, surely it is his duty to abandon the pulpit for the stage as a more effective instrument for teaching the truth. Another speaker, Rev. Mr. Mitchell, who also appeared as a defender of the stage, complained that after seeing "The Private Secretary," in which a certain curate cuts a rather ridiculous figure, he was met at the door "by some wenches," who said, "There's another, don't you know." "Such a thing," Mr. Mitchell considered, "was not very nice for one to listen to." If the "wenches" meant that Mr. Mitchell cut a rather ridiculous figure, we are inclined to think they were not far wrong. Perhaps they were shrewd enough to know that he was in his wrong place, and we shall not be sorry if Mr. Mitchell learns this lesson, and refuses in the future to put himself in the way of hearing such "not nice" remarks.

The sale of drink in theatres and the immodest dresses of some of the actresses were both referred to, but such speakers as Mr. Sylvester and Mr. Mitchell, notwithstanding these things, still defended the theatre. There were others, however, who were wise enough and bold enough to take an opposite view. Rev. S. C. Trench is to be commended for "taking his stand upon the traditions of the Church, which are against the theatre." It is to be lamented that the majority do not appear to have taken the same position.

It is our deliberate conviction that theatre-going and theatre-defending clergymen are in their wrong place. We would not say that no man can be a Christian who patronises the theatre, but we think that no such inconsistent man is fitted to be a Christian minister. Whatever his ability, he will mislead by his life more than he can possibly help by his teaching. The Church and the world are distinct, and every attempt at union must end in disastrous failure to the Church.

Convocation Copying Rome.

THE Reformation of the sixteenth century was the protest of evangelical Christianity against the errors and corruptions then prevailing in the Church of Rome. Without a doubt that church continues to be of the same character. However altered may be its appearance in this country, in Catholic countries it is still the same corrupt and persecuting system. The need for protest is as great to-day as ever. But it cannot be denied that the modern tendency is towards the imitation of Rome rather than antagonism to it. Not only do the Ritualists in the Church of England—so long regarded as the bulwark of Protestanism—boldly adopt the erroneous teaching and dangerous practices of Rome, but even those who are earnestly evangelical, and emphatically Protestant, are proving only too ready to copy her methods. Our most vigorous denunciations will lose their weight if we continue to pay her so high a compliment.

A recent session of the Convocation of Canterbury furnished another indication of the same thing. The Bishop of Rochester presented the report of a joint Committee of both Houses which had been appointed to consider organisations to reach the masses. Among other minor proposals was one of very special importance, on which the committee laid great emphasis. This was the establishment of a new order of brotherhoods, the members of which should bind themselves "by vows of celibacy, poverty, and obedience"; whose vows, however, should "be only binding for a definite time, or be revocable by authority"; who should work "in strict subordination to the authority of the Bishop," and "only on the invitation and under the sanction of the parochial clergy"; and who should receive for their work "nothing beyond their board and lodging."

The resemblance between this order and the monastic institutions of the Romish system will be apparent to every reader. This may not be a sufficient reason for condemning it; for the most strenuous opponent of the Church of Rome will admit that while she has never displayed much of the harmlessness of the dove, she has shown no lack of the wisdom of the serpent. In many things it may be possible to imitate her with advantage. But such an attempt to follow her monastic system can only be condemned. It raises the question whether the practice of binding one's future life by vows is sanctioned, or even allowed, by New Testament teaching. Upon Matt. v. 33—37, Alford says: "These verses imply the unfitness of vows of every kind as rules of Christian action." We confess that we cannot see where such vows can find a place in a dispensation whose chief characteristic and highest glory is liberty. If the Christian life is rightly described as "the life of Christ manifested in our mortal flesh" (2 Cor. iv. 10, 11), under what vows can that life be bound? A mistaken apprehension of the Christian life underlies this extraordinary proposal.

The dangers arising from life vows are admitted, but why should vows for a limited period be less dangerous? The principle is the same; and if condemned in the one case, why justify it in the other? The monastic system in the early Church was commenced with motives as pure as those which suggest this new departure; why should not similar evils in course of time be the result?

The reasons assigned for the adoption of this method are as Romish as the method itself. "Sisterhoods" are declared to be more effective than "institutions of Deaconesses"; and this is attributed to their adoption of common vows. About the success of sisterhoods there may be differences of opinion. But to adopt similar vows in order to similar success is a doubtful proceeding. What is called success is not a sufficient justification for such methods. A further reason suggested is that such brotherhoods would give opportunity for using the "reserve force of enthusiasm" which is said to be in the Church, "adequate for any emergency." And so a feeling of present enthusiasm is to bind some to a certain mode of life in the future. Is that a true way to direct the life of God in the soul? We decidedly think not. It is noteworthy that no justification for these new methods is sought for in the teaching or example of our Lord and his Apostles. They lived as men amongst men. And though Paul chose for himself to remain unmarried, he neither bound himself to such a condition by a vow, nor imposed such a vow upon others.

The desire to meet the needs of the unreached masses, which prompts this proposal, has our heartiest sympathy, but the method proposed we view with alarm, and anticipate only failure from its adoption. Not new organisations, but "power from on high" resting upon Christians in all places, is the great need. For an enduement of the Holy Spirit which would unite the different sections of the Church in one effort to save the people we would pray; and we have the testimony of our Lord Himself, in his great intercessory prayer, that such a condition would be followed by truest success (John xvii. 21—23).

MRS. LEWIS'S WORK IN PARIS

DEAR SIR,—It may be well to let your readers know that Mrs. Travers Lewis (née Miss Ada Leigh), in resigning her place among the English girls in Paris, consequent on her marriage with the Bishop of Ontario, is far from relinquishing her interest in the work. She proposes to visit every year the scene of her former labours.

The editing of Echoes from Paris will be continued by me, and I shall be happy to afford information as to the state of the various Institutions in Paris, receiving donations, and enrolling new subscribers, at the Y.W.C.A. Home, 22A, Queen's-road, Bayswater, London, W.—Yours faithfully,

(MRS.) EMMA E. HORNIBROOK.

AGED PILGRIMS' ASYLUM, HORNSEY RISE.—The eighteenth annual meeting of this Home was held a few days ago. The Asylum is really a village in itself, delightfully situated in a healthy district of North London, where 120 aged members of "the household of faith," are provided with a comfortable home in which to spend their declining years. Each one has a separate room, and a pension from the Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society of either ten, seven, or five guineas per year, besides which their coal and gas are given them. All the inmates are over sixty years of age, the youngest being sixty-four, and the oldest ninety-three. The meeting was addressed by Revs. H. Bradford (Northampton), W. H. Evans, A. G. Gristock, G. Plaford, P. Reynolds, W. Sinden, Mr. S. Sharpe, and Mr. W. Jackson (secretary).

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Reply of "A Missionary" to Mrs. Guinness' "Critique" in "The Regions Beyond" for April.

THIS "Critique" deals only with the main issue, and was designed to give a decided negative to the assertion that Matt. x. instructions have anything to do with us. The objections made therein were anticipated and abundantly met, with conscientious pains, by my papers. But these are all passed over unnoticed.

The Critique opens with the general assertion that Matt. x. contains "a special commission, given exclusively to Christ's own immediate disciples at a certain definite juncture in his ministry. It was applicable to them alone, and even to them only during his life on earth, and not after his death." In answer to this I must refer to my former papers, wherein it is shown that in each of the three divisions of these instructions and predictions there are clauses which reach into the future, and several which were never obeyed or fulfilled until after Pentecost. This answers the objection.

AN ARBITRARY DIVISION.

Although the last of the three divisions mentioned contains clauses inapplicable to that first journey, Mrs. Guinness assumes and asserts that Matt. x., from ver. 17 onwards, gave "general instructions" not to be confounded with those that precede. Where is the evidence of this? Ver. 16 speaks of Christ's sending them forth as "sheep in the midst of wolves," and their need of harmlessness and wisdom; and ver. 17 goes on, "But beware of men, for they will deliver you up to the councils," &c. Is it handling the Word of God fairly to say that ver. 16, and what preceded it, applied only to the disciples then, but that from ver. 17 on we have "general directions" applicable always? Those who are seeking the truth will easily discern how vv. 16 and 17 are joined in one, and spoken as a scarce broken sentence.

But why this arbitrary division by my critic? Is it because in ver. 17 is the clause about their being delivered up to councils, which did not occur until after Pentecost? Weigh now the strength of the two assertions—mine that all Matt. x. applies always, and that of the "Critique," which dismembers this unit of truth, and says: This first part was temporary and this last permanent. Note that it is admitted that the last section of this legislation was of age-enduring obligation. I claim this admission for the entire chapter.

Mrs. Guinness states that from ver. 17 onwards was not spoken at the same time, but was addressed, at another time, to a "general audience," that is, general in contrast to the first part of the chapter, which was addressed to the disciples only. But the Spirit of God has given us the reply to this assumption, for in the beginning of the next chapter (Matt. xi.) we read: "And it came to pass, when Jesus had made an end of commanding his twelve disciples, He departed thence to teach and to preach in their cities." Again, the instructions in Matt. x. itself, which begin, "These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded them saying," &c., end in vv. 40, 41, and 42 (far beyond ver. 17). "He that receiveth you, receiveth Me," &c. Thus they are woven together, like the veil of the Temple, into one indivisible tissue.

But, even if it could be shown that from ver. 17 onward is to be read separately from what precedes, it would still be incumbent on an objector to explain how, if those instructions are to be limited to that journey, Jesus told them to "raise the dead" (ver. 8), which they did not do until after Pentecost; and how it is that Paul refers to the clause "for the workman is worthy of his meat" (ver. 10) as of lasting force.

We now go on to take up the reasons Mrs. Guinness gives for her conclusion that Matt. x. is not still binding.

"EXTRAORDINARY SELF-DENIAL."

(1) The first is that the circumstances now and then differ. "They," we are told, "were plain men; there was no extraordinary self-denial in the matter or mode of the mission." The inference is that in these days we are not so "plain," and that what they bore without much thought would be "extraordinary self-denial" to us. Truly this is characteristic of our times. It suggests our need of that word in Matt. x. (and note it is in ver. 24, which the Critique admits to be of general application). "The disciple is not above his Master, nor the servant above his Lord." When that mode of life which sufficed for Christ and his disciples requires "extraordinary self-denial" in us, the case is melancholy indeed.

Under this first point we are also told these "young Jewish heralds would meet, for the most part, a kind and cordial welcome." Why then did Christ say, "Behold I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves"? &c. Note, this is in ver. 16, which Mrs. Guinness admits gave them their instructions for that journey. She further says, "They were to get their message declared as quickly as possible, and to travel light," &c. If desirable then, why not now?

In contrasting the modern missionary with the twelve, Mrs. Guinness remarks upon how he "goes perhaps to climates which are injurious to his health." I venture to suggest, and only to suggest, that possibly we have failed to claim that word in the parallel passage in Luke to the seventy: "Behold I give you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy: and nothing shall by any means hurt you." Perhaps if we claimed exemption from harm if poisoned, or bitten by serpents, or from drinking bad water, or from breathing deadly fever-laden miasma, it would be "according to our faith." I would here so speak as to encourage faith in what we may have overlooked, and not to grieve any beloved worker who may be semi-prostrate with fever, even as he reads these lines in his far-away field. The text just quoted is in Luke x. 19. In the next verse we read: "Rejoice, because your names are written in heaven." If we appropriate this, why not that, spoken in the same breath to the same persons? Moreover, it cannot be said that these words to the seventy were confined to Christ's life, for Christ's life on earth was just then about to close. He was journeying toward Jerusalem to accomplish his decease. Moreover, we see Paul acting on this word in shaking off the viper from his hand and feeling no harm. Was the promise the heritage of Paul only, or is it not also ours?

All that our critic says as to the difference in the circumstances of the twelve and of post-Pentecostal missionaries falls to the ground before the fact that after Pentecost these disciples and others acted under Matt. x. instructions.

(2) The second point is as to the "sphere" to be visited; that is, they were not sent to the Gentiles on that first trip. This I fully met in No. XVII. of my series.

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM.

(3) Here the Critique contrasts the message of the twelve with that we are to bear, to show that the instructions that they were under do not apply. That was as to "the kingdom of heaven," while "Christian missionaries go forth that 'repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations,' a very different commission." My reply to this is near at hand. I would ask: Did the great Apostle to the Gentiles err in the work in Rome, concerning which the Spirit records, "And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him, preaching the kingdom of God"? This is also the exact form of expression in Luke viii. 1, where the record is that Christ with the twelve preached "the glad tidings of the kingdom of God." Christ's message and that of the twelve was concerning the kingdom of God. So was Paul's. So is ours. What, then, becomes of this objection also? Moreover, if further proof is needed, read Christ's words in Matt. xxiv.: "And this Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." This is the precise form of expression used in Matt. iv. 23: "And Jesus went about all Galilee...preaching the Gospel of the kingdom." Surely Mrs. Guinness failed to look well to her argument on this point!

A SYMBOL MISINTERPRETED.

(4) The next objection is as to "the spirit" in which the disciples were to act. If rejected, the twelve were to shake off the dust of their feet against the rejectors; that is, we are told, they were in symbolic act to denounce judgment against them. She then asks, "Is this what modern missionaries are to do, or to be patient?" &c. Surely, it ought to have occurred to our critic that it is written of Paul and Barnabas, in Acts xiii. 50, 51, when they were persecuted and expelled from Antioch in Pisidia: "But they shook off the dust of their feet against them, and came unto Iconium." Did, then, these servants of Christ act otherwise than in "the spirit" that ought to mark them and us?

But Mrs. Guinness misinterprets the symbol. It was not significant of "denouncing judgment." It was rather symbolical of duty fully discharged, and the responsibility being on the rejector. Its language, as to the messenger, was: "Behold I am clean from your blood." It does not differ from what is recorded of Paul in Acts xviii. 6: "And when they opposed themselves, and blasphemed, he shook his raiment and said unto them...I am clean: from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles." Does not this still apply to us? What then becomes of this objection also?

MISTAKEN LITERALISM.

(5) Here our critic takes up the oft-answered objection drawn from Luke xxii. She quotes it thus: "But now, he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip," &c. Why did the quotation stop at this word "scrip"? and why does "&c." supply the place of the words from Christ's lips that follow and form one sentence with what is quoted? The omitted words are: "And he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one." The full quotation would have itself refuted the argument, for the command to take purse and scrip could be no more binding than the one to take a sword, which latter was more emphasised than the former; and a few minutes afterwards Christ said to Peter, who had made the mistake of literalising Christ's command as to the sword (even as now our critic would as to the purse and scrip): "Put up again thy sword into his place: for all that take the sword shall perish with the sword."

Mrs. Guinness then says: "Careful attention to the Word of God would forbid a Christian missionary taking as his marching orders a commission which Christ Himself thus expressly set aside as temporary in its application, and for which He substituted an entirely different one as of permanent obligation." Note what we have in this sentence. By this difficult and obscure and manifestly figurative passage in Luke xxii., Matt. x. is set aside, and this "hard to be understood" sentence about taking purse, scrip, and above all, a sword, substituted as of "permanent obligation." If then Mrs. Guinness may claim that she and her missionaries are under this sentence in Luke xxii., I may also claim that I am under Matt. x. If so, have not I incalculably the advantage in understanding my marching orders? For can Mrs. Guinness on her theory explain the word about the sword, which she dropped out of her quotation? As to what seems to be the explanation of this difficult passage in Luke xxii., I have fully spoken in my previous papers.

(To be concluded.)

ROPES WHICH BIND.

MR. E. P. TELFORD delivered a special address to young men in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, on Sunday evening, July 7. Mr. Telford is a great favourite with the friends at the East-end, so it was not surprising to find the immense building packed.

The preacher announced as his subject, "Ropes which bind," and proceeded in terse, manly, and vigorous language to denounce the social manners and customs of the day, that tend to bind young men to their sins. Unscrupulous money-getting and making haste to be rich by any means were denounced as the "gold cord." The "silver cord" of undesirable acquaintanceship was next attacked; preachers often warned young women against associating with ungodly young men, but many a young man's life had been blighted, and his prospects ruined, by the female friendships he had formed. Shun young women who have a liking for theatres and music-halls. The "silk thread" of social custom, strong as the stoutest rope, prevented many from serving God. The fear of being singular in a business house is a powerful weapon in the hands of the adversary of mankind. Gambling on racecourses was compared to a "whip cord," which twined itself round and round a young man's life until it dragged him down to destruction.

Another point was Sabbath-breaking, which was likened to a "cart rope." Then the "wire rope" of strong drink fell under the speaker's ban, and there was a denunciation of this social curse. Infidelity was most appropriately compared with the "tarred rope," which it was impossible to touch without becoming defiled by the contact. The "mother's apron string" was most pathetically touched upon; young men, instead of being ashamed of the taunt that they were tied to their mother's apron string, would do well to feel proud of the insinuation; for where the mother was a godly woman, no surer guiding string to the kingdom of God could be found. The "cotton thread" of Almost Persuaded, so easily snapped, and lastly the "silken cord" of allegiance to Christ, which, unlike the other fetters, did not gall in the wearing, were the other points in this most powerful address.

The congregation were intensely interested, and in many the Spirit of God was manifestly working, as the after-meeting testified.

Egyptian Discoveries.

A PAPER was recently read at a meeting of the Victoria Institute by M. Naville, the eminent Egyptologist. He was selected in 1883 to solve the problem of the site of the first Hebrew camps; he unearthed the granaries made by the Israelites of bricks with straw and without it, and has lately been engaged in excavations which have yielded some of the most remarkable discoveries of modern times. In Ezek. xxx. 13—18, a striking and terrible curse is pronounced upon Egypt. Among the cities mentioned is that of Pi-beseth. This, according to the Septuagint, is Bubastis, a city in which, says Herodotus, there stood one of the largest and most beautiful temples he ever beheld. As Ezekiel predicted, the city was taken, became a ruin, and has continued so until these days. The task of M. Naville has been to lay bare the wide area of its ruins. A vast temple, with four spacious halls, around which once stood colossal statues, has been discovered. Here are to be traced the standards of the constructors of the two great pyramids, which take us back to 3700 B.C., and from that period downwards, for 2000 years, the monuments of kings of successive Egyptian dynasties. A brief notice of the historical facts taught or suggested by Dr. Naville's valuable address will be valued by the lovers of the Old Testament.

The narrative of Genesis brings to our view the friendly bearing of the King of Egypt not only to Joseph, but to Jacob and all his sons. The spade of the excavator is showing us that this monarch belonged to the dynasty of Hyksos, or shepherd kings, who, according to M. Naville's researches, came from Mesopotamia, the birth-place of the Hebrews, and who would thus be the more favourably disposed towards them. Genesis suggests to us the facility with which Goshen was assigned to the Israelites, without any friction on the part of Egyptians. The excavations go to prove that Goshen was a kind of waste land, sufficiently watered to produce good pasturage, and which might be assigned to foreigners without despoiling the native inhabitants.

The Book of Exodus pictures Moses passing readily to and fro between the Egyptian king and the Israelites. M. Naville's explorations show that Goshen was situated between the city of Belbeis and Tel-el-Kebir, and that thus there "was only a short distance between the royal residence and the territory allotted to the Hebrews." The Pharaoh of the Exodus is a king who "knew not Joseph." The Hyksos dynasty came in at a time of Egyptian weakness. The native princes who had maintained themselves in another part of the land, at length drove out the shepherd kings as invaders. The monarch of a new dynasty would naturally become hostile to the Hebrews, whom the Hyksos had settled in the land, and would in time become their oppressor.

The Pharaoh with whom Moses is brought into conflict is manifestly a man of proud pretensions and most arrogant bearing. This Pharaoh is held by archæologists to be Menephtah, the son of Ramses II. But it was the mania of Ramses II. to write his name everywhere. He claimed earlier monuments; erased old inscriptions; placed his title on usurped statues and colossal architraves. Such gigantic pride would descend to his son and successor, who entered into a contest with Jehovah Himself.

These reflections, awakened after listening to M. Naville's paper, serve to indicate that God is shedding wondrous side-lights upon Bible history; and the excavator is disclosing proofs of a marvellous and unexpected nature.

WILLIAM GUEST.

Dr. Nansen, who has lately crossed Greenland on foot, says his only use of spirits during the journey was to melt the snow for drinking purposes.

MORNING ON THE SHORE.

SCARCE lifted yet the eyelids of the day
The mists around the far horizon lie;
But where the distant waters kiss the sky
Beyond yon hazy curtain, who can say?
The smiling sunlight on the nearer bay,
To liquid gems transforms the shimmering tide;
While round the pier the laden fish-boats glide,
And white-winged skiffs pursue their placid way.
Serenely beautiful! a type to me
Of faith's fair sunrise on the soul's dark shore.
What though the haze o'erhang life's distant sea?
Hope's holy radiance gilds the prospect o'er—
Propitious dawn of immortality—
A rising glory that shall set no more.

Belfast. W. MAXWELL.

EMIGRATION TO SOUTH AMERICA.

DEAR SIR,—Allow me to thank kind friends at Dover, Bath, Manchester, Portsmouth, &c., who unsolicited have sent me packets of Mrs. Grimké's Cards in several languages, booklets, tracts, &c.; the Railway Mission sending Signals, charts, &c. Mothers who have sent inquiries for prodigal sons will receive replies in due time.

In reply to your question on English emigration to this Republic, I disapprove of wholesale emigration of families like that which took place lately, whose sufferings have been intense, for which, I fear, the Government agents are to blame. This Republic is a sort of paradise to Italians, who, for years, have come by tens of thousands, and, being thrifty, save up cash and send for their families and friends, for whom they have work ready on arrival.

The poor English who arrived at Buenos Ayres had not this advantage, yet their countrymen did and are doing much to assist them with food and employment, and I hear a committee is being formed to assist any English-speaking people who may arrive. I have met with many of them who have found employment on this and other railways, others are working at the water-works in Rosario, and I see no reason why they should not succeed if they are steady. Most of our officials and workmen are English, and hundreds of engine-drivers, firemen, guards, fitters, &c., have come out lately to this and other companies, and there is a constant demand for steady men, as many extensions are to be opened shortly, and English companies have purchased several Government lines up this way.

Drunkenness is a great curse here; hence the need of Christian men who can forego English comforts and rough it at the start, and they are sure of employment and promotion. Many come out as contract men for three and five years, passage paid, by applying to the Railway Boards in London, and on expiration of term get six months' holiday with half or full pay, and ticket to England, and back as well, if they wish to return. Married men generally come out alone and then send for their families. On arriving at Buenos Ayres the Government boats meet emigrants and take them and their luggage to the Emigration Hotel; but those who wish to pay for lodgings elsewhere can do so, and the Government will send them and their luggage free of cost by rail or boat to any town in the Republic, be it hundreds or thousands of miles. The paper dollar here is worth about 2s. 6d.

THE CHRISTIAN is a most welcome visitor. I generally read it in my journeys.—Yours faithfully,

G. SPOONER.

THE HOPE MISSION, a valuable London agency, still has for its home and centre temporary premises in Banner-street, Golden-lane, E.C. A site on which to build had been selected, but obstacles were interposed, and the committee has had to face the necessity of renewed search either for suitable premises or a plot of ground. In addition to spiritual endeavour, much is done to help and cheer the poor. The workers proceed on quiet lines, but they meet with much encouragement. The mothers' meetings continue a successful part of the work, and, were it not for the creche, many a little one who is now well cared for would be left to the tender mercies of baby-farmers, or locked up with others during the day in comfortless rooms. The hon. secretary of the Mission is Mr. Thos. Ness, 36, Highbury-place, N.

TWO YEARS' EVANGELISM.

By Rev. R. BALGARNIE.

Those of your readers who have sympathetically followed me in my special mission work may be interested by some account of it after the experience of two years. These years have been the most arduous, yet the happiest of a lengthened ministry. For all the sympathy of my brethren, for the doors of usefulness opened, for the hearty co-operation of Christian workers, and especially for the rich harvests of souls God has permitted me to gather, my heart is filled with gratitude, and my lips with praise.

My mission work has extended over England, and, though it has been chiefly in connection with Congregational and Baptist churches, other denominations have benefited by it. The number of special missions conducted has been forty: each has lasted at least seven days, and embraced about twelve services; prayer and praise meetings have also been held; a large number of anonymous requests for prayer were sent in, many of these were so signally answered as the missions proceeded that they became palpable evidence of the presence of God. Such instances might fill a volume.

It is, of course, impossible to estimate the numbers who have attended the services, but the names and addresses of all who remained as anxious inquirers were carefully taken at the time; these amount to 3253; for the most part the converts have not been gathered from the world, but from those brought up in the bosom of the Church as worshippers, Sunday-school and Bible-class scholars, or in connection with Christian families. The careful supervision of these young people has brought much responsibility to pastors and teachers, leading them sometimes to exclaim, "Who is sufficient for these things?" But most of them have risen to the occasion with an earnest gladness they had not before. The formation of catechumen classes, Christian bands, Christian endeavour societies have proved their willingness to adapt themselves to new conditions, and their earnest desire to bind the sheaves that have been gathered.

It is interesting to note that many of the converts are persons who have been long under religious impressions—whom their pastors and teachers had often prayed for, and who but wanted the touch of another hand to bring them to decision for Christ. These have not, by undue delay, been kept back from the Lord's table; the churches have joyfully received them with open arms as the fruits of their own labours and the answers to their many prayers. One church had the joy of welcoming 123 candidates at a special church meeting. Another church (Baptist) admitted twenty-eight by public baptism.

How do the converts stand? I fear that some have asked this question sceptically, hardly expecting they will stand. But why should they not? Their decision for Christ has not been the result of any exciting appeals, but only the culmination of the Spirit's work in them for years; they have but confessed with their mouths what they have long cherished in their hearts. But it is a cause of devoutest thankfulness to hear from time to time that the converts are standing well, are growing in grace, are becoming useful to others, and that from month to month others are being added as the fruits of the mission services. Would that the churches generally regarded young converts with less suspicion and more of sympathy, creating such a warm atmosphere around them that, when thus early planted in the house of the Lord, they may flourish and grow up in the courts of our God, so that when the fathers are gone their children may be found occupying their places.

The following testimonies from a few fields of work will speak for themselves:—

London.—"We cannot do less than express our heartfelt thanks to our Heavenly Father for the glorious results obtained during your seven days' mission in our church. We have indeed experienced the joy of harvest, and this bringeth with it the joy of saving, so that sower and reaper rejoice together."

Brighton.—"We feel that words are all too poor to express our thankfulness to God and you, his servant, for the very large and gracious results which have attended your visit. The windows of heaven were indeed opened, and the blessings poured forth have found us with scarce room enough to receive them. Our anxiety is what to do with the sheaves."

Manchester.—"The influence upon our school has been most marked; nearly twenty have entered the church or are candidates, and there are more to follow."

Ashton-under-Lyne.—"To-night I am proposing forty new members for fellowship, and hope to have about the same number next month; the whole tone of our church has been raised by the mission, and your visit will be remembered for many a year to come."

Trowbridge.—"Our inquiry-meeting last Sunday night was so crowded that an adjournment was needed to the large assembly-room, while I and others had our hands and hearts full with anxious or joyful souls in the vestries or class-rooms. I am thankful for your visit; it was just at the right time and conducted in the right way."

Birmingham.—"We are continuing to receive the fruits of the mission. Many old adherents have come forward, and have desired fellowship. In the senior class there have been considerable additions since you left; over thirty in that class between 17 to 21 have confessed Christ. In the register of inquirers and converts the number is 261."

Stowmarket.—"The converts, old and young, here are under excellent supervision. Many were like doves close to the ark, only needing the kind hand of some God-sent Noah to draw them in; that hand was yours."

From the experience of mission work thus far the following conclusions are formed:—

(1) That the true forward movement of the churches should be of an evangelistic kind, not merely directing its efforts to one or two central points, but by each church becoming its own centre. Proceeding first to gather in those almost within its pale and afterwards reaching the masses outside.

(2) That the churches generally seem dissatisfied with their present rate of progress, and are yearning for times of spiritual refreshing and ingathering.

(3) That special missions are likely means of revival to the churches, because it is a temporary departure from the ordinary routine of work, it creates a spirit of earnest expectation of blessing, a directness in prayer, an eagerness to win souls, which form important factors in the success of a mission.

(4) That the work of the missioner does not disparage the stated ministry, but rather enhances it, because he is only a harvest man called in when the fields are white and ready, and his chief business is not preaching sermons but in personal dealing with souls, with a view to immediate decision for Christ.

(5) That the success of a mission depends not only in earnest preparation beforehand, but the continuance of the same spirit afterwards, in the careful shepherding of young converts, and seeking after the undecided.

(6) That prosperous times are surely at hand for the churches where Jesus Christ is exalted as the supreme object of faith and the only Saviour of sinners; that these mission harvests are but specimens of what God is ready to do when Zion awakes, puts on her strength, and pleads for the power of the Holy Spirit, and watches for souls; then our day of Pentecost will have fully come.

Children's Meetings.—Mr. T. Lewes Sayer will gladly send a copy of his leaflet, "Helps and Hints to Workers in Conversational Meetings for Young People," to anyone who may desire it, on receipt of an addressed postal wrapper. His address is, "Lyndhurst," Stapleton Hall-road, Stroud Green, N.

PRINCESS MARY VILLAGE HOMES.

About twenty miles from London, in the pretty little village of Addlestone, there stands a group of nineteen cottages, called after their patroness, the Duchess of Teck, the "Princess Mary Village Homes." They form one of Mrs. Meredith's Institutions, and were founded in 1871 for the reception of the female children of criminals. On Friday last the friends of the Homes crowded every available seat in the chapel, which has recently been erected, and joined in the somewhat ornate thanksgiving service with which the festal day commenced. Then they adjourned to the schoolroom, where the children, evidently to their own delight, as well as to the delight of the audience, sang and were drilled to the accompaniment of music. Informally the principal guests of the day, the Bishop of Derry and Mrs. Alexander, Lady Whittaker Ellis, Dean Campbell, Dean Bagot, General Sir A. Lawrence, and others, arranged themselves to the right and left of the chairman, Rev. J. E. C. Colquhoun, behind the bank of flowers which separated the improvised platform from the body of the hall; and the real business of the day commenced. Sympathetic letters were read from the Princess Mary of Teck (who was absent on account of the death of her mother, the Duchess of Cambridge), and Sir H. S. Ibbetson. The chairman, in a brief speech, brought to the notice of the meeting the fact that in these Homes the family life is carried out on behalf of those who have naturally no family life of their own. He ended with the words: "There must be infirmities in such a work as this, but we are doing it in the Master's name, and work so done He will never refuse to bless."

Mrs. Meredith read the report, which stated that there had been received into the Homes during the year fifty-three girls, thirty-three of whom had been committed under the Industrial Schools Act. Twenty-eight girls had been sent to service. The treasurer had received £5175, and at the end of the year there was a balance of £204. "We felt," said Mrs. Meredith, "that we must retain some of our elder girls, who for various reasons were unfit for service, and we are building for them a cottage. We want also a house in London, and more deaconesses to help us in the work." The plan of family life adopted in the Homes had been successful, she said, and, with but few failures, the children of the vilest had become the true children of God. Then uprose the Bishop of Derry, who, as he explained, was visiting the Homes for the first time. He thought that the means adopted were the right means, and he could not conceive a better way of doing good to these children than by setting them in the midst of the home life of which they had been deprived. Referring to recent revelations from the East-end of London, he said that, when one learnt there were places of the earth full of such darkness and criminality, it was impossible not to recognise the excellence of the objects of such a Home.

HAZELWOOD, RYDE, I.W.—The sixteenth annual report of this Home of Rest and Recreation for Commercial Young Men affords abundant evidence of the great usefulness of the institution. As is well known, the Home is under the management of a committee selected from the members of the Y.M.C.A., who are subscribers to Hazelwood. During last year 1259 young men were admitted, and although about forty bedrooms were provided out of the house, hundreds of applicants had to be refused. The extension project is likely soon to be realised. We are glad to learn that a ready response has been made to demands for the general fund, as well as substantial sums contributed towards the proposed extension. The highest object, the winning of souls to Christ, has ever been kept in view, and by God's grace many inmates have received blessing. All communications should be addressed to the Secretary, at the Home.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

THE beginning of the fourth annual Summer School found about 400 men on the grounds, ready for service, hailing from all parts of the States. Some 100 institutes will be represented, if all who have promised to come are present. These twelve days are for the recreation of the whole being. Elaborate preparations have been made in advance to ensure success. Money has been raised for the entertainment of forty visiting students from British universities, and for a large number of Japanese students in America. As usual, outdoor games of various kinds will alternate with the weightier matters of Bible exposition and study.

Brilliant scholars and deep thinkers are announced; but, as no programme is given, we can only give the story of a day when it is over. "Last year, when in Oregon, I found a Socrates," says Mr. Moody, "and beside him I am as a child." This man, Rev. Dr. Driver, of the Pacific Coast, has been at Northfield during the closing exercises of the school year, and has, by his tremendous spiritual power, won a host of friends. Dr. Pierson held open discussions while at the Northfield Hotel, and those privileged to be present were well repaid by this friendly battle of giants, as they discussed the loftiest themes that pertain to God and man.

One feature of the Conference is the time devoted to the mission movement, to which Mr. Moody gives special prominence. Mr. R. P. Wilder, a young man of rare magnetic power, himself the son of a missionary, now of Union Seminary, N.Y., has been its recognised leader, and has been travelling ever since among the colleges of the country and visiting churches.

At the opening meeting the exercises were quite informal, a goodly gathering listening to Mr. M. H. Hodder, of London, R. C. Morse, and others. Since the last gathering, a new village church, with sittings for some fifteen hundred, has been built; and on Sunday, the second day of the Convocation, Dr. Driver preached on "The Bible and Inspiration." An acquaintance with law, familiarity with legal terms, and the possession of a mind of singularly keen perception, fit him to cope with this theme.

Special attention has been given to work among college students in this country for two years past and more. Mr. S. M. Sayford, an evangelist of peculiar fitness for this service, has just returned from an extensive tour, having been received everywhere with heartiness. The students of Amherst College have raised funds sufficient for the work of nine months past, and have undertaken this burden of supporting him for another year. A new impetus has been given by such a visitation to religion in our large institutions, and the result is seen in such a Convocation as this. Mr. L. D. Wishard, one of the earliest to enter into this special field, and one of the leaders of the Y.M.C.A., has been in Japan for some time, and is now holding a summer school akin to this in Kyoto. He plans to establish in foreign lands college associates similar to those in the United States, to work in harmony with them.

The Japanese students are to hold a prayer and testimony meeting among themselves daily at 8 a.m. This is one of the delightful features of the Conference—the gathering of students in small parties, meeting in ravine or glen or under the old trees, with some teacher in the centre, who is questioned on the difficult problems of life, and on hard passages in the Bible, not in a critical way, but from a heart anxious for truth.

Early in the session Mr. Moody gave his famous sermon on the threefold aspect of grace. Towards its close he came to close quarters with his young audience. Most college men, he said, are afraid of being peculiar. Better one red-hot Christian than an army of these fellows. Any man can go with the crowd; but we want young men who can go against the current, and go contrary to an ungodly world. You go through college but once. Perhaps you can do more for the Son of God in these four years than in all your life. Let the world see who is your Master. The eager upturned faces of the students, many of whom heard Mr. Moody for the first time, betrayed their interest in this marvellous man, who, with the iron gray sprinkled in his hair, has a heart as buoyant and elastic as when in the early years he chased the rabbit through the woods and ravines which add so much to the beauty of these grounds.

In the services of the day, Mr. R. P. Wilder spoke of letters received from Mexico, China, India, and Japan, showing the great need in those fields; he was convinced that if this need were met the world might be won speedily to Christ. He told of workers necessary—one missionary to every 50,000, and one native helper to every 1000, being, in his opinion, sufficient for the purpose. That gives 5000 for India, 7000 for China. Three reasons keep men from this work—ignorance, selfishness, and exemption. A Yale graduate here two years ago had a sharp struggle, but decided to go abroad, and for two years he has been blessed in his work at Tokio, others spoke in a similar view. The dominant thought seems to be, Let nothing be done from mere impulse or in a flash of enthusiasm; but from a deep determination to do the Lord's work in any field, however remote, which He may indicate.

Dr. Driver preached a forcible sermon on "Paul at Athens," a discourse full of brilliant illustrations, and in a style to keep the attention of all to the close.

SASKATCHEWAN.—Rev. A. H. Wright, Prince Albert P. O., Saskatchewan, Canada, desires to thank the many friends in England, Scotland, and Ireland, France, and Ontario, who kindly sent literature in response to his appeal. He has been much cheered and helped, and he trusts that others will assist, as the need for good literature is great.

WHAT INJURES THE BRAIN?—"It is not intellectual work," says The Hospital, "that injures the brain, but emotional excitement. Most men can stand the severest thought and study of which their brains are capable, and be none the worse for it; for neither thought nor study interferes with the recuperative influence of sleep. It is ambition, anxiety, and disappointment, the hopes and fears, the loves and hates of our lives, that wear out our nervous system and endanger the balance of the brain."

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN IN PORTSMOUTH.—Those who know anything of the temptations of a garrison and seaport town, need hardly be reminded that, for poor girls who have made one false step, the downward course is rapid indeed if no helping hand is held out. The Portsmouth Ladies' Association seeks to raise up those that are fallen, and to keep others from the fatal downward step. We earnestly invite those whose hearts are touched with the love of Christ to help us in carrying on our work of rescuing little children from a life of sin, and enabling young women to support themselves and their infants respectably.

THE MASS IN MASQUERADE.—The Bishop of Bedford must have found himself in strange company, I fancy, on a recent occasion, when he assisted at the laying of the foundation-stone of the Christ Church (Oxford) Mission Church at Poplar, by the Duchess of Albany. Eight lighted candles, an elaborately embroidered "altar" cloth, crosses, a crucifix by the side of the small lectern which serves as a pulpit, pictures, banners, men and boys in scarlet cassocks, and "sisters" in hideous dresses and with crosses dangling from their necks, constant bowings to the "altar," and so on, and so on. All this in a small building (humbly called a "mission-room") which will hold less than two hundred people. Surely it would have been impossible to crowd more Ritualism into the space, or to do more to impress the dock labourers who live about there with the notion that the religious life is a matter of forms, ceremonies, and ecclesiastical millinery.—City Press.

A GENEROUS GIFT.

DEAR SIR,—You will be glad to hear that Mr. T. A. Denny has erected, at his own cost, a Dock Labourers' Shelter, in connection with the Emigrants' Home. Those who know anything about the condition of the dock labourers will understand what a great boon this will be to the poor fellows in winter, while waiting for work at the dock gates.

Who will follow Mr. Denny's example? The other docks are in want of similar shelters.

Yours truly, A. WILKÉ.

ITALIAN CHURCH REFORM.

THE first annual meeting of the Italian Church Reform Association was held at St. James' Hall on Friday last. The Archbishop of Dublin (Lord Plunket) presided. Canon Money spoke of his long and intimate acquaintance with Italy, especially Venice, and he assured his hearers of the need there is for such a movement as that now being made by Count Campello, and his co-workers. Rev. J. J. Lias, English chaplain at San Remo, spoke of the Count's work in that place, and of the great enthusiasm with which he had been received there by the Italian population. He refuted the charges brought against the Count, of Romanism and socialism, and bore strong personal testimony to his religious zeal. Mr. Kimber spoke of the needs of Italy, and of how well this movement met them.

All the speakers impressed those present with a sense of the desirability of Count Campello's Reform Movement, of its genuine character, and of its religious earnestness. By more than one reference to our own English Reformation they showed how strongly the sympathies of English Episcopalians should be enlisted in such a movement as the present.

NATIONAL PENSION FUND FOR NURSES.—As upwards of one thousand annuity proposals have been obtained from nurses, this fund is now legally constituted. The four city merchants who had deposited the £20,000 as security for the policy holders have now given this money absolutely to the fund.

GIBRALTAR SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE.—Many letters have been received recently by the superintendent (Mr. George Holmes) from soldiers and sailors now dispersed in various stations. These letters told of much blessing received by the writers whilst serving on the Rock. One thanks God that he ever went to the Institute at Gibraltar. An engineer, who professed conversion last year, says that since he decided for Christ he has been kept in perfect peace. He greatly misses the meetings at the Institute. Mr. Holmes, who has been the superintendent for eight years, is about to leave, and the committee are endeavouring to supply his place by some lady of tried experience in Christian work. Communications may be sent to the hon. secretary and treasurer, Colonel H. S. Clarke, 6, Berkeley-terrace, Wimbledon.

MEN-SERVANTS' MISSION AND HOMES.—Situate at 14, Sloane-terrace, Chelsea, S.W., and 162, Warwick-street, Ebury Bridge, Pimlico, S.W., the Homes for men and women servants serve a very useful purpose. The Christian Servants' Association, a kind of inner circle, numbers about 200 members; during last year two of these entered the London City Mission, and others are also engaging in definite Christian work. The record of the twenty-second year's operations states that there are in England 1,230,406 domestic servants in gentlemen's houses, lodging-houses, and tradesmen's families; 26,476 inn and hotel servants; and 40,000 men servants. It is estimated that there are always 15,000 female servants in search of places in London alone. Last year 217 were received into the men's Home, and 200 into the women's. The field is very large, and we rejoice to learn that the endeavours of the Mission are not without fruit. Letters regarding the work should be addressed to Mr. J. Goodchild, 14, Sloane-terrace, Chelsea, S.W.

For the Young.

WANTED!

Hearts are wanted! hearts for Jesus:
Hearts with warm affections true;
Free to love and serve Him only,
Free his glory to pursue.

Hands are wanted! hands for Jesus:
Willing hands to toil away
In whatever service needed,
While as yet 'tis called to-day.

Feet are wanted! feet for Jesus:
Feet to carry news of Him
Who upon the cross of Calv'ry
Died the guilty to redeem.

Mouths are wanted! mouths for Jesus:
Lips to magnify his name,
Tongues to chant his ceaseless praises,
And to spread abroad his fame.

All are wanted for the Saviour:
All are wanted—wanted now!
Who will make the blest surrender?
Who themselves the Lord's avow?

Who will serve the best of Masters—
Loving, gentle, tender, true?
Who supply what He is wanting?
Dearest child, will you? will you?

ALBERT MIDLANE.

UNCONSCIOUS INFLUENCE.

Sitting one day beside a lake, I saw a small boat in the distance with three or four boys in it. As it approached, I heard thin, reedy notes of music, for one of the boys had a tin whistle with him, and was playing as his companions rowed. At first I only caught a stray note or two, but as the boat neared the shore, the tune became distinct: it was "God save the Queen." Then suddenly from the road behind me came a much sweeter sound—a rich, full, manly voice, chanting the same loyal old anthem. Doubtless the song had, perhaps unconsciously, been called forth by the notes of the whistle.

Do we not often feel that it is almost impossible for us to glorify our King? We have so little time, so little power, so little influence—surely we can do nothing. Let us think of the boy in the boat. He had only a penny whistle; its notes were not beautiful, but they were true; they were not powerful, but he gave them out with all his might. And the result was that a stronger, sweeter song was called forth to waken the loyalty of all hearers.

Can we not do this? If our lives are showing forth the praise of our King, it matters little how small the details or how mean the opportunities, the loyalty of others will be kindled, whether we are aware of it or no. The boy in the boat perhaps never heard the song his music had called forth, but it gladdened others.

Only let us be sure that the music of our lives, however low and poor, is true; that none can mistake what tune we are playing; and other hearts are sure to take up the strain, and perhaps ring out a far finer, sweeter song to the praise of Him whom we so dearly love.

The singer in the road would not have been inspired to his song but for the thin, poor notes of the whistle; and so, perhaps, when we look back from our Father's home on "life's finished story," we may find that many a life of glorious melody has been tuned by some poor, hidden, homely song, sung by trembling lips.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., July 21, 2 Chron. xx. 14—30; Mon., July 22, 2 Chron. xxii. 1—12; Tues., July 23, 2 Chron. xxiii. 1—11; Wed., July 24, 2 Chron. xxiii. 12—21; Thurs., July 25, 2 Chron. xxiv. 1—14; Fri., July 26, 2 Chron. xxiv. 15—25; Sat., July 27, 2 Chron. xxvi. 11—23.

CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL IN JERUSALEM.

There are many little children in the city of Jerusalem where the Saviour used to walk—many who have not been told about the Lord Jesus. Would you like to help them to hear of Him? Dr. and Mrs. Sandreczki have for years been engaged in seeking to heal little sick ones, and tell them of the Lord Jesus who died to save them. You may like to hear about two or three of these.

A little child lost the use of her legs when six months old. Dr. Sandreczki, when called to attend its father, saw the baby, and reproached the parents for not taking more care of their child. He told them that if they would bring her to the hospital he would try, with God's help, to do her good. They brought the child, and much care was bestowed upon her. She was bathed every day, rubbed, fed, and electricity was applied. She began to speak, to stand, to walk. The result repaid the trouble. The parents thank God for raising up kind people to have a Home for poor children, where they are so well cared for.

A young girl, with a crooked spine and contracted knee-joint, was nearly a year with Dr. and Mrs. Sandreczki in the Home. Plaster of Paris corsets were applied, a new knee formed, and she is able to walk, even up and down a high staircase. Her crutches are laid aside, and she has a very happy face.

A little while ago a youth was brought from Safed, rather older than the age at which children in this Home are generally received. This was told to the father of the youth, and he wept bitterly. "Oh! let him stay. Cure my son. Cure him as you cured others."

Mrs. Sandreczki devotes much time and tender sympathy upon the sufferers. A Jewish girl was paralysed. Her toes and fingers were contracted, so that she was totally unable to move, and could not even feed herself. After she had been in several hospitals, she was dismissed as incurable. The parents brought her to Dr. Sandreczki, and several influential Jews requested him to do his best for the child. The Doctor said the cure was very improbable, as the paralysis had continued for two years, but that he would try. After a six months' course of medicine, electricity, massage, baths, &c., she was able to go out of the hospital jumping with joy, and she spent the Passover with her parents.

Another child, a Protestant girl from Akka, an adopted daughter of the widow of the Protestant Arab pastor of Akka, had a fall on her knee. Her knee was contracted; her leg much shortened, and the spine drawn towards the shortened limb. She could only walk bent on one side. She was taken into the hospital for her knee to be lengthened and straightened, and after treatment for thirteen months this was accomplished. The poor girl was thought of little use. She was penniless, with her mother in great poverty, because she does not receive any pension. But the girl has found a nice Christian home with the English deaconesses in Jerusalem.

Would some of you happy English children like to help in the work of healing children in Jerusalem, and telling them of the Lord Jesus? If so, write and ask for further particulars of Miss Mary E. Butler, 7, Park-villas, Charlton-road, Blackheath, London, S.E.

THE CHILDREN'S FRESH-AIR MISSION affords the benefit of country air to such children of the London poor as stand in need of it. The little ones are boarded for two or three weeks, as the case may be, in country cottages, under the supervision of responsible persons resident in the neighbourhood. Last summer 2154 children, dwelling for the most part in the districts of Holborn, Clerkenwell, and St. Luke's, enjoyed the benefits of the Mission. The treasurer is Mr. Walter Hazell, 15, Russell-square, London, W.C.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE FETE.

The usual National Temperance Fête was held on Tuesday last week, at the Crystal Palace. In addition to outdoor meetings and demonstrations, there was a breakfast and conference, presentation of educational prizes, temperance choir contest, recitals of Mr. Gough's orations, and two concerts by 5,000 and 4,000 singers, all being total abstainers.

The most important feature in the day's proceedings was the breakfast, at which many of the delegates to the World's Sunday School Convention were present. The Bishop of London, who presided, spoke earnestly of the importance of reaching the young. Dr. Cuyler, who had spoken at the fête fifteen years before, made a characteristic speech, and referred at some length to the fortunes of the Prohibition movement in the United States. In only one State is the Prohibition experiment working successfully—Kansas, where all admit that it is a genuine success. In some of these States that have voted against constitutional prohibition, they have local prohibition, which is working splendidly. He urged co-workers in England to give heed to the fact that in America they have ignored too much the great fundamental idea of converting the personal conscience to personal hostility to the drinking usages.

Countess Wedel-Jarlsberg, of Norway, gave an interesting account of temperance work in that country. They have a temperance society of 100,000 members. This is large when it is remembered that there is only a population of 2,000,000. Pastor Backman (Sweden) said many of the people of the country believed it was right to drink intoxicating liquors as much as possible. This was owing to the fact that a former king had built brandy distilleries all over the country, in order to replenish the State treasury. Mr. Palm, in 1875, returned from England and planted the banner of abstinence. In one year he formed forty societies. There are from twenty to thirty thousand Blue Ribbonists. The State contributes £1000 per annum towards the temperance work in Sweden.

Mr. Isaac Bunting (Japan) said that in Japan there is practically free trade in liquor. Mrs. St. John confirmed Dr. Cuyler's statements as to Kansas, and delivered the most eloquent and stirring address of the morning. Among the other speakers were Rev. John Robbins (Nova Scotia), Rev. John J. Smallwood (Massachusetts), Sir Wilfrid Lawson, and Mr. John Wilson, M.P.

DISTRESSED WIDOWS.—The new report of the Society for the Relief of this class states that two hundred and ten poor widows were relieved during 1888, to the amount of £367 15s. The committee remind the lady friends of the Society that gifts of left-off wearing apparel, whether for adults or children, are most acceptable for the purpose of supplementing the grants of money. Gifts of periodicals, religious tracts, and suitable books for distribution are likewise solicited. The office of the Society is at 32, Sackville-street, London, W.

SOUTH AMERICAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—Sir,—Mr. George D. Coleman, in his letter from Iquique, in Chili, says, "The South American Missionary Society has the Tierra del Fuego Mission, and one missionary at Lota." This statement is (no doubt unintentionally) misleading. The Society is working at Lota, Chanaral, Las Animas, Coronel, and Quino, and has worked at Callao and Santiago, and in Araucania in former years. It is also working now, not only in Tierra del Fuego but at Keppel Island, Wollaston Island; among the Indians of the Paraguayan Chaco, Fray Beutos, Concordia, Salto, Cordova, Tucunnan, Rosario, Rio, Pernambuco, San Paulo, Santos, the Alexandra Colony, Patagones, Chupat and Panama.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

FIELD DAY AT THE ALEXANDRA PALACE.

N Tuesday last week the twenty-fourth anni-ersary of the Salvation Army was celebrated t the Alexandra Palace, in the north of Lon-on. With its extensive grounds, it had been pecially hired for the day; the usual amuse-ents were suspended, and the sale of intoxi-ants prohibited. During the day, some fifty housand persons passed the turnstiles, and of ese probably thirty thousand were Salvation oldiers. Meetings of a varied character were eld, including separate demonstrations in onnection with the rescue, foreign, and junior ork respectively, junior soldiers' consecration ervice, ex-prisoners' and bandsmen's demon-ration, &c.

The "Great Solemn Assembly" in the nave the Palace was somewhat of a novelty: it as estimated that at least sixteen thousand ersons were present at this service. The un-sual feature in Army meetings was the quiet at prevailed throughout, except during the nging of hymns. There was a set programme, rinted in a special issue of The War Cry, which as closely adhered to. Towards the close Gen. ooth invited all desiring salvation, soldiers ho were backsliders in heart, and officers who esired fully to consecrate themselves to the ar, to come on the orchestra, which had been served as a kind of "penitent-form." In sponse some 1200 went forward, professedly eking either pardon, restoration, or sanctifica-on. Later in the afternoon there was a march ast the General of 20,000 soldiers with bands aying and colours flying. This was an im-osing spectacle, and was witnessed from the opes of the hills by an enormous crowd.

In the evening a musical festival took place the nave of the Palace, which was even ore closely packed than at the Solemn ssembly. About fifty bands (including thirty g drums), besides a large tambourine band, ok part, most of these all playing at the me time. There were also on the orchestra, convicts' habiliments, about one hundred ficers and soldiers who have been imprisoned connection with the work. The day's pro-edings were terminated by a torchlight rocession in the park.

Many regrets were expressed that Mrs. ooth was unable to be present, owing to her treme weakness; fervent prayer offered on er behalf.

We would direct attention to the new penny onthly record of Army rescue work, entitled he Deliverer. The first issue has an excellent ortrait of Mrs. Bramwell Booth, a stirring tter from Mrs. Booth, Sen., and much in-resting matter bearing on this important anch of effort. We hope The Deliverer has great mission of hope and help in store for it.

A MISSIONARY BOOK FUND is in operation connection with the Church Missionary Society. correspondent writing on the subject says: Christians in England, with their comfortable urches, &c., do not at all realise the position of issionaries, and the sooner we are roused to mpathise practically with them, the better it will for ourselves." Any wishing to help on this good ork can write to Mr. H. G. Malaher, 20, Compton-rrace, Upper-street, Islington, London, N.

CAPETOWN CHILDREN'S SERVICE MISSION. This is the present name of what was formerly own as the "Capetown Boys' and Girls' Religious ciety," the fourth annual report of which is now fore us. The directors record their thankfulness God for the large measure of success which has tended the efforts of the Mission. The reports ceived from the seven branches show that the rk is being carried on with unabated zeal, with 58 members on the roll. The cry is for more rkers, and, as the work is unsectarian, the rectors hope many faithful disciples will come to eir assistance. The secretary is Mr. C. H. Mac-nald, Sea Point, Capetown, South Africa.

DR. PENTECOST IN PEEBLES.

(BY A CORRESPONDENT.)

THIS evangelist has concluded a fortnight's mission in Peebles, and the mission has been, in many ways, remarkably successful. The invitation sent to Dr. Pentecost was signed by all the Presbyterian ministers and elders in the town, and the mission was carried out with their united support. The town was divided into districts of manageable size, and a band of workers from all the churches visited every house, with an invitation card and a personal appeal to come to the meeting. The largest building in the town (Established Church) was selected as the place of meeting, and here large congregations listened night after night to the thrilling story of the cross, with blessed results to many.

Dr. Pentecost has all the fervour of Mr. Moody, and the philosophic grip of truth and accuracy of expression of Mr. Joseph Cook, while he has the profound reverence for Scripture and the vividness of illustration characteristic of both.

One of the best signs of the success of this mission in Peebles is found in the nature of the opposition which it called forth. It was everywhere spoken about, and often spoken against. Worldlings were loud in their criticism of it; but the reason was obvious. It lay in the fact that "there's no treading on the devil's toes without his crying out." A determined attack was being made on one of the most impregnable strongholds of the enemy, viz., that of worldly religion, and the enemy was roused to fierce and virulent reprisals. But the work went on, and souls were roused from indifference and led to decision.

The undoubted success of the mission lay, not perhaps so much in visible conversions (although these were not wanting), as in the mighty stimulus imparted to Christian life. The great facts of being saved and knowing that we are saved were emphasised. Christians were stirred up to a realisation of their glorious privileges and solemn responsibilities. It seemed as though the spiritual life of the churches was to be raised to the boiling point. Certainly there was such an impulse given and such enthusiasm imparted as must, we trust and believe, be fruitful along every line of Christian work, as well as in backsliders recalled and individual souls won for Christ.

BRITISH SYRIAN SCHOOLS AND BIBLE WORK.—The annual report of the important institution founded in 1860 by Mrs. Bowen Thompson, contains much that is deeply interesting. Mrs. Mentor Mott, the directress, pleads for the school for the blind in Beyrout, in which there are twelve men and lads. Moon's system of printing has been adapted to the Arabic language, and if these men can be taught to read, such of them as may give evidence of decided change of heart, and also show themselves competent, will eventually be located as Scripture readers in places where their services will be welcome. At Baalbec the Roman Catholics do their best to hinder the work, and exercise great power over some of the people. The Bible Mission at Tyre is doing good. While the Roman Catholics always court controversy, the Greeks listen attentively; the Mohammedans, however, are more easily reached. Bishop French, who has inspected the work on the spot, describes a visit of the Patriarch of Antioch to St. Paul's school, Damascus:—"The Patriarch expressed his surprise at the amount of successful work now being carried on by English and American ladies. He did not appear to regard the work in an unkind or jealous spirit, but agreed with me that it was a revival of the old days, when St. Paul had so many lady fellow-workers in the kingdom of God." The secretary is Miss Poulton, 18, Homefield-road, Wimbledon, Surrey.

Personalia.

Mr. Gordon Forlong, now resident in Wanganui, New Zealand, visits the neighbouring towns preaching the Gospel. He has good meetings, and his labours are much blessed.

Miss Guinness is now located in one of the central provinces of China, at a place called She-ki-tien, in Honan. The language and the customs of this province differ considerably from those of Kiang-su and Kiang-si, from which Miss Guinness' previous letters were written.

Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, who for some six years has been the round-the-world missionary of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, is expected to be in London before these words meet the public eye. Her address is care of Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co., Bankers, Bishopsgate street Within, London, E.C.

Rev. Sylvester Horne has completed his studies at Mansfield College, and is now on his way to Australia and New Zealand. During his absence the Congregational Church at Allen-street, Kensington, has formally elected him to the pastorate. He is expected to enter upon his duties on the first Sunday in October.

Rev. G. S. Reaney, pastor of Cavendish-street Congregational Church, Manchester, has almost thoroughly recovered from the sickness which has compelled him to relinquish all ministerial duties for a period of close upon twelve months. He has resumed preaching on Sunday, and hopes to preach twice every Sabbath, if his health permit.

Archdeacons W. L. Williams and E. B. Clarke, missionaries to the Maoris, at the invitation of the committee of the C.M.S., have come home for a short time from New Zealand, it being sixty-six years since one of them was in England. It is interesting to note that the fathers of these venerable workers were among the first missionaries to New Zealand, and set sail about the year 1822.

Mr. Grattan Guinness is still in America, and likely, apparently, to be so for some time. He has travelled since his return from Mexico through Texas, Louisiana, Virginia, Maryland, Kentucky, North Carolina, and most of the Southern States, visiting the coloured colleges. In the course of one month he addressed about 3000 coloured students, and received offers of service on the Congo from thirty of them.

Dr. Donald Stuart, of Dunedin, says a writer in The British Weekly, holds the first place in many respects among colonial ministers. His congregation is the largest of any denomination in the Southern Hemisphere; his name is a household word, especially throughout Otago. There is not a post of honour which a clergyman can occupy which he has not occupied or does not now fill. He is the father of all the educational and philanthropic movements in the province; and is the chairman of most of them, as well as Chancellor of the Otago University. It was recently said in a public meeting that if the colonists of New Zealand were at liberty to choose their own governor, nobody would have a shadow of a chance against Dr. Stuart if he were willing to stand.

Rev. Westmore Smith.—Rev. Thornley Smith purposes devoting all profits derived from the sale of his book, "The More Excellent Way" (T. Woolmer), noticed in our last issue, to the mission work of his son, Rev. Westmore S. Smith, in Hayti, where, in consequence of the war, he has suffered in finances, and has had many narrow escapes from being killed. There are few Christian workers in the island, and Mr. Westmore Smith is the only Protestant missionary in the town of Cape Haytien, which has a population of 12,000, chiefly Roman Catholics and infidels; but he is doing a good work, and his labours have been greatly blessed. He and his wife and three children have been wonderfully preserved during the bombardment of the town.

"HOSPITAL SATURDAY."—The sixteenth annual street collection on behalf of the medical charities of London was made last Saturday. Over 2300 ladies were stationed in different parts of the metropolis, and its suburbs, with boxes in which to receive the donations of passers-by. Facilities for collecting were afforded at the various metropolitan railway stations, and in other public places.

Author of "From Death into Life. An Autobiography."

XVII.—THAT UMBRELLA DID IT.

What multitudes sit in darkness, and in the shadow of death, without a thought of imminent danger. Though they know life is so uncertain, and the future dark, yet they go on as if they did not care for these things. There are others besides, and they are a great many in these days of light, who have had a taste of liberty and joy, but somehow they have lapsed into bondage again. We call these backsliders. John Bunyan represents such as persons in an iron cage; certainly implying that they are living captives rather than dead souls—dead people are not put into cages. In every mission, and in every place of inquiry, we find such persons. The question is, What is to be done with them, and for them?

There was a man with a sad countenance sitting in the corner of a pew at church. At the after-meeting, as he was still there, among others, I went up to speak to him; but I received no answer. I told him that I could do nothing for him if he did not tell me his case. I said: "How am I to know where you are, or what you want?"

He muttered something to the effect: "You can do me no good, nor any of you."

"But God can," I replied, "if you will speak out."

He shook his head, so I passed on to talk to others, who were waiting.

The following evening he was in the same place, and appeared to be very much in the same frame of mind. His countenance, if anything, was harder and sadder than before.

I said: "There you are again. I am glad you are sitting in the same corner. I know where to find you."

He made no reply, nor did he even look up. I said: "If you went to a doctor, and remained as dumb as this, you would pay your guinea, or, perhaps, two guineas, now, for nothing. Probably the doctor would walk you out, and call in another patient."

Still he made no answer. I continued: "I only hope you are not as deaf as you are dumb. You have heard words and cheering hymns to night?"

"No," he said, "there is no cheer for me; the words only condemn me more."

"I am thankful to hear that," I said. "Perhaps you will have to be worse before you are better, and then you will be compelled to cry out."

"What," he said, looking round, "cry out before all these people?"

"Yes, certainly, anywhere." He shook his head, and again subsided.

I said: "If you prefer to be quiet, and you are thus led, be as quiet as you please; but, whatever else you do, yield yourself to God, that He may do as He will with you." He still looked down, so I went away, intending to come again to him later on.

I was so much engaged with other anxious persons that I could not get back before he thought it necessary to go away.

The next evening I looked towards his corner, and there he was. I took courage at this; but all in vain, he would not utter a word, and went away as dismal as he came. The following evening he was not in his place, and I regretted that his name and address had not been taken, for I had become interested in him. On returning home, however, I heard that he was in church, though I had not seen him.

The fifth evening I fell upon him again. He said: "You made me feel very miserable when you passed me last night without a word."

I answered: "I did not see you; but what is the good of speaking to you when I get no response. It is like shooting in the dark."

"Oh, it is dark enough," he said. "I don't know what to do."

"Do?" I repeated; "do nothing, but believe on Him who has done and finished all."

As he again subsided, I was constrained to speak somewhat sharply. This did not rouse him any more than smoother words. At last I handed him over to my dear wife who was passing by at the moment. She elicited from him that he was a backslider. I had begun to suspect it was so; but when she told me this I went back and asked him what he was doing about his backsliding?

"Oh, I do everything I can," was his reply; "I pray and read, and ask for mercy over and over again, but God will not have mercy on me any more.'"

"Is this so?" I said. "Why, I could not be as hard as that. And do you want me to believe that God is worse than I am? That will not do with me. Have you been asking God to convert you again?" He nodded assent. "And have you promised never to backslide any more?" He nodded again.

I said: "These are two good reasons why your prayers are not answered. Tell me when and how you were converted."

He replied: "It was more than three years ago. I stood fast, firm, and happy for more than a year, then I fell into sin. I asked God to forgive me, and He did, I am sure of that; but I fell again, and went on. Then I gave up prayer, and left off going to services and meetings. I felt like a man who was given over, and could get no pardon again. My wife said to me: 'If that is all religion can do for a man, don't talk to me about it.'"

I said: "There is a text in Scripture for a man like you, which does not fit anyone else: 'I will heal their backsliding; I will love them freely; for mine anger is turned away from them' (Hosea xiv. 4). Read that carefully when you go home, and ask God, upon your knees, what it means, and whether it refers to you. You have made two mistakes: First, you suppose that God can convert people twice; and, secondly, that you can keep yourself. It is like this," I said, taking my umbrella in my hand—"it is like this, look here; so saying, I put my finger on the point of my umbrella. Suppose that is the door, or the place and time when you were converted, and that you walked with God, say for two years—passing my hand upward, along the umbrella—you came to this place, and here you fell, you know how—here is the gap in the hedge of the narrow way, where you broke out. Do you see? Now God cannot forget all the way He led you those two years. You pass them over altogether, and go back to the place where you started originally. That will not do; you must come back to the gap here, where you slid back—here ask God to forgive you, and heal your backsliding."

For the first time I saw a ray of hope in the man's countenance. I said: "Do you understand what I mean?"

"Yes, I do," he answered, looking up into my face at last. I said: "Now, let us pray"; and, after a short prayer, I bid him go home and have a definite transaction with God about his case.

The next day my wife brought the man up to me again; but his face was so changed I did not know him.

"Yes," he said, "thank God, it is all right, it was that umbrella did it—I saw it all quite clear."

There was no necessity to cross-examine him. I said: "Now trust God to keep you in future. You fell because you tried to keep yourself."

"Thank you," he replied, "God bless you"; then he added: "I have my wife here, will you come and speak to her?"

A very little conversation brought her to the point of decision. She broke down thoroughly, and said that she was the cause of her husband's backsliding. "Tell God that, too," I said, "and ask him to forgive you all, and to change your heart. It is his will that husband and wife should be one in soul as well as in body."

She found peace with God before she left the church, and went away rejoicing together with her husband.

THE CENTRAL SUDAN.

It is proposed by Mr. Graham Wilmot-Brooke to write a monthly letter to home friends, describing his experiences in endeavouring to enter the Central Sudan by way of the Niger. The first of these letters is to hand. It is mainly taken up with a most interesting account of the outward voyage of himself and his companion, Mr. E. Shaw, in the steamer Roquelle. We reproduce one or two of the closing paragraphs. Printed copies of the letter may be had by sending a penny stamp to Mr. T. Arthur Garnett, 33, King-street, Manchester:—

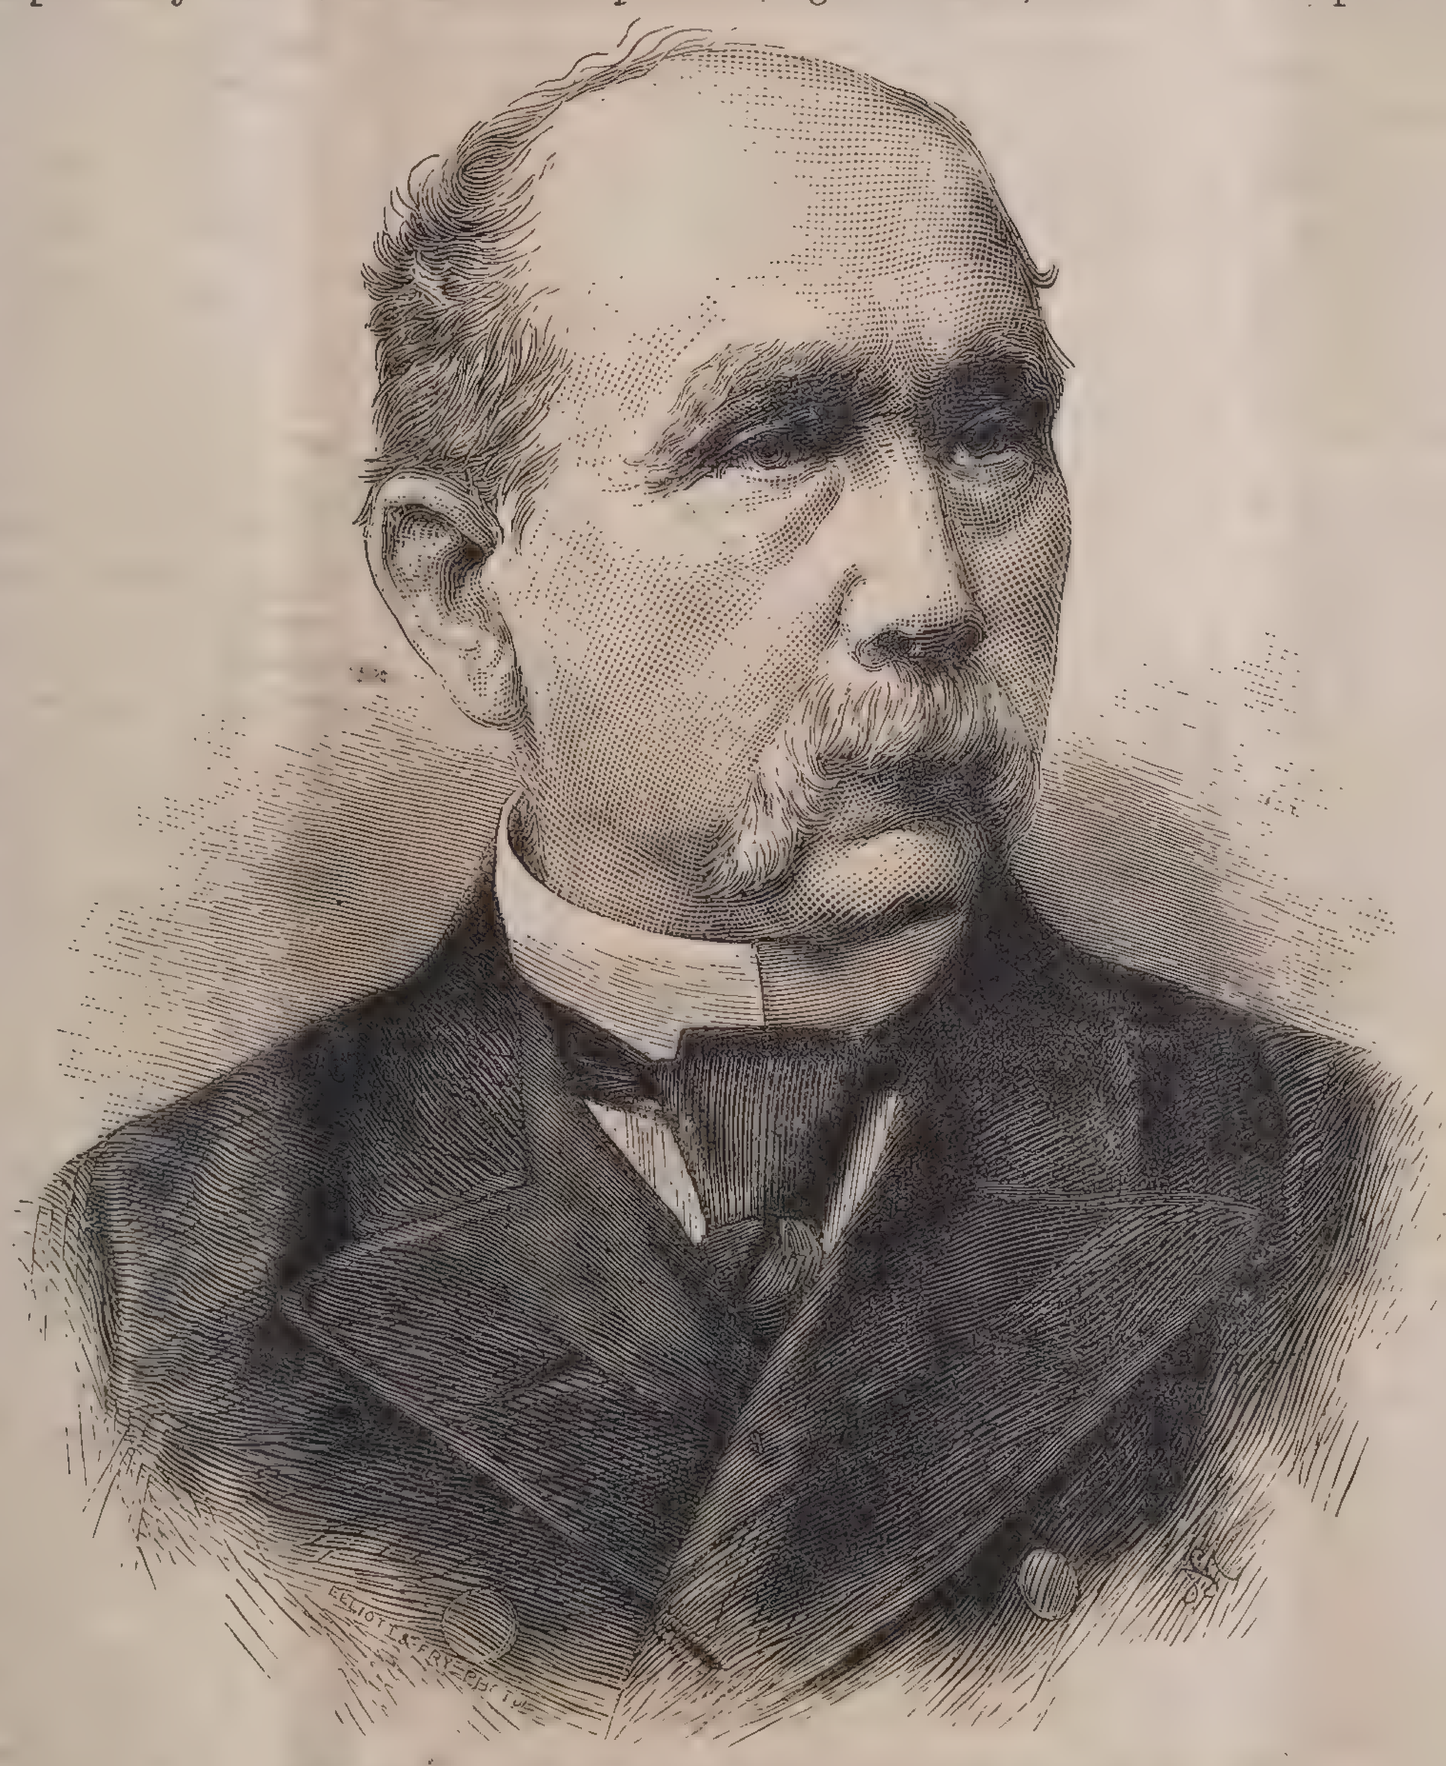
April 17.—Landed at Brass after breakfast, and went to the Mission-house to pay our respects to Bishop Crowther, who, with his son, the Archdeacon of the Lower Niger, is staying here for a few days. Got a great deal of information about native customs and superstitions. The Bishop's life has been a singularly eventful one; he has had some very remarkable experiences....Talked over plans in the afternoon, in view of our long detention down at the coast. It was eventually decided that I should go to Lagos to search out and engage a Häusa boy, in the Häusa quarter of the town, with whom to commence study of the language; while Mr. Shaw would remain on the Henry Venn till my return, as there seemed to be considerable openings for preaching by interpretation in the large native villages in the neighbourhood.

April 19.—Service in the church in the morning. In the afternoon three of us got into the dingey of the steamer, and rowed away up a narrow creek, with black mud banks covered with bushes, to Tuwon, the nearest native town, said to contain 2000 inhabitants, of whom the Bishop said about 1500 men never come to hear the preaching. We had with us the interpreter who interprets for the local native clergyman, who is himself but imperfectly acquainted with the language. We found a group of thirty or forty gamblers, who readily suspended their game when we sat down among them, some twenty or thirty others coming too when we began to speak. One of our number spoke at some length, a sentence at a time, through the interpreter, after which another spoke in "pidgin" English, which some seven or eight of the audience understood.

April 20.—Walked some three miles through lovely forest to-day, with Mr. Robinson and the interpreter, to Small Fish Town. We were not well received, the old chief being with difficulty persuaded to allow us to speak for half an hour. These people said that various mission agents or native Christians had visited them four or five times before.

LITERATURE FOR INDIA.—Rev. J. H. Bateson, Wesleyan Chaplain, Umballa, India, writes to say that the Christian literature sent to him by kind friends has been very helpful in his hospital visitation, and he has also been enabled to supply other workers to some extent. His stock was fast diminishing when he wrote, and he hopes that English friends will replenish it from time to time.

LICHFIELD HOUSE, ROYAL PARADE, EASTBOURNE, a holiday and convalescent home for boy clerks and youths employed in houses of business, comes to the help of a class who greatly stand in need of Christian sympathy. The home has twenty beds; the payments of visitors range from five to fifteen shillings a week, according to earnings and positions in life. Free cases are also received occasionally. Miss Kennedy, in a brief report, tells with joy of boys having been impressed for good while staying in the Home. A goodly number of young clerks and others have gladly availed themselves of the Home since it was opened last year.



GENERAL SIR ROBERT PHAYRE, K.C.B.

WE have pleasure in giving this week a portrait of General Sir ROBERT PHAYRE, K.C.B., and a brief sketch of his life as a Christian officer for the last forty-five years.

Born of godly parents, and educated at Shrewsbury School under that distinguished scholar, Dr. Samuel Butler (afterwards Bishop of Lichfield), he began public life in the 25th Regiment Bombay Army in 1839. He retains to this day a grateful recollection of the sound religious and secular education then received, to the former of which, under God's blessing and the constant prayers of his parents and others, he primarily attributes his early repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ.

Whilst serving in the first Afghan war, from 1840 to 1843, though he did not realise it at the time, God often spoke a word of warning to his conscience; but, being very hard-hearted, he resisted these strivings and pleadings, though he was perfectly conscious all the time that he ought to obey that voice and repent.

At length, in February, 1843, an event occurred which became the turning-point in his life, by showing him plainly that he must either reject Christ personally as his Saviour or definitely accept Him. At the celebrated battle of Meanee, which was fought by that able and beloved commander, Sir Charles James Napier, G.C.B., he was shot through the left lung, and for three days was thought to be dying. Suddenly, however, he became conscious, and seemed likely to recover, contrary to the opinion of the experienced medical men attending him. That afternoon, on hearing the band playing the Dead March in "Saul" at the funeral of a brother officer who had died of his wounds, the Lord again spoke to his conscience by his Spirit and his Word (there was no one else to do so in that campaign), reminding him of early days and training, and of the absolute necessity of at once turning to God with true repentance.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, Baker-street, London, W.)

The absorbing impression conveyed to his mind was, that if he had died on the field of battle when shot down, his soul would have been lost, because his sins were unforgiven. He had, it is true, been baptized and confirmed according to the ritual of the Church of England; but, for all that, when he had to face death, and the winds began to blow, and the rains descend, and the floods of conviction came upon that foundation, he learned, as the Saviour teaches us in Matt. vii. 24—28, that nothing but being founded on Christ Himself personally, the Rock of Ages, would avail. So strong was the conviction that he was a lost sinner in the sight of a holy God that, in the language of the prodigal, he said to himself: "I will arise and go to my Father, and say unto Him, Father, I have sinned." He received grace to carry out this resolution, and eventually, after a struggle of more than two years, under the faithful discipline of the Lord, he found peace in the knowledge that he had "redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins." In short, he was born again of spiritual, not baptismal, regeneration, which is powerless to save.

About 1846-47 a Christian brother recommended Sir Robert to study McCheyne's memoirs and sermons, which he did. He at first cordially disliked that faithful record of the truth, because God used it to show him himself. Over and over again Satan tempted him to lay down that book with a resolution not to read it again, but just as often he was led by Divine grace to take it up again, until at length he learnt to value the teachings of that honoured servant of the Lord and to profit by them.

An event occurred at this time which taught him a lesson that, happily for him, he has never forgotten to this day. From what has occurred throughout the last thirty years he sees the good hand of the Lord in having thus early put him on his guard against "that other gospel," the gospel of sacerdotalism, the seeds of which began to be sown in India in 1847. Having been asked to do some work for the Lord by circulating a number of the Church Missionary Society's Reports throughout Scinde, and being only a young Christian, he thought the best person to begin with was the military chaplain, who had only just arrived from England. So, feeling sure that here at least his effort would be appreciated, he began by speaking of the blessing that the Gospel would prove to the natives of India, and ended by asking Mr. A——'s acceptance of a copy of the report, and his aid in promoting the good work. To his infinite surprise the report was rejected, and Mr. A—— informed him that he had no sympathy whatever with the work of the Society amongst the natives of India. This led the young officer to make inquiries, which resulted in his being initiated into the mysteries of Puseyism, Tractarianism, &c.

This experience was repeated shortly afterwards at the next station he was moved to, in the following manner. From 1850 to 1856 he was employed in lining out mountain roads across the Western Ghâts, connecting the Southern Mahratta country with the sea. His headquarter station was Belgaum, where two eminently able and godly missionaries of the London Missionary Society resided at that time. The military chaplain was Mr. B——. Like Mr. A——, already spoken of, he was a Ritualist of the most pronounced type, who denounced the work of the two men of God who were preaching the Gospel to the natives. He likened them and those who attended their English service on Sunday evenings to Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, whose doom all, he said, would share in the coming day!

Naturally this made a deep impression on the young officer's mind, which has never been effaced. Now, in the presence of that coming judgment so freely invoked by Mr. B——, he states emphatically that, having served for thirty years in India from that time, during which it has been his privilege to associate with the missionaries of most of the Protestant societies, he can truthfully bear testimony to the fact that sacerdotalists like A—— and B——, who nowadays almost fill the branch of the Anglican Church in Bombay Presidency, have done far more injury to the cause of Christ among the heathen than those unconverted Englishmen to whose Godless lives they are so fond of appealing as the great hindrance to the spread of the Gospel. Such slay their thousands, but Sacerdotalists their millions; because Satan clothed as an angel of light does more harm than in any other form. Moreover, corrupt Christianity in the form of sacerdotalism is so like Brahminism (which is a system of cruel sacerdotalism also) that the bulk of Hindoos who want an excuse for rejecting Christ naturally say that they prefer the system in which they have been brought up, beset though they know it to be with innumerable evils.

Early in 1857, two or three months before the mutinies broke out, Sir Robert Phayre was appointed Quartermaster-General of the Bombay Army; the story of his connection with the events of that period is too long to notice here. Suffice it to say that his services were warmly acknowledged by Sir Hugh Rose (Lord Strathnairn), the Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army, when proceeding to assume the chief command in India.

It was at this time that Sir Robert Phayre became personally acquainted with Rev. George Bowen, of Bombay, whose Christ-like life and teaching as a missionary had some time before begun to attract public attention in India. He derived special benefit from the friendship then formed, which lasted till Mr. Bowen's death, about two years ago. At this time also The Revival (now The Christian) came under his notice. He derived special benefit from the accounts therein given of Mr. Denham Smith's work in connection with the revival of 1859-60 in Ireland, and subsequently. Indeed, such refreshing did he derive from this and similar publications that he commenced a system of obtaining by each mail from England large numbers of them for circulation amongst the soldiers, particularly those in hospital, also amongst the railway and telegraph employés, &c. This continued up to the time of his leaving India in 1886. He also personally visited the hospitals every Sunday, as a rule; and, latterly, within his own command, he used to give a short service to convalescents in the surgery, which the medical officers used kindly to place at his disposal for the purpose when convenient.

Ten years after the mutiny came the Abyssinian Expedition under that able, accomplished, and deservedly respected commander, Sir Robert Napier, now Lord Napier of Magdala. Sir Robert Phayre was appointed Quartermaster-General of that expedition, and was afterwards made C.B. and A.D.C. to the Queen, for his services on the occasion.

He was appointed Political Superintendent and Commandant-in-Chief of the Cavalry Brigade on the frontier of Upper Sind, where he served from 1869 to 1872. At the beginning of 1873 he was appointed Political Resident at the Court of H.H. the Gaekwar of Baroda. The uncompromising attitude which he there assumed, in opposition to the tyranny which the then reigning Gaekwar, Mulhar Rao, was exercising over his down-trodden subjects, led to several attempts on his life by sorcery, and poison, and other means; but the Lord, in whom he told them plainly that he put his trust, delivered him out of all their machinations. What is more, the tyrant was dethroned, and now Baroda, under its present enlightened Prince, is one of the best administered native States in British India.

After Baroda, Sir Robert Phayre re-entered upon purely military service again, and in 1875 was appointed to the command of the Nusserabad Brigade. In 1878, on the outbreak of the second Afghan war, he was appointed to command a brigade in the field; and served first as brigade then as divisional commander, till 1881, at the close of the war, when he was appointed to command the Mhow division in Central India, which he held till 1886, closing the last month or two of his service as Provisional Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army, in which he had served forty-eight years.

For his services in the Afghan campaign, from 1878 to 1881, he was made a Knight Commander of the Most Honourable Military Order of the Bath, and received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament; he is now, by the goodness of God, devoting the evening of his days to testifying to the Gospel of his grace amongst soldiers, policemen, railway-men, and wherever he is invited by those who are doing the Lord's work in these stirring and perilous times.

He has published three useful works within the last two years, viz., "Spiritualism Unveiled," "The Reredos Unveiled," and "Notes on the First Three Chapters of Revelation"; the last-named work is still in progress. Copies of these may be had gratis from his agents, Messrs. Bywater, Tanqueray & Co., 79, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C.

NAPLES.—Mr. Stephen Burrowes, of the Sailors' Rest, 15, Flavia Goija, Naples, reports a visit from Mr. John Anderson, of Glasgow, in his yacht Katrina. This was cheering to the workers, and a series of free teas, given at Mr. Anderson's expense, afforded an occasion for special effort among yachtsmen and others. Mr. Charles Anderson, and Captain Thomas Darby took part in the proceedings. Ladies in Rome are moving for the establishment of a Mission in Civita Vecchia. The lack of adequate accommodation is constantly being felt at the Naples Rest; on the visit of the vessels of the British Fleet a few days ago crowds of young seamen had to leave because of want of room and helpers. Mrs. Burrowes is now in Scotland for a time, and will be glad to hear from friends at 7, Caddle Hill-terrace, Greenock.

THE FORERUNNER.

Men and angels, look and wonder!
Lo, the stone is rolled away!
Veil of darkness rent asunder,
See the dawning of the day.

Why amongst the quiet sleepers
Have ye sought the Living One?
Go and herald to the reapers
That the harvest has begun.

Corn of wheat in weakness buried,
Thou art raised a glorious sheaf.
Root in pasture dry and arid,
Thou art crowned with flower and leaf!

Now is Christ the Lord arisen,
As the first-fruits from the dead;
And the grave is not a prison
For the members or the Head.

Grace and truth in Him are centred,
Now in heaven's most holy place;
Whither He for us is entered,
Our Forerunner in the race.

ITALY AND THE SABBATH.

By Rev. JUSTIN D. FULTON, D.D.

The Italy worshipped by the lovers of art is in the past; the Italy of hope is in the future, and the material out of which it is to be built is in the present. At this time the youth of Italy are sitting in the shadow of Romanism. They are taught to go to mass on Sabbath mornings, and to give the rest of the day to pleasure. There are no Sabbath-schools in Italy worthy of the name.

The Sabbath day is not kept holy. Large numbers of working men have lost employment by going to church on Sabbath morning. If they give money to support the Gospel, they find their wages reduced. The Christians of Italy act too much as if they were living on sufferance, rather than imitating Moses when he spoke to Pharaoh as the mouthpiece of Jehovah.

King Humbert is a large-hearted, clear-brained, and fair-minded man. Crispi, the head of the Cabinet, is the bravest of the brave, and endowed with a wonderfully clear vision. Let their attention be called to the need of a Sabbath for Italy, to what a Sabbath would do for Italy, and there is small reason to doubt but they would find a way to legislate in a direction which would bring untold blessings to the people.

There is a blessing in the Sabbath which belongs to the people; also there is a blessing which the people lose who destroy the Sabbath. The loss impoverishes them. In Romish countries the beauty of woman is largely confined to the pictures that hang from the walls of churches and galleries, and not in the faces of the women that throng the churches. The Sabbath is their great need. Stand beside a Roman Catholic cathedral or conventicle and look at the faces; you search in vain for the look of calm repose, of abiding trust, of abounding hope, of joyous love. There is, instead, unrest, narrowness in feature linked with a superstitious dread and apprehension which is pitiful and painful to behold. They who keep the Sabbath obtain the proof in the handwriting of God on face and look. It is the Sabbath which gives the full sanctuary. Working men and women are on that day as rich as the richest. They find wealth and joy and peace in the unclouded face of the Sun of Righteousness. Christians of all lands, let us seek to give to all lands, and keep for all lands, God's Day of Rest.

Visitors to Paris are most comfortably put up Miss De Broen's Mission Houses, 10, Avenue Tourville, close to the Exhibition; and 205, Rue St. Honoré.

MILDMAY PARK CONFERENCE.

FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 28.

WITH CHRIST IN GLORY.

BY REV. G. F. PENTECOST, D.D.

THE subject fixed by the Conference for this hour is, "With Christ in Glory." Naturally, on the suggestion of this theme, our thoughts mount up as on eagles' wings into the glory where Christ is, and we try to associate ourselves with Him there. This will do well enough for our thoughts; but it is one thing to think of being with Christ in glory, and another thing to be with Him in glory. We will do well to consider that beautiful anticlimax of the prophet Isaiah, and learn its import in this connection: "They shall mount up with wings, as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint." In respect of being with Christ in glory, it is certainly true that, before we may mount up as on wings, to be with Him there, we must learn to walk with Him in the lowly pathway of grace down here; all the time considering Him who endured such contradiction of sinners against Himself, lest we be wearied and faint in our minds.

The first manifestation of the glory of God in Christ Jesus was in the revelation which He made

IN THE INCARNATION.

"The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory (the glory as of the only begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth" (John i. 14). Two verses further down in this chapter we are told that "of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace." Therefore, it follows, as we have already said, that before we can know anything of Christ in glory, we must be intimately acquainted with Him in grace. I suggest in this connection, without even attempting to expand them, the following simple propositions, which I advise you to ponder well, for they hold the kernel of the practical lessons to be drawn from our subject to-night:—

(1) Grace is the beginning of glory.
(2) No grace, no glory.
(3) If grace, then glory.
(4) The more grace, the more glory.*

This last proposition is of the utmost importance for us to consider; for, after all, glory is only grace in the fulness of flower and fruit; and it follows that the measure of our glory with Christ hereafter is but the measure of our grace with Him here. In this connection you will find it interesting to compare these two passages: "And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace." "But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord" (John i. 16; 2 Cor. iii. 18). "Grace for grace," and "from glory to glory." On these two strings the sweetest chord in the grand symphony of grace and glory is struck.

ALL REVELATION HEADED UP IN JESUS.

No subject in the Bible is or can be understood except as it is intrepreted by and in Him. It is pre-eminently so of this subject. In Him, as we are permitted to behold Him during his earthly life, we may see the whole subject of grace and glory illustrated. We have just said that glory is but grace worked out and culminating in character. For two and a half years Jesus walked in the lowliness of his gracious ministry among men. A little while before his death it was given Him to stand for a few moments in transfigured glory. His person and character thus radiant in glory were seen by three of his disciples. The transfiguration scene was but a miniature of the kingdom of heaven. There Christ is in his glory, and there with Him in the glory are the two representative saints of the kingdom, Moses and Elias—Moses the type of the saints whose bodies shall rise out of the grave at the time of his appearing, and Elias the type of the saints who shall be changed and caught up together with those who have slept, to meet Him in the air. For Peter, one of the eye-witnesses of this majesty, says that there "He received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." This is what we said a moment ago: that glory is the fruit and reward of character. Peter admonishes us to take heed in our hearts to this transfiguration scene and its lessons, by searching the Scripture, until this promised Day-Dawn and Day-Star arise. For if we walk with Him in the lowly humiliation of his grace, we shall be exalted with Him in the majesty of his glory.

I. OUR LORD'S DESCENT FROM GLORY.

Jesus speaks in his great mediatorial prayer of "the glory which He had with the Father before the world was" (John xvii. 5). Just what that glory was we may not know, for we have no knowledge of the glory of the Eternal God, except as it was revealed in Jesus Christ. And in order to that revelation of his glory, He first cast it and veiled it in human nature. The Incarnation, then, in which the glory of God is at once hidden and revealed, is the real starting-place for us, not only for the knowledge of the glory of Christ, but in the pathway to that glory. At his birth we hear an outburst of praise to this glory, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, goodwill toward men." The glory of God always seems to be associated with man. This is of the infinite and eternal grace of God towards us. Therefore the glory which Jesus had with the Father before the world was, was cast, by means of the Incarnation, into human nature; there, for a while, it was veiled, and then afterward it was unveiled for a moment, as in the Transfiguration; and there, presently, it will be fully manifested in the midst of his redeemed and glorified people. By the Incarnation Christ first worked his unveiled glory into human nature, and then by means of his human ministry He manifested his moral glory through human nature; and by resurrection He lifted the human nature up into the heavenly glory, where He still sits now enthroned in it, the Man and King of Glory.

WHAT A VISION IS THIS

for a sinful man to look upon, and be permitted to hope and know that as Christ is in glory so shall he be with Him there also.

But if you and I are ever to see that glory and be associated with Him in it, we must begin where He began, down here on earth. Christ the Eternal and ever glorious Son of God, coming into union with our nature, made it possible for us to share with Him his glory. It is by means of our voluntary apprehension of Christ, in what I may call the glorious revelation of his grace, that we are permitted and enabled to take part with Him in the gracious revelation of his glory. You will find this swing in the Scriptures—from glory to grace, and from grace back to glory. It is surprising how, when searching the Scriptures for any particular truth, the whole Bible seems to be luminous with that truth only. So I have found it in connection with this inspiring theme. The central truth of inspiration seems to be grace and glory in the face of Jesus Christ.

We have said that the revelation of the glory of God is always seen

IN CONNECTION WITH MAN.

For such is his grace that He will have no glory except it be shared with man, whom He made in his own image: the favourite of the old creation, and the beloved of the new. There are three stages of this union of grace and glory set before us in the Scriptures.

(1) The early promise of man's glory.—In Ps. viii. we read these prophetic words, "What is man that Thou art mindful of him, and the son of man that Thou visitest him? For Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honour." Our knowledge of man, in his present sinful and fallen state is the farthest removed from this description of him. Lower than the angels he is indeed, but crowned with glory and honour he certainly is not. Sin and failure, debasement and degradation, mark man's life and condition everywhere. Alienated and estranged from God by wicked works, he has desecrated the fair earth and brought dishonour on the very name of God. We must look elsewhere to see the truth of this declaration, than to man as such.

(2) The fulfilment of this promise in Jesus.—In Heb. ii. the Apostle has occasion to quote this Psalm, and thus he does so, and applies it: "One in a certain place testified, saying, What is man that Thou art mindful of him, or the son of man, that Thou visitest him? Thou madest him for a little while lower than the angels; Thou crownedst him with glory and honour, and didst set him over the work of thy hands. Thou hast put all things under his feet. But now we see not yet all things put under him. But we see Jesus, who was made for a little while lower than the angels...crowned with glory and honour." This is evidently in completion of the opening declaration of the Epistle, where Jesus is declared to be "the brightness of his [God's] glory and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power" (i. 3). The prophecy concerning man, then, contained in Ps. viii., has its fulfilment in Jesus, the Son of Man—the God-Incarnate Man, and not now in our sinful race. But does the prophecy exhaust itself in this fulfilment, as seen in Jesus? We shall see further on.

ULTIMATE FULFILMENT.

(3) The ultimate fulfilment of this promise in the believer.—After showing us the fulfilment of the prophecy in Jesus, who was made for a while lower than the angels for the suffering of death, the Apostle goes on to explain why the "brightness of the Father's glory and the express image of his person," was thus incarnate in man's nature. "For it became Him in bringing many sons to glory to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings." Then he adds: "For both He that sanctifieth [Jesus] and they that are sanctified [believers] are all of one." That is, they are one piece. That is, again: what is true of Jesus the Man in Glory is true potentially of every one who is united to Jesus in grace, by faith. "For which cause He is not ashamed to call them brethren." The rest of the chapter is devoted to an explanation of the necessity for the Incarnation, to set forth the fact that it had reference strictly to men and not to angels, and to show how by means of it Jesus is able to save us.

GRACE AND GLORY.

What a setting forth of grace and glory we have here! In the beginning God made man in his own image; but man sought out many inventions, and by sin brought that image into ruin and shame. The old creation, which culminated in man, has failed through sin, and God's image is no longer seen in the race which has descended from the first and fallen Adam. But God has not abandoned man. It is true that it is utterly impossible to repair that broken image, and restore that marred likeness.

* Since delivering this address, I have been told that the above propositions are almost identical with the divisions of a sermon by the late Dr. Candlish, of Edinburgh. It is quite possible that they are from him, as I have taken them from a marginal note in my Bible. It is certain that they are none the worse, or less true, whoever first formulated them.—G. F. P.

In order to save man and bring him to glory God must do another thing. So once more He casts his image into human nature, and behold the second Adam appears, the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, Jesus the Head of the new redemption race of men. "There," says the Father, pointing to his well beloved Son, resplendent in his Transfiguration glory, and again as He is crowned with glory and honour, and seated on the right hand of the Majesty on high, "that is what I meant when I made man, and that is the destiny which I have ordained for him." Therefore, it is that those who choose Jesus as their new and living Head, abandoning the old Adamic descent by natural generation, for the new descent from Jesus through the grace of regeneration, shall at last appear with Him in glory.

If we would get at the whole truth of grace and glory, as it is in the purpose of God for us, we must needs just follow Jesus from the bosom of the Father, where He had glory from before the foundation of the world, down to this world and back again into the glory.

WHAT A SIGHT IT IS.

Leaving the Father's bosom, He decends by voluntary humiliation past all the angels, rank after rank, and is at last born of a woman, and made in the likeness of sinful flesh, taking on Him "the form of a servant," and making Himself "in the likeness of men." "For verily He took not hold on the nature of angels, but He took hold on the seed of Abraham."

And wherefore took He hold on the nature of man? Let us see. That in that nature He might purge our sins, redeem it, and lift it into the glory which He had with the Father before the world was. Therefore we follow Him, my brethren, and in Him we see ourselves; for He carries us in his heart, and bears us on his mighty shoulders as did the high priest of old. First perfecting and proving human nature in union with his Godhead, He voluntarily takes our sins and carries them in his body to the tree where through the Eternal Spirit He offers Himself a sacrifice for them. Then down from the cross and through the grave He pursues and conquers death, and returning He rifles the grave of his human body, and by resurrection immortalises it and sweeps with it back into the glory where He sits down in it on his throne for ever. Behold, that is where you are, my brethren, in Christ, seated with Him in glory. It is by union with Him only that we may share with Him the glory. This is what the whole ministry of grace means to us. Union with Christ the Incarnate Son of God is the guarantee of union with Him in glory.

II. CHRIST'S PATHWAY BACK TO GLORY.

Having seen his descent from glory, it is now our privilege to follow Him in union with our nature back to the glory, carrying us with Him. By incarnation Christ put honour upon human nature; but mere incarnation did not glorify human nature. By a subsequent ministry of trial, and suffering, and expiation, He first perfects human nature, then purges it of sin, and finally lifts it into glory. Having taken hold of us, He never lets go of us until step by step along that weary way of suffering and death He presents us faultless before the presence of his Father's glory with great joy. Let us follow Him in his pathway from earth back to glory.

(1) THROUGH INFIRMITY.

"For we have not a high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities" (Heb. iv. 15). Christ's human nature was a real one—a nature indeed without sin, but a nature sensible to every condition in which man was originally made. The Scripture does not say that He was infirm, but that He was "touched with the feeling of our infirmities." The feeling of our infirmities was a fact in his consciousness. I do not know how. No more do I know how He "was made sin for us." But I accept the plain and simple statement of God's Word here. God does not always explain his declarations, nor may we pry too curiously into things and matters that are too high for us. I accept this, and rejoice in it every time I draw nigh to Him, for his high priestly sympathy and help, that He knows what the feeling of my infirmity is, for He was "touched" with it during his own earthly life. This feeling of our infirmity, which never left Him on earth, was one of the steps in his pathway back to glory, compassed as He was, and may I say burdened, with our nature. How deep and real those feelings of infirmity were, let his nights of prayer and his moments of soul agony in some sense testify to us.

(2) THROUGH TEMPTATION.

That same verse tells us, in partial explanation of the fact of his feeling of infirmity, that He was "in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." The glorification of human nature in union with the Godhead was not mechanical, but moral. Therefore, all our Lord's human experiences were real, and not seeming only. We know that He was without sin, and yet we know that He was subjected to the fiercest temptations, yea, and in all points like as we are, was He tempted. That He was tempted, and that the temptation was real; that He felt the awful stress and strain of it (though his holy soul never for a moment swerved from loyalty to God) let those moments of almost mortal agony when under the hand of the power of darkness testify. Let his agonising cry to the Father with strong cries and tears, in the garden, speak (Heb. v. 7). This also was in his pathway to glory: that He must meet with the enemy of souls, that dark spirit that first overthrew man, and be subject to every trial which could be put upon Him, and clear the way for man back to God, by triumphing over every temptation which man is subject to. What unspeakable comfort there is in this to us: that He has passed this way before us; and what unspeakable comfort that we may appeal to Him for the strength with which to withstand temptation; all the time being helped by his real and experimental sympathy. "For in that He Himself hath suffered, being tempted, He is able to succour them that are tempted" (Heb. ii. 18).

(3) THROUGH OBEDIENCE.

"Though He were a Son, yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered" (Heb. v. 8). Yea, "He became obedient even unto death" (Phil. ii. 8). Is not this amazing, that the Eternal Son had to learn obedience? His experience in human nature was no mock one. In "bringing many sons to glory," He must walk over the hard pathway of trial and suffering and discipline by which human nature must be raised to glory. It is only when we are in fellowship with Him that we can be obedient to the Word and will of God.

SUBORDINATION AND CONSECRATION.

(4) Through the voluntary subordination of his own will to the will of the Father, and the entire consecration of Himself to the work of God.—Jesus Christ was God's well beloved Son; but He was no less his glorious Servant. "He took upon Him the form of a servant," though He was by nature and eternal right Lord of all. Behold, then, the servant of God, and see in this lowly office, Jesus taking another step forward in the pathway back to glory. His whole life was spent in doing his Father's will and meting out grace to those sinners whom He is not ashamed to call his brethren. Listen while I recall to your memory some of the many words of Jesus on this point, for I have not time to say more. "I came not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me." "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me and to finish his work." Even when yet a little boy, this mission was deeply realised in his heart. "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business." "Not my will, but thine be done." "I must work the works of Him that sent Me." And, at the last, we hear Him pleading for his reward and glory: "I have finished the work that Thou gavest Me to do. And now, O Father, glorify Thou Me."

(5) THROUGH SUFFERING.

Our Lord's life was one of mysterious suffering—suffering that came from his sympathy and service and trial. "It became Him in bringing many sons to glory to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through suffering." We do not know the depths of this mystery. Only we know that human nature could never be perfected except through suffering, and that therefore our Lord, when He took it into union with Himself for the purpose of bringing it to glory, had to pass with it through a lifetime of suffering. The relation between suffering and glory is everywhere strikingly emphasised in the Scriptures. His disciples did not understand this, and the very first lesson He taught them after his resurrection was this: "O fools and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken. Ought not Christ to have suffered these things and to enter into his glory." And, again, "Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and the third day to rise from the dead" (Luke xxiv. 25, 26, 46). It is true that the sufferings here alluded to were the sufferings that culminated on the cross, but the cross was only the culmination of a life of suffering; for from the beginning He was "a Man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." Who may know the depths of those sufferings which our Lord endured in the holy of holies of his holy soul, in being made sin for us; in being touched with the feeling of our infirmities; in being tempted in all points like as we are; and in the pathway of subordination and service.

(6) THROUGH EXPIATORY DEATH.

The last step in the way back to glory was that one in which He voluntarily yielded Himself up to the death of the cross—despising the shame and enduring the cross—that He might sit down in his glory, and have the joy of bringing us with Him to that same place. Having perfectly fulfilled every precedent condition, and passed through every possible experience entailed by his union with human nature, He now, by one offering, which He, through the Eternal Spirit, made unto God for our sin, yielded Himself up to death, and so purged our sins. Not for Himself did He do this, but for the brethren whom He loved. Having finished the work his Father gave Him to do; having perfected human nature; having purged our sin, by making an end of it; having robbed death of its sting, and spoiled the grave of its victory over man, God raised Him up, and seated Him in glory, where we now behold Him, and through faith behold ourselves seated there with Him.

III. OUR PATHWAY TO GLORY.

But beholding this glory in Jesus is one thing, and experimentally realising it is another. How, then, are we, who are still on the earth, still compassed about with infirmities, still subject to temptation, and the motions of sin in our mortal bodies, to reach that glory, and sit down with Christ in it? It is by union with Christ as the incarnate Saviour of sinners.

(1) The purpose of God's grace.—Consider the source of our salvation in the grace and glory of God. I can only cite to you the Scriptures. "In Him we have redemption, through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace" (Eph. i. 7). The strength vouchsafed us during our earthly pathway is also out of his glory, for we are "strengthened with might by his Spirit, according to the riches of his glory" (Eph. iii. 15). Even the supply of our temporal need in the meantime is "according to the riches of his glory" (Phil. iv.

19). Consider the eternal purpose of this grace toward us. The whole scene is set before us in that grand passage: "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose. For whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son" (Rom. viii. 28, 29). And again: "Having predestinated us to the adoption of children by Jesus Christ, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace" (Eph. i. 4—6). To what is this predestination? Not to salvation, as is popularly understood, but unto conformity to the image of his Son. The end of predestination is the bringing the saved ones into that same image. That is, that we should be with Christ in his glory. To this end we hear our Lord pleading, almost with his last breath, with the Father that this purpose may not fail: Father, I will that where I am they may be also, that they may behold my glory (John xvii. 24).

(2) THE CALL TO GLORY.

In accordance with this eternal purpose, we find that the call to glory is made. "Moreover whom He did predestinate, them He also called: and whom He called, them He also justified: and whom He justified, them He also glorified" (Rom. viii. 30). You see, my brethren, there is no gap between the purpose of his grace and the consummation of that purpose in the glorification of those who are included in his covenant. When God calls us by his Gospel He calls us to glory. Listen further: "Whereunto He called you by our Gospel to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ." And yet again: "But the God of all grace who hath called us unto his eternal glory, by Jesus Christ, after that ye have suffered awhile, make you perfect" (2 Thess. ii. 14; 1 Pet. v. 10).

(3) THE EXPERIMENTAL STEPS TO GLORY.

Having seen God's purpose of glory and our call to it by Jesus Christ, we are now prepared to consider the experimental steps by which we reach it. These are three. (1) By Regeneration.—This is what is meant by "Christ in you the hope of glory" (Col. i. 7). Now, here we are confronted with a truth so important that we must tarry a moment to emphasise it. Let it be known that there is absolutely no hope of glory for any sinner on this earth except that Christ, who was first incarnate for us in human nature, does, by a new incarnation, enter for regeneration into the sinner's heart. We are confronted to-day with a new gospel, which is not a gospel, which tells us that human nature is not hopelessly corrupt, but that in itself it is good, and needs only religious culture to restore it to its lost estate, and bring it into conformity to the image of Jesus Christ. But our Lord has told us distinctly that "Except a man be born again he can neither see nor enter into the kingdom of God," and Paul tells us that if any man be in Christ, there is a new creation. Let us not be deceived into seeking glory by way of improving the flesh, but rather let us apprehend that unspeakably blessed way offered us by a living union with Christ through regeneration. Thus only can and does our Lord Jesus repeat his own image in every individual believer, only in infinite variety of character.

(2) By Communion.—After God has through grace regenerated the believing sinner, He shows us the way to further transformation by means of spiritual communion with Christ. "We all with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord" (2 Cor. iii. 18). This indicates the way of progressive sanctification. Sanctification, not "by a jump," as it has been defined by someone, but sanctification by transformation and growth, through communion and fellowship with Jesus, by the Holy Spirit.

(3) By Suffering.—From first to last the believer's pathway, like his Lord's, is a pathway of suffering. Yet, let us not misunderstand. This pathway of suffering is not necessarily one of gloom and unmitigated sorrow. Our Lord had a joy in all his suffering life that enabled Him to endure the cross and despise the shame. It is so with the believer. The sufferings of the believer are of a three-fold nature. First, "He suffers the loss of all things, that he may win Christ." That is, he finds at the outset, as did Paul, that the things which were gain to him are to be counted loss for Christ (Phil. iii. 8—14). All human righteousness, all earthly estate and glory, all things that enter into the substance of human pride, must be laid aside, ay, even one's own self; for after all a man really loses nothing until he has lost himself. "If any man therefore will be my disciple, let him deny himself." Second, there is suffering in connection with the service of Christ; such, for instance, as is catalogued in Rom. viii. 17, 18; 2 Tim. i. 12, ii. 12; 2 Cor. iv. 17, et al. "If so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified together. For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us;" "For which cause I also suffer;" "If we suffer, we shall reign with Him;" "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory;" and such like passages, in all which we see that suffering is a part of the experience which leads up to glory. Third, there is an afflictive suffering which in the providence of God is also appointed for us, which seems not to be the necessary result of either testimony or service. These also work for us the "peaceable fruits of righteousness." In all this pathway we are bidden to "look to Jesus," who walked before us in this way, lest we "be faint and weary in our minds" (Heb. xii. 1—4). What the fellowship of his sufferings is every believer must find out for himself. Only this we are sure of, that suffering awaits the believer in this life, along the way to glory, if indeed he be in the pathway to glory.

IV. WITH CHRIST IN GLORY.

We have seen Christ on his way from grace to glory, and finally crowned with glory and honour, at the right hand of God. We have also seen that the pathway of the believer lies along the same way; indeed, in "his footsteps." It is now for us to see the consummation of all this in the presence of the believer "with Christ in his glory." This vision is seen in three separate scenes of glory.

(1) Appearing with Christ in glory.—When He who is our life shall appear, we shall appear with Him in glory" (Col. iii. 14). "And you who are troubled rest with us; when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels...when He shall come to be glorified in his saints and to be admired in all them that believe in that day" (2 Thess. i. 7—10). "But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. And when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away" (1 Pet. iv. 13; v. 4). That He shall appear in glory, He has Himself abundantly testified (Matt. xxiv. 30; Mark xiii. 26; Luke xxi. 27; John xiv. 1—4).

(2) BEING LIKE CHRIST IN GLORY.

Our Lord prayed that where He is there we might be with Him in glory, that we might behold it. We are told that, "It doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is" (1 John iii. 3). It would seem from this that to see Him is to be like Him, for none can see Him who are not like Him. This is to appear with Christ in the glory of character. It agrees with that declaration read by the Chairman in the opening of this session of the Conference, when in glory "there shall be no more curse: but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve Him: and they shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads" (Rev. xxii. 3, 4).

(3) REIGNING WITH HIM IN GLORY.

"If we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him." So we have read. That He will reign in glory is attested by a hundred Scriptures; but these may suffice to indicate the glorious truth. "The kingdoms of this world have become the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ; and He shall reign for ever and ever." "For Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood; out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth." "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years" (Rev. xi. 15; v. 9; xx. 6; xxii. 5). Time has not sufficed to open up these Scriptures, nor to properly set them over against the special circumstances in which this glory shall be revealed; but they are enough to indicate the general truth "that where He is there we shall be also," and shall behold his glory, and be like Him, even in body as well as character, "for our citizenship is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change these bodies of our humiliation and fashion them like unto the body of his glory" (Phil. iii. 20, 21).

Thus, my brethren, we have seen our Lord Christ veil the glory which He had with the Father before the world was, in our nature, and unveil it again; and, after He had redeemed it, lift it up to heaven and crown it with glory and honour. We have seen his pathway, and ours with Him, through grace and suffering into the glory, and ourselves seated with Him there. If this is not enough to make us glad and rejoice, what is there in earth or heaven that can? If with this glorious hope set before us, we are not able to bear, and do, and suffer, and wait patiently and expectantly till He come, what is there that the thought of man can conceive that may or can inspire us with courage, and hope, and joy? That God may send these three thousand servants of his gathered at Mildmay out from hence, filled with the hope of his appearing, and confident of their expectation of appearing with Him in glory, and in the mean time armed and inspired to every good word of testimony, and work of faith, and labour of love, is my most earnest prayer.

AFTERNOON GATHERINGS.

Young Women's Christian Association.

LORD KINNAIRD presided, on Thursday afternoon, at a meeting of the Y.W.C.A. in the North Tent. There was a very large attendance, and, although there were eleven speakers, the audience seemed never to weary of listening to the wonderful record of work. It was a lovely afternoon, and the sides of the tent were raised to accommodate the late arrivals.

After a few kindly words from the Chairman, Rev. F. A. C. LILLINGSTON explained the object and methods of the Y.W.C.A. He added a few words about the necessity for further development in the colonies; as an old bushman he realised the importance of that work.

Mrs. HATT NOBLE spoke on "The Power and Influence of Bible Study and Union in Prayer." She felt that the reason why some are departing from the faith of the Apostles is that they are so ready to substitute good books for the Bible. Apart from all consideration of commentaries and good books, let us study the Bible in the early morning, and religiously devote a set time to that purpose. After we have thoroughly studied our Bibles, we may seek help from good books.

Then came other lady speakers, in the following order: Mrs. Tottenham (Evangelisation Department), Mrs. Hind Smith (Total Abstinence), Mrs. Stephen Menzies (Missionary Work), Mrs. E. W. Moore (Travellers' Aid Society), Miss Gollock (Convalescent, Sick Aid, and Holiday), Miss Morley and Miss Gladstone (Factory Helpers' Union), and Miss Wingate (Employment Agency). The combined speeches formed a most interesting story of work, from which we gather the following: The Evangelisation Department furnishes speakers, who conduct missions and attend special meetings. It has organised a number of special conferences for workers in large provincial towns and cities. These have proved very helpful in bringing the workers together, and inspiring them with fresh zeal and new ideas for their work.

It was confessed that some disappointment is felt in connection with the Total Abstinence Department, as various branches and secretaries seem disinclined to take up the work. It is most important that the interest of secretaries should be secured, as the temptations to drink are strong, when girls come to London from the country. These should receive special counsel on this point. The missionary work of the Association has been hitherto upon a rather indefinite basis, and it was considered advisable to take up work in connection with a few special missions, rather than spend effort upon general lines. It has been decided to take particular interest in the following unsectarian missions: China Inland Mission, Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society, Congo Balolo Mission, and the North Africa Mission. It has been found impossible to disseminate the more expensive literature, so the department is preparing eight-page leaflets, which set forth the claims of foreign missions.

The Travellers' Aid Department meets young women on their arrival in London, cares for them, and procures suitable accommodation and introductions. Lodging is provided for those who arrive late at night. In this way many who arrived in London destitute have been sheltered. Two hundred and eighty have been met by appointment; but the most touching cases are those where girls have been picked up by the missionary. A Polish girl was found at the docks, with two shillings in her pocket. She was an orphan, could only speak two or three words of German, and had been robbed on her journey by the only other Pole she met. She was going to "her aunt in America." That was the only address she could remember. Her belongings indicated that she came from a superior station in life. Inquiry was made, and her story was found to be true. A lady took her into her service, and she is doing well. Arrangements have been made for the oversight of girls resident in Paris during the Exhibition. Messrs. Thomas Cook & Sons have readily assisted the department by furnishing their guides and interpreters with cards, on which are printed addresses where safe lodgings may be secured.

Girls are assisted to secure a summer holiday. They pay in a small sum weekly, and when summer comes round the Holiday Department gives them a bonus of 20 to 40 per cent. The workers of the Factory Helpers' Union visit the factories, talk to the girls, and write them monthly letters. Not the least important part of the work centres in the Employment Agency. This is conducted on business principles, and it enlarges its borders year by year. During the first year one hundred engagements were secured, and the number has increased to nine hundred in six years.

Christian Police Association.

A crowded and hearty meeting was held on Thursday, in Room 5, Mr. J. H. TRITTON taking the chair. So numerous were the friends interested that an overflow-meeting had to be arranged in Room 3, where Mr. T. A. DENNY presided. In both rooms Rev. G. C. GRUBB spoke words of earnest counsel to workers. Several of the C.P.A. secretaries gave details of the work in their branches, mentioning many answers to prayer. They were followed by members of the force, who gave bright testimonies to the blessings which had come to them through the work of the Association.

Mr. Tritton mentioned that the Police Institute, 1A, Adelphi-terrace, W.C., was still in need of help, and invited any friends who were interested to inspect it. The whole meeting was full of praise, and we trust it may be useful in raising up many fresh workers.

Foreign Missions.

On Thursday afternoon foreign mission work was impressively brought to the notice of an assembly that filled the area of the Large Hall.

Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR presided, and in opening the meeting touchingly spoke of the claims of the heathen upon the Christian world. It is not one out of a hundred who has not heard the Gospel, but rather one out of a hundred who has heard it. Perhaps there might be some present who would be willing to lay themselves at the Master's feet, to go and carry the glad tidings to these perishing souls. It will mean self-sacrifice; with holy service there must always be sacrifice; but can we not suffer the pain of parting with our loved ones for the sake of Him who willingly suffered such agony for us?

NEW GUINEA.

Rev. SAMUEL MACFARLANE, LL.D., gave some encouraging particulars of what God has accomplished through his missionary servants in New Guinea. He first related some of his strange experiences when he, with others, first went to "spy out the land," with a view to commencing work there, in 1871. They had nobody to introduce them to the people, who were exceedingly wild and barbarous; they were unable to hold intercourse with them, owing to ignorance of their languages, and they had to be extremely cautious in attempting to land, because the people were ferocious cannibals, and would think nothing of striking them down with their clubs, and cooking them for their next feast. The Gospel of Christ has now largely changed all this; in the parts where missionaries have been working a wonderful transformation has taken place. Cannibalism is unknown, superstition and witchcraft have been overthrown, and the light of life now shines in many a formerly savage heart. The missionaries have opened up about six hundred miles of coast-line, gained the full confidence of the natives, and established seventy mission stations along the southern coast. They have formed six churches, with an aggregate of about 700 members (all of whom have been thoroughly tested before being admitted), reduced six of the languages to writing and translated portions of the New Testament, school books, catechism, and hymn-book into each. There are two institutions for the training of native pioneer evangelists and pastors—one on Murray Island, in Torres Straits, and one at Port Moresby; from which there have been sent forth about forty native teachers who are now working with true Christian zeal amongst their countrymen, some amongst tribes with which, a short time since, their fathers engaged in bloody warfare. The work has entailed a great sacrifice of life, more than of the native teachers who have joined the sion having fallen victims to the climat died from other causes. Several have murdered. Dr. Macfarlane said it must to the native converts that we must look the future evangelisation of the peoples those parts of New Guinea which are enveloped in heathen darkness.

CENTRAL AFRICA.

Dr. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS made a rou appeal for Congoland and for other part Central Africa. The whole of that vast re is being opened up in a marvellous man and this involves tremendous issues for people of Christendom. Is not this the t to take the glorious Gospel there? doubtedly it is God who is opening up magnificent country to our view, and intends us to occupy it for his glory. The one will certainly not be slow to send out agents, and it behoves the Christian Churc arouse itself to the duty of sending its mess gers with the tidings of salvation to th perishing millions. In concluding, Dr. Guin earnestly called for the inauguration of s great and sustained effort to carry this out.

CHINA AND ITS NEEDS.

Mr. HUDSON TAYLOR dwelt for a few minu upon this great theme, and very earne called for consecrated workers. China is n open to receive the Gospel to-day than ever was before, and, though the Inland Miss have now three hundred missionaries labou there, they were never so distressed workers as at the present time.

Earnest prayer was offered that the Chu may be stirred up to realise more fully responsibility towards the heathen, and t the Lord of the harvest may thrust forth i every part of the world those who are nee for the spread of the Gospel.

The Railway Mission.

Mr. T. A. DENNY presided over a meeting connection with the Railway Mission in Ro No. 5 on Friday afternoon. Some interest information concerning the operations of Mission was given, the principal speaker be Miss MARY R. WILLIAMS, of Bath, who gave account of the work in that town. It commenced nearly five years ago, and it prospered most encouragingly. Numbers railway employés have been truly conver through the Mission, and in many cases wh this has been so their wives have soon follow Miss Williams has a special "Railway Miss Hall," where three meetings are held ev Sunday, and also on four nights and one aft noon during the week. A mission band been formed, the members of which M Williams says "are truly a band of men wh hearts the Lord has touched." The memb of this band, numbering forty-seven, take p in the meetings in various ways—speaki singing, leading in prayer at the Gospel me ings, and by conducting open-air services.

Mr. R. NIXON, secretary of the Missi pleaded for the co-operation of consecra Christian ladies to extend the work in pla where it has not yet been commenced, a Mr. GURNEY SHEPPARD appealed for a co valescent home for injured railway-men. anyone knows of any person who is anxious give away a good large house with accommo tion for about forty men, he said, they shou invite the owner to communicate with Nixon at 18, New Bridge-street, London, E.

Mr. W. H. Seagram spoke a few words, a several testimonies by Christian railway-m followed.

Children's Special Service Mission.

The three afternoon meetings in the North ent might be classed "good," "better," best"; at any rate as regards the attendances. he young men created a fair interest; the oung women did better; but it was left to the hildren to secure the interest of an audience hich filled the tents from platform to borders, nd away out beyond the tent poles and fringes the flower beds on the lawn. Mr. H. UTCHINSON'S kindly face beamed with delight s he stood on the rostrum and saw the manifest nterest in his "lambs." Some of these latter ere gathered on the grass at his feet. There a delightful freedom about these tent meetings. he very speakers sit upon the turf, and on Friday gruff working man came in "cos 'e 'ad 'eard s how a real live lord was acksh'ly sittin' on ne grass." He became interested in the ccounts given of beach services, and remained hroughout, gravely asserting that "Mildmay arn't such a bad place after all."

Rev. E. A. STUART presided, and heartily ommended the Mission to the sympathies of is hearers. It is a training field for young nen and women. Many pastors had received lessing at the beach services, and learnt in fter years to pay special attention to the lambs" of their flock. Many people asked ow they could help. Watch the effect of an ddress upon the children gathered round a reacher on the beach, and when you see that child is influenced, take a walk with it along ne shore, and point it to the Saviour. There a power also in the pen. Find out the birth-ays of children in connection with your branch, nd write them "birthday letters." In con-ection with St. James's, Holloway, there is a ible-class of 500 girls and young women, who eceive these letters. After we have caught the hildren we must keep them, and, therefore, ssistance is not only needed at the seaside, ut after the young people have returned home. hey need some one, spiritually minded, to care r them.

Mr. E. J. KENNEDY urged that we must not nd with simply interesting and amusing the hildren. Workers are needed to attend to the piritual wants of these "little ones." People a good class of life rush off at a tangent, hen converted, to convert the poorer classes. Ve must attend to our own folk as well. There re preachers—even preachers who come to the ildmay Conference—who speak to thousands people, and yet, if you go to their homes, you nd they have neglected their own in minister-g to others. This work is reproductive. he workers of to-day are the converts of six ears ago.

After Mr. T. B. BISHOP had spoken, Rev. L. S. TROUSDALE gave his testimony to the value the work, especially as to the advisability having a children's mission preparatory to he for adults.

Bible and Prayer Union.

On Thursday afternoon, a meeting in connec-on with this movement was held in No. 4 oom. Mr. ROBERT PATON presided, and luded to the progress of these unions. Rev. HOMAS RICHARDSON gave an interesting ac-unt of the origin and progress of the Bible d Prayer Union, which has members in ery part of the world to the number of 7,000. The members are in every class of ciety. In the first two months of this year, e secretary for the United States of America anch, received 2,600 new names for member-ip. In South America there are over 7000 mem-rs enrolled. The plan adopted is very simple.) Members agree to read in consecutive order e chapter daily, asking God's blessing on the ord read. (2) Each member to pray every nday for all the members.

Bible Carriage Work.

At the close of the Prayer Union meeting, Mr. JOHN M. MCAULIFFE spoke on Bible Carriage Work. Six years ago he resigned his position as travelling secretary of the Christian Corportage Association, to take up mission work on the way-sides of rural England. During these years he has been enabled to tell out God's glad tidings to men in some hundreds of English villages, and in many English counties—in Worcestershire, amongst the salt works; in Staffordshire, among the potters; to navvies on railways; in York-shire, amongst its foundries, tanyards, spin-ning mills, and collieries; on the lonely York-shire moors; in the fishing villages of East Scotland; to the fruit-pickers of Kent; in the hop-fields of Hampshire, and the romantic vil-lages of the Peaks in Derbyshire; to villages in the agricultural fields of Warwickshire; on the Cotswolds in Gloucestershire; in villages upon Salisbury Plains; the wheat-growing villages of Suffolk; the stocking villages of Leicestershire; the stock-grazing villages of Bucks; the shoe villages of Northampton; the beach towns on the Southern Coast; now by Derwentwater Lake, now in Northampton, now in a theatre, next in a cotton mill, or by the village corner; sometimes in the parish schoolroom, or from the reading desk of a vil-lage church, or it may be a tiny chapel, or in the public hall.

The people, as a rule, are very ignorant of the truths of the Gospel. Ritualism prevails in many places. In our Midland and Northern towns and greater villages betting, gam-bling, and kindred vices are spreading among the people. The Bible-carriage, well stocked with copies of Scriptures, penny Testaments, hymn-books, and other Gospel literature, has made several journeys of six months' duration. Many of the English counties have been visited, and the Gospel preached upon the village greens of rural England to at least an aggregate number of 100,000 villagers. Tracts and papers are freely distributed, and the workers have heard of direct blessing from their perusal. In twelve months 80,000 copies of a monthly four-page tract, "Wayside Words," have been circulated.

In addition to the visitation by day and preaching by night, special children's services are held. Mr. McAuliffe is known to thousands of English boys and girls as "Uncle John"; and the announcement that Uncle John will give a Bible talk with illustrated diagrams to children brings around the waggon a goodly crowd of little folks.

There have been direct results in conversion. As many as twenty anxious souls have been con-versed with in an evening. This Bible-carriage work is one of the grandest weapons in village evangelisation.

Open-Air Preaching.

At the close of the communion service on Friday a large crowd gathered round the old mulberry tree, whose fair leaves and freshly-formed fruit seemed at their best. Sir ARTHUR BLACKWOOD presided, and reminded his hearers that the first open-air meeting was under a tree in the garden of Eden, when Jehovah was the preacher, and Adam and Eve the hearers. Then Mr. W. H. HOWLAND, of Toronto, told how that when he was Mayor of that city he had a bye-law passed by which open-air preaching was declared lawful, provided a path was left free on the side walks.

Then followed the speaker that all had assembled to hear, Rev. JOHN MCNEILL, of Regent-square Presbyterian Church. He in-sisted at the outset that open-air preaching ought to be a congregational effort. That was what they had done at Regent-square Church, by having a station at King's Cross. He was anxious to see the low and lost estate of open-air preaching retrieved, and the feeble few by whom it was maintained grow into a multitude. If the congregation joined, a meeting would be made much sooner. He wanted the white waistcoated folk to be seen there. When he was a missionary he was well nigh heart-broken by the way this outside work was neglected by ministers and congregations. It would do the inside people good to get aërated by coming out. No doubt it was a cross to sensitive people to hear the scoffing and sneer-ing incidental to this kind of work, but it was a necessity if the Gospel was to be preached to every creature. The singing also needed im-proving. To hear "Rescue the Perishing" sung as it was sometimes would lead the passer-by to think that it was the tune that needed rescuing. He would have good choirs, so that the singing should command respect.

As to the preaching itself, the preachers were the first to be benefited by it, for their preach-ing was thus revived. They could preach the Gospel more freely, and fire random shots, which they could not do inside. And he had known this personal preaching to stop a wild career and prevent suicide. The free description of the prodigal son had brought back many a wanderer. A preacher buried behind his manuscript could not see what effect his word had upon his hearers; but this speaking straight out told quickly, and brought back Pentecost. He was always anxious to know whether his people were praying for him, for if they were burdened with prayer, and he was burdened with preaching, results were bound to follow. He hoped Christian people would be bitten by an enthusiasm that would compel attention and be irresistible. Thus would they return to Apostolic preaching, so much needed.

Mr. J. W. GODFREY, on behalf of the united Gospel choirs, which sang several pieces, ex-plained how these choirs sang the Gospel, and urged the formation of other choirs on the same lines.

Teaching by Pictures.

Without a pause or a change of audience or chairman, Mr. GAWIN KIRKHAM, secretary of the Open-Air Mission, proceeded to expound his well-known picture "The Broad and the Narrow Way." This picture is nine feet wide, and twelve feet long, and on this occasion was sus-pended on a frame between the mulberry tree and the pear tree to the east. The various contrasts between these two ways were touched upon in rapid succession to a crowd that showed no sign of weariness. Mr. Kirkham incident-ally mentioned that this was his 948th public ex-position of the picture, and his desire that the thousandth should be in the city of Stuttgart, in Germany, where the original was designed by Mrs. Charlotte Reihlen, about twenty-six years ago.

An Unreported Meeting.

It was interesting to see the little army of reporters at the circular table under the plat-form in the large hall; but some of the most charming gatherings were not even heard of by official reporters. Such a one was held in the large refreshment marquee on the morning of the last day of the Conference. Immediately the stewards had finished breakfast, the waiters filed in and sat down, in expectation of their meeting. This was in charge of Colonel Sand-with. After prayer by Mr. Kirkham, Mr. How-land delivered a charmingly simple and warm address, which found its way easily to the men's hearts. Then the Hon. Mabel Walde-grave handed to each man a handsomely bound volume of Faithful Words, as a memento of the Conference, and, with the thanks of the recipients, the thoughtful friendly gathering was at an end. It is a common thing for some of these waiters to say how many years they have attended, and quite a number of them are seen year after year, one saying this was his seventeenth. This speaks well for Mr. Earee, the contractor, who seems delighted that his waiters are thus noticed.

PRINCESS HOUSE, KNIGHTSBRIDGE.

TO-DAY, July 5, we had the Gospel beautifully exemplified and enforced here. In honour of the marriage of Miss Rowland Smith to that man of God, Rev. A. C. D. Ryder, a large party of poor, but most respectable-looking women from Whitechapel, headed by their venerable friend, Mr. George Holland, came to tea in the beautiful mission-hall of the Princess House. The matron was asked to prepare a tea for 110, which she, with her helpers, did to the credit of the House, as well as to the glory of God, and an honour to the marriage of his servants, who invited their poor friends to this wedding feast. Mr. Y—— (a Japanese gentleman) said he would very much like to see a true Christian marriage, and he heartily joined in all the responses. I was able to tell him that it was a good specimen of what he wished to see. J. McL.

A TRAINING INSTITUTE FOR AFRICAN CHILDREN has been established at Congo House, Colwyn Bay, North Wales, by Rev. W. Hughes, late a missionary on the Congo River. The object is to train African boys in this country, in the hope that many of them will return to their native land as missionaries, schoolmasters, or useful handicraftsmen, such as carpenters, blacksmiths, masons, bricklayers, wheelwrights, tailors, &c. Mr. Hughes will be glad to give further information to any who are interested in the project.

GORDON BOYS' HOME, MANCHESTER.—"A 'Brief' for the Boys" is the title of a deeply interesting record of work for the rescue of lads when on the brink of a life of crime. The author, Mr. Alex. Devine, has done good work among juvenile offenders. The Gordon Boys' Home was established in order to complete the machinery of his excellent endeavour. During last year some eighty-seven boys passed through the institution, which is managed on industrial lines. Communications should be addressed to Mr. Devine at the Home, Chester-road, Manchester.

FARNINGHAM BOYS' HOMES.—The annual summer fête in connection with the Homes for Little Boys, at Farningham and Swanley, took place last week in the grounds of the Farningham Institution. A large party of visitors, among whom were the Earl and Countess of Aberdeen, journeyed from town by special train to the home station. The Homes at Farningham provide accommodation for 300 little boys under ten years of age, from all parts of the country, who are either homeless or destitute, or in danger of falling into crime. The leading feature of the Orphan Homes at Swanley is that they provide for fatherless boys whose widowed mothers or other friends contribute as they are able towards their support. The visitors were entertained at luncheon in the drill hall. Lord Aberdeen trusted that those present would do all they could to make the claims of the institution known, and thus secure the means of maintaining its efficiency and extending its benefits. After the luncheon the Countess of Aberdeen presented the prizes gained by the boys during the past year. A programme of athletic sports was subsequently gone through by the boys.

THE SHAH IN ENGLAND.—The Rev. Newman Hall, preaching at Christ Church, Westminster-road, on Sunday evening, compared, in some features, the visit of the Shah to London with that of the Babylonish ambassador to Jerusalem. Hezekiah showed all his treasures, but not the book of God's law, and the worship of the Temple. The Shah has been shown our shipping and commerce, our multitudes of people, our silver and gold, our soldiery and palaces; he has seen something of our amusements, the modes of fashionable attire, and some of the most objectionable features of theatrical displays; he has been taken to the racecourse, and by persons in high station initiated into gambling and betting, going away delighted with the new sensation, perhaps to introduce into his country one of the greatest curses and scandals of our own. But we have not heard that he has been shown what could be seen of the religion which is our chief glory and security. The questions might be asked—What do we regard as our best treasure? On what do we most rely for national glory and security? Let the people of Britain cherish and exhibit their conviction that piety is more than power, and righteousness than rank, and purity than pleasure, and God than gold; that the throne is established by righteousness, not by force; that not armies and navies, and wealth and pomp, but righteousness exalteth a nation.

The Book World.

PEGS FOR PREACHERS: POINTS FOR WORKERS. By Chas. Inglis. 2s. Morgan & Scott. This is a collection of Bible-readings intended for the help of Christian workers who may not have much time for the preparation of their addresses. They are not expositions, but are for the most part collections of texts bearing upon some special topic. The subjects treated are many and various; and their treatment evidences on the part of the author, and demands on the part of the reader, a careful search of the Word of God. Most of the Readings will be found suggestive and helpful. Many a worker will have reason to thank Mr. Inglis for the issue of this book.

"ALWAYS ABOUNDING;" or, Recollections of the Life and Labours of the late George Brealey, the Evangelist of the Blackdown Hills. By his son, W. J. H. Brealey, with portrait. J. F. Shaw & Co. 2s. 6d. We have made some remarks on this book under Notes and Comments, p. 7. It is a wisely condensed epitome of an invaluable life. Pastors, teachers, and evangelists will be greatly helped by its presentations and illustrations of the good tidings; those who deal with anxious souls will find typical examples of soul-difficulties and how to remove them; and sinners convicted and unconvicted may be led to Christ through the considerations and the narratives herein contained. Nobody can read it without deep personal interest, nor when read without wishing others to read it also.

THREE YEARS IN CENTRAL LONDON. By Rev. Edward Smith. 1s. T. Woolmer. This is a small book, but there is a great deal in it. The primary purpose of the writer is to report on his three years' work as Wesleyan missioner in Clerkenwell; but he launches out in all directions. His faculty of terse description is only equalled by his power of hard hitting; so that, in addition to a wonderfully graphic bird's-eye view of Central London in some of its varied aspects, we have many trenchant criticisms of methods of work that do not commend themselves to him. Mr. Smith is a man whom it is difficult to classify; but his idiosyncrasies do not hinder him from doing splendid service to his Church, and in this book he has given us a singularly readable sketch of three years' patient and successful toil.

TOILERS IN LONDON is the title given to a handsomely got up reprint of the able articles that appeared in The British Weekly, descriptive of female labour in the Metropolis; and is a kind of corollary to "Tempted London." The every-day life and the special crooks in the lot of flower girls, match, sack, and brush makers, domestic servants, factory girls, barmaids, seamstresses, and other regiments in the vast battalion of London women toilers, are here depicted with much precision, and, we should say, much fidelity to unwelcome fact. This book should sensibly help in rolling away the reproach that one half of our great London world does not know how the other half lives. Let the working poor read it if they can, so as to sympathise with their fellows; above all, let the rich read it, that they may ponder over a state of things which they may do something at least to qualify, if not remove. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

M. Héli Chatelain, the accomplished Swiss who laboured for some time with the late Dr. Summers on the West Coast of Africa, in connection with Bishop William Taylor's Mission, has rendered important service to the cause of the Gospel and civilisation, by compiling a KIMBUNDU GRAMMAR. Interpreted in Portuguese, the official language of the country, English meanings being also given in the vocabularies, this work forms an excellent introduction to the speech of the millions of inhabitants of Angola. Dr. R. N. Cust, in a brief introduction, heartily commends the work to the favourable consideration of African scholars, and the author himself to the affectionate interest of those who love their Lord and seek to carry out his parting commandment. We are glad to learn that German and Portuguese authorities on the Bantu family of African languages, concur in high praise of the work, which costs 6s., and may be had in England from Messrs. Bywater, Tanqueray & Co., 79, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C. Mr. Chatelain, who has already edited the Gospel of John in Kimbundu, is now preparing a dictionary, which is much needed by European settlers, and will prove of great value to any who may in future take up mission work in the country.

The trials of a schoolmaster are many; but there are compensations. He gets strange glimpses into the interior workings of the undeveloped and unsophisticated mind. This, at any rate, has been Mr. Henry J. Barker's experience; and the little book in which he sets down some of the VERY ORIGINAL ENGLISH written by his pupils in their school essays is about the most diverting shilling's worth we remember to have met with. We are not surprised it has reached a fourth edition. (Jarrold & Sons.)

POEMS AND BALLADS. By Mrs. Sewell. 2 vols. Jarrold & Sons. The name and memory of Mrs. Sewell will chiefly be associated with her touching poem, "Mother's last Words"; but many other of the products of her prolific pen deserve to be equally popular. These two volumes contain a collection of homely Christian ballads that it would be hard to match. Their charm lies in the simple garb in which the narratives are clothed, and in their truthfulness to life in its lowly aspects and every-day experiences. We have the best reason for knowing that these poems and ballads are splendidly suited for reading at mothers' meetings and similar occasions, and certainly no village library ought to be without them. If it be true that "truth embodied in a tale may enter in at lowly doors," it is equally certain that the channel of simple, flowing verse is one of the best by which to reach the hearts of the common people. Miss Bayly's brief memoir in the first volume is very acceptable.

A very pretty series of texts embossed on coloured cardboard is issued by Marshall Bros., entitled, WORDS OF LIFE.

FOSTER'S BIJOU GUIDE TO ILFRACOMBE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD may be of service to visitors to the Northern Coast of Devon. It may be had on application from W. R. Foster, 10, Market-street, Ilfracombe.

A POPULAR CATECHISM OF ONE HUNDRED TEXTS. By E. H. 6d. Horner & Son. The second fifty of the texts, selected for parochial Sunday-schools by the Society of Irish Church Missions, are here elucidated in a manner which will make the book useful to teachers and others. A number of anecdotes and illustrations enliven the pages.

Messrs. Jarrold & Sons have added two more capital books to their series of GUIDES TO EAST ANGLIA. One is devoted to Felixtowe and neighbourhood, and the other to Southwold, including Lowestoft, Somerleyton, and other places of holiday resort. Furnished with maps and illustrations, these sixpenny books will prove very useful to visitors.

JOHN SMITH ON CHURCH REFORM (1s. Marshall Bros.) is a cleverly constructed narrative impeaching some of the administrative defects of the parochial system by which the Church of England is supposed to provide for the spiritual needs of the entire community. We sympathise with much that the writer advances, but he is lamentably onesided in his ecclesiastical proclivities.

THE "WATER OF LIFE" SERIES OF ILLUSTRATED GOSPEL BOOKS will be welcome to many a tract distributor, and, we trust, blessed of God to many a wandering and weary soul. The matter is vigorous and sound, and a striking feature is the very chaste lithographed cover, which quite invites reception. Beyond question the outward appearance of a tract is a point worthy of careful consideration. (Packets of twelve, 6d. J. E. Hawkins.)

PAMPHLETS RECEIVED.—Messrs. J. Nisbet & Co.:—Devoted; or, Working for God: some reminiscences of Mrs. Thomas Boyd, by her husband. 6d.—Messrs. Jarrold & Sons:—Illustrated Guide to Felixstowe and neighbourhood, by Dr. J. E. Taylor. 6d.—"Home Words" Office, 7, Paternoster-square, E.C.:—The Turf and its doings, and "Happy Ned," the Cabman's Friend, by Rev. Chas. Bullock. 1d. each.—Messrs. Mawson, Lowes & Phillips, Sunderland:—Fifty Leaflets, by Evan May. 6d.—Messrs. Dyer Bros, 31, Paternoster-square, E.C.:—Hints for the formation of branch "Gospel Purity" Associations. 1d.—Mr. W. Wells, East Bond-street, Leicester:—Atheism a blight on human reason and opposed to common sense: A Lecture by James Flanaghan.—Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.:—Youthful Service: an Antidote for the Church's Mission of Amusement, by Caleb C. Brown.

BARMAIDS' CONVERSAZIONE.—Seventy representatives of the waitresses behind the various refreshment bars of the metropolis availed themselves last week of Lord and Lady Kinnaird's invitation to a conversazione at the Morley Rooms, 14, John-street, Bedford-row. The entertainment was heralded by a sumptuous tea, and followed by games. As the evening advanced, encouraging exhortations to improve their vast opportunities for good instead of evil were given to the young women by such able speakers as Rev. J. Baillie, of Bloomsbury Chapel; Mr. J. H. Raper, President of the United Kingdom Temperance Alliance, Lord Kinnaird, and Mr. Robert Paton. The speeches were interspersed with music, hymns, conversation, and recitations.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes.

SUNDAY, JULY 21.—Deuteronomy XXXIII.

VER. 1—5.—The glorious being of God is the opening theme of this sublime ode. There is probably a reference to the giving of the law, when, amid fire and the celestial cortège of 10,000 angels, God descended on Mount Sinai (Ps. xviii. 7—9; Hab. iii. 3, 4). All God's commands emanate from his love (3). How safe are his saints (3; John x. 28).

Ver. 6.—Reuben had lost the supremacy of the birthright, but Moses begins with him; though he could not excel in the best things, yet he was not to perish. Simeon is left out, as Dan in Rev. vii., because through the last outbreak (Num. xxv. 14) this tribe had become reduced in numbers, and received a very small portion of the land (Josh. xix. 9).

Ver. 7.—Judah, prosperity in prayer, and work, and war. Some render the good wish on his behalf, "Bring him home in safety from his wars." There is much in this benediction which might be coveted by any section of Christian people.

Ver. 8—11.—Levi, as God's tribe, receives special blessing. The margin of R.V. gives a sweet turn to the opening verse. Thy Urim are with him whom Thou lovest. Should not each of us seek guidance there. This is probably the white stone (Rev. ii. 17). The act of Exod. xxxii. 26 was never forgotten. We may forget, God never (Matt. xxv. 37).

Ver. 12.—Benjamin, "God shall dwell among his mountains" is a possible rendering, referring to the fact that the Temple and Jerusalem stood within the confines of this tribe.

Ver. 13—17.—Joseph includes Ephraim and Manasseh (17). We have an enumeration of the wealth in the large and valuable portions of these great tribes. Authority among their brethren (16), victory over enemies (17), and numbers. What an exquisite reference to Exod. iii. 2!

Ver. 18, 19.—Zebulun and Issachar, sons of Leah, were neighbours in Canaan; and, being on the seaboard, near Phenicia, became wealthy by commerce. The calling of the peoples may refer to the Gentile proselytes, who were influenced by these tribes (1 Kings v. 1—6; Mark vii. 26).

Ver. 20—25.—The rest of the tribes have blessings suggested by their position in the Land of Promise. Gad the leader of the western tribes; Dan warlike as a lion, standing on the frontiers; Naphtali possessing the sea of Galilee (west standing for sea); Asher, situated on the north-western border, and assured that its bars (defences) should be iron and brass.

There is no god like our God—above us (26); around us as our refuge; beneath us; before us, thrusting out our foes (27). Happy are we if we belong to God's true Israel (Rom. ii. 28, 29).

MONDAY, JULY 22.—Deuteronomy XXXIV.

This chapter may have been added by Ezra, when he arranged the Old Testament Scriptures; but how full of instruction it is. We learn much from it dispensationally, for the Law, as represented by Moses, can never take us into the Land of Promise and Rest. That is the special prerogative of Joshua (Jesus). And morally, what a solemn lesson is here; that though God forgives, yet we must suffer in this life the stern results of our misdeeds and mistakes.

The loneliness of his death.—Aaron was accompanied to Mount Hor, but Moses went alone, when his hour came. One by one we set sail to the unknown land (1).

The vision of his dying hour.—The Lord showed him the Land of Promise. It is a marvellous privilege to stand on the mountain top of vision with God's Spirit as our teacher (2; 1 Cor. ii. 12). And often it seems as if the moment of death is the time of Apocalyptic glory.

The gentleness of his death.—"According to the word of the Lord" is rendered by the Rabbis, "with a kiss from the mouth of God." Is not this true of all saints? Precious in the sight of God is their death. And death only comes at such a time and in such a manner as He appoints (John xxi. 18, 19).

His burial.—The Lord hid his grave, that it might not become the occasion of superstition and idolatry. We need not trouble as to our burying-place so long as we are at home with God. And God will see to our dust. Angels shall guard it (Jude 9).

His successor was well qualified to take up his work. God is always able to find workmen, or to make them; but Joshua never could vie with the great leader (Num. xii. 8). Christ constantly appealed to his writings (John v. 46). And the favourite title by which he is always known is "the servant of the Lord" (Rev. xv. 3). The men whom God sends are those who have learnt implicitly to obey. What a contrast is here between the buried lawgiver, and the risen, ascended Saviour!

THE BOOK OF JOSHUA.

The subject of this book is Israel's taking possession of the land into which God brought them. Their warrant of possession, as well as its extent, was conveyed in the words, "Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you, as I said unto Moses. From the wilderness and this Lebanon even unto the great river, the river Euphrates, all the land of the Hittites, and unto the great sea toward the going down of the sun shall be your coast." But, when we compare the largeness of this grant with the smallness of the territory of which Israel actually took possession, we see the truth of the charge brought against them by Joshua (xviii. 3) of being "slack to go to possess the land, which the Lord God of your fathers hath given you." Not until the time of Solomon, and then apparently only for a short period, did Israel's king reign "over all the kings from the river (marg. Euphrates) even unto the land of the Philistines, and to the border of Egypt" (2 Chron. ix. 26). The spiritual lessons of this book are eminently practical. "Exceeding great and precious promises" are given to God's people, "all yea and amen in Christ Jesus." Why, then, are Christians so slack to go in and take possession? Why does experimental religion occupy so contracted a sphere as compared with theoretical acquaintance with doctrinal truth? Many heart-searching questions of this kind receive their answer in this book, which might be almost described as "Israel's failure to take possession of all that God intended for them."

TUESDAY, JULY 23.—Joshua I.

The death of Moses is emphasised in the opening verses: "Now after the death of Moses"—"Moses my servant is dead." Moses represents the law dispensationally. Joshua, as his name imports, represents Jesus. It is only after the dispensational end of the law, in the death of Christ, that Jesus, the living and glorified Christ, can bring us into the heavenly places where our true inheritance lies.

The promise (5), "I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee," made here to Joshua, is treated in Heb. xiii. 5, 6 as the common property of all Christians: "He hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee. So that we may boldly say, The Lord is my helper; I will not fear: what shall man do unto me?" (R.V.) The latter question seems to point back to the promise in the beginning of ver. 5, "There shall not any man be able to stand before thee all the days of thy life.'

Christians should include self in this promise of victory. Mr. Moody, when once asked who was his worst enemy, replied, "D. L. Moody." No external foe is more subtle or difficult to subdue than the foe within. But there is the sphere of warfare.

'Tis within
The fervent spirit labours. There he gains
Fresh conquests o'er himself compared with which
The laurels that a Cæsar wears are weeds.

The great weapon in this warfare is pointed out in ver. 8: "This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth...for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success." Mark, it does not say: "Shall not depart out of thine ears, or out of thy head," as if hearing or knowing was all that was meant; but "out of thy mouth," for it is as spoken to the enemy in spiritual conflict that "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God," is used. See our Lord's use of it in this way in combat with Satan (Matt. iv. 4, 7, 10). There may be a reference, perhaps, also to the clean beast—the ruminating animal—in whose mouth was oftentimes its food, thus typifying the Christian's meditation on the Word of God.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 24.—Joshua II.

This chapter contains the story of Rahab and of the oath of protection which she obtained from the spies, which, along with the agreed-upon token of the scarlet line, was the cause of her deliverance and that of her household in the day that Jericho fell (vi. 25).

Her case is presented in Heb. xi. 31 as an instance of faith, and we can trace this in her belief in God's wonders in Egypt (10) on behalf of Israel, as well as in her avowal (11): "The Lord your God, He is God in heaven above, and in the earth beneath." Her trust, moreover, in the promise of the spies and in the efficacy of the "scarlet line," the sign by which her house was to be known in the day of Jericho's judgment, was a striking type of the faith which trusts the promise of salvation, and which looks to the efficacy of the blood of Christ to preserve the soul that trusts in Him.

Mark the strict condition exacted by the spies as to their responsibility to save attaching only to the house marked by the scarlet thread, so that "whosoever shall go out of the doors of thy house into the street, his blood shall be upon his head, and we shall be guiltless."

Thus, in Christ, and only in Christ, is there promise of salvation. To be found in Christ is salvation. To abide in Him is the way to avoid being "ashamed before Him at his coming."

Mark the encouragement which Rahab's faith afforded to the spies, and through them, as they reported it, to Joshua and Israel: "Truly the Lord hath delivered into our hands all the land; for even all the inhabitants of the country do faint because of us."

THURSDAY, JULY 25.—Joshua III.

In Israel's crossing the Jordan, which forms the subject of this chapter, every means was taken to impress the people with the idea that the waters of the river made way not for them, but for "the ark of the Lord." Consequently they were to leave a space between them and it (4), so that the cutting off of the waters before the ark of the covenant, whenever the priests' feet (who bore the ark) touched the river, became apparent to the whole host; who then, and not till then, crossed over under its protection: the priests who bore it "standing firm on dry ground in the midst of Jordan, until all the people were passed clean over Jordan."

Thus have the waters of judicial wrath been cut off before Him of whom the ark was type; who by his death stayed, and stays, the judgment due to sin, until all the host of the Lord are passed over.

Observe, also, that this deliverance of Israel from the waters of judgment by the ark of the covenant of the Lord was not merely present deliverance, but a pledge of future deliverance from their enemies in Canaan (10): "Hereby ye shall know that the living God is among you, and that He will without fail drive out from before you the Canaanites," &c.

So is the death and resurrection of the Lord Jesus not only the deliverance from judgment of those that are found in Him, but it is to them the pledge and assurance of the deliverance which He, "the living One," will effect for them in conflict with their enemies, whom they seek to drive out from the land of their possession.

FRIDAY, JULY 26.—Joshua IV.

This chapter records the erection of a twofold memorial of Israel's passage of the Jordan. One was twelve stones erected in the bed of the river, "where the feet of the priests who bore the ark of the covenant stood." The other consisted of twelve stones brought up out of the bed of the river, and finally erected in Gilgal (20), that when their children should ask: "What mean these stones?" they should be told that "Israel came over this Jordan on dry land."

These twelve stones typified Israel, first, in the place of judgment, where they were delivered; and, secondly, as brought up out of the Jordan, and put in the land from which the waters of the Jordan had formerly excluded them. So should the Israel of God present in their walk and ways a continual remembrance of the judicial death they have endured in Christ, and of his resurrection which they are called to share. "Mortify therefore your members which are upon earth" (Col. iii. 5) is their memorial of the death, and "Set your affection upon things above, not on things on the earth," is their memorial of the resurrection, which they have shared. Thus they seek to "know Him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death" (Phil. iii. 10).

SATURDAY, JULY 27.—Joshua V.

After a brief allusion to the terror which the miraculous crossing of the Jordan caused among the kings of the Canaanites, the chapter goes on to relate the circumcision of the generation who had been born in the wilderness, and who had not as yet been circumcised. It seems strange that this should have been the case, the command as to circumcision being so stringent (Gen. xvii.); but that explanation is probably correct which regards the murmuring at Kadesh (Numb. xiv.), and God's oath to exclude that unbelieving generation from Canaan, as a virtual abrogation of the covenant. This seems alluded to in ver. 6 as the reason why circumcision had been discontinued.

But now that they were about to face their foes, and to fight against the inhabitants of the land, under the guidance, and with the help of Him who alone could drive them out, it was essential that full covenant relationship should be established. Their failures in the desert showed their separation from God. If now they were to have success in the land, they must draw nigh to Him.

"The reproach of Egypt," which the Lord thus rolled away, seems to point to the taunts and reproaches uttered by the Egyptians against Israel during the forty years' wanderings, in relation to their having failed to attain the land for which they started.

The renewal of circumcision was the prelude to their reception of the Passover (10), and now the manna ceased, the mark of their desert journey, and "they did eat of the fruit of the land of Canaan that year."

The armed warrior, who, at the close of the chapter, appears to Joshua, seems to have been none other than the Lord Himself, appearing in that character "as Captain of the host of the Lord," in which He was about to fight the battles of Israel for them. Compare Exod. iii. 5; the presence of the Lord is holy ground. The appearance in the bush represented God manifested in flesh; the armed Man represented Christ in resurrection, the Captain of our salvation.

ISRAEL ASKING FOR A KING.—1 SAM. viii. 4—20.

GOLDEN TEXT: VER. 19.

THE condition of Israel during the years which followed the great victory at Ebenezer is described in vii. 13—17. Chap. viii. records another failure, upon which, as upon all human failures, God builds his successes. Samuel, in his old age, failed by making his sons judges (1). They were manifestly unfitted for such a position (compare Deut. xvi. 18—20 with 3). Every God-made judge was a deliverer (Judges ii. 16, 18); but Samuel's sons were not the choice of God. The people failed by choosing a king, whose further failure prepared the way for introducing another king after God's own heart.

THE DESIRE FOR A KING (4, 5).—This was not the cry of a few discontented people, but the demand of the whole nation expressed through their "elders" (4). All the leaders and representatives of the people united in it; and gathered together to Ramah to urge it upon Samuel. Two reasons they give for such a change—first, that Samuel is old, and, next, that his sons were not walking in his ways (5). The second was one of those painful things which should only be said under very peculiar conditions. The mention of it must have added to Samuel's grief over the fact itself. Note: (a) they did not ask Samuel's advice, but rather his sanction to the plan they had already formed. They asked him to make them a king; but they were determined to have one on any conditions (see 19, 20). Do we not sometimes act similarly in asking counsel of God? Better to tell Him the difficulty, and ask his plan. Note: (b) their true reason is suggested in their words "like the nations" (5). This is more serious. Their chief glory consisted in being unlike other nations (Deut. iv. 7, 8). God was their King; He framed their laws; and became their unfailing Deliverer. They could not fulfil their high destiny without being distinct from other nations. But they were tired of being "peculiar"; hence this demand. It was a retrograde movement; and one in which many churches and individuals have imitated them since then. The desire to escape being peculiar, and to be "like the nations" always injures the servants of God. Why should we imitate the world? Our work is to witness against its follies and sins; not to be imitators of its vanities.

SAMUEL'S CONDUCT IN THE MATTER (6—9).—It is not wonderful that he was "displeased" (6). The people suffered great oppression before his career began. But how great the change since he became judge! Why should they desire a change? Were they not guilty of great ingratitude to him? Did he feel it as some slight upon himself? But he "prayed unto the Lord" (6). This was his wisest course. If he was disposed to think too much of the slight put upon himself, he would now see the matter in God's light. When a man is "displeased," as Samuel was, he is almost certain to take the wrong step in action, if he does not consult God. Be ready to take God's mind about all matters, even when, as here, He directs us to a course that displeases ourselves. Note that this characteristic is found prominently in all Bible worthies. Prayer was their refuge, and their method of solving all difficulties. Remember Abraham, Moses, David, Daniel, and our Lord Himself.

Samuel obtained an answer. He not only asked advice, but he waited to receive it, and was willing to act upon it. Conditions—the absence of which may often explain our unanswered prayers. God's answer enabled him better to understand the sin of the people (7, 8). It was not a rejection of Samuel only, but of God. This is again repeated in chap. x. 19; xii. 17, 19. There is often a deeper guilt in our conduct than we understand. To reject the servants of God is always to reject God Himself (Luke x. 16). And this had been their custom during their previous history (8).

Yet God granted the people's request (9). See Hos. xiii. 10, 11. It was the only way in which they could learn to trust in God fully. God does sometimes grant foolish and sinful requests (Ps. lxxviii. 29, 30). Not until we experience the misery of having our own way are we willing to have God's way.

THE MANNER OF THE KING (10—18).—Even while granting their request, God would have Samuel declare what would be the result. He gives them the opportunity of correcting their folly now, if they will. Note this description, and compare it with their after history. See how Saul fulfilled it (xiv. 52), and Solomon (1 Kings xii. 4), and Ahab (1 Kings xxi. 1—16). The words "he will take" occur in almost every verse, from 11 to 17. Their king should prove a burden to them, constantly demanding from them, and claiming their best for himself. An Eastern monarchy is often not less cruel and oppressive than this description. How it contrasts with the description of the coming King in Ps. lxxii. Righteousness and peace should result from that; but disappointment and grief from this. But they are further reminded that, if they now persist in their choice of a king, they must abide by all the results (18). Into what trouble men bring themselves by seeking their own way. In so far as self-will is gratified, we make a rod for our own back.

THE PEOPLE'S DECISION (19, 20).—Their determination was formed. They had appealed to Samuel, not for his counsel, but for his action. Without attempting to reply to his solemn protest (9), they simply said: "We will have a king over us" (19). They were resolved to be "like the nations" (20), and though it involved the sin of rejecting God, and would lead to consequences so disastrous, still they persisted.

LESSONS.

(1) The danger of desiring to be like others.—God means his people to be "peculiar." To be "conformed to this world" is disobedience and weakness (Rom. xii. 1, 2). A true Christian will dare to go contrary to what is popular. Illustrations in Nehemiah, three Hebrews, Daniel, &c.

(2) The value of prayer in time of difficulty.—Samuel's habit is worthy of our imitation. Learn to pray with the same spirit of surrender. Be ready, if God commands, to take a course that displeases you.

(3) The painful results of self-will.—All who reject God for King, do accept another ruler—more oppressive and cruel than was Saul to Israel. Let God choose, and though our plans may be overthrown, better are substituted for them. Our own selfish choice will bear its own bitter results (Gal. vi. 7, 8).

COSTA RICA.—In a letter recently received, Rev. J. H. Sobey, English Baptist missionary, Limon, Costa Rica, Central America, says:—"This Republic, as a whole, is healthy...I have just returned from a three weeks' tour of real missionary work. Wherever I go I find people willing to listen. Of course, the people have no Bibles, but I am doing my best to distribute the Word in their native tongue. 'The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few.' Indeed I am the only Protestant minister in the Republic."

Evangelistic Notes.

Walthamstow.—Mr. J. Wooldridge is here with his tent, and a good work is being done. The mission will be continued twelve weeks.

Mr. E. J. Parker has concluded a mission at Sandhurst, Berks. Open-air meetings were largely attended; believers have been refreshed, and several have decided for Christ.

Mr. Charles G. Roger, evangelist of the Scottish Y.M.C.A., has held a mission under the Almond Valley Y.M.C.A. A few have professed conversion, and believers have been much refreshed. Mr. Roger is now at Kingseat, Fifeshire.

Rev. E. P. Hammond has held meetings in the Weathersfield State Prison, going into each cell, and talking with the prisoners. He found a good number who had been professing Christians for some time, and many were under deep conviction.

Lancaster.—A weeks' open-air mission has just been concluded in Lancaster by Mr. Gawin Kirkham, secretary of the Open-air Mission, who gave a total of thirty-three addresses in the seven days. Three of these were to "the hands" of the principal manufacturers in the town at their dinner hour, and one at Quernmore to the navvies engaged on the Manchester waterworks pipe track. Among those in the town who took part in this mission were Rev. H. W. Smith and Rev. G. Scott. The weather was magnificent, and the attendance good.

Evangelistic Mission Tent Work.—Mr. Hall writes from Syresham, Oxford: "Three or four cases of direct spiritual blessing came before our notice, for which we thank God." Another evangelist (Mr. Newell) writes from Brackley: "Many are praising God for the meetings held last year and this year at Brackley. Eternity alone will disclose what has been done in that town since we pitched the tent there last autumn." Services were held at Farthinghoe for about three weeks. It was not until the end of the first week that any signs of blessing were manifest, when several confessed Christ, and at each subsequent meeting good results were apparent. At Littleport, Cambs, services commenced on Sunday, July 7, when the tent was packed with people, and the Lord gave much power with the word preached.

An open-air meeting is conducted by members of the Exeter Hall Y.M.C.A. every Wednesday evening, at 8.30, on the Thames Embankment, at the open space adjacent to the Temple Railway Station, and opposite the Temple steamboat pier. Christian friends who can assist in singing the Gospel will be heartily welcomed.

LADIES OF EDUCATION are joining the ranks of the Church Army as mission nurses. Some of them have volunteered to go to India and work among the lepers, if their services are thus needed.

IN A RECENT ADDRESS ON "PRIESTISM," Rev. R. F. Horton, of Hampstead, vehemently denounced the Confessional. He declared that the worst books he had ever looked into were written by priests. The practice of priestly remission of sin leads to the establishment of a "tariff of iniquity."

THE BAPTIST MISSIONARIES IN ITALY have determined to issue periodically an Occasional Paper, to give information on mission work in that country. In No. 1, just issued, it is said:—"There are now in Rome ten Baptist chapels or mission-halls, with nine pastors or evangelists. The church in Piazza Lucina has over 200 members."

THE WOMEN OF INDIA.—A meeting was held at the Mansion House last week for the advocacy of the claims of the National Association for supplying medical aid to the women of India. The Lord Mayor stated that the Association owed its direct initiative to Her Majesty, who had personally commended the matter to the Marchioness of Dufferin.

TRACTS AND GOSPELS AT PARIS.—I have again visited Paris, and rejoice to find that the work of distributing tracts and Gospels daily goes on most satisfactorily. Nearly 70,000 tracts and 30,000 Gospels, in various languages, have already been given away by our agent, Mr. Doyer. The people receive them most readily, and many who have had one Gospel or tract come back to ask for others. Some of the priests have asked for Gospels in several languages, and one was induced to stop for an interview with the minister who was preaching in the Salle Evangélique.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

A clergyman in the London suburbs, the vicar of St. ndrew's, Willesden, has resolved to give a garden arty on Sunday afternoons. The people do not come his church in such numbers as he could wish, and he going to see whether tea, fruit, and lemonade will aw them in the afternoon. The invitation is given to l parishioners, poor and rich, Church and Dissenting.

The Mayor of Liverpool, last Friday week, laid the emorial stone of a mission-hall which is to be erected connection with the parish of St. Cyprian's, Edge-ll. The Bishop (Dr. Ryle) said more mission-rooms ere greatly needed in Liverpool, and he hoped to see e day when there would be one in every parish, where e ministry might get at the people by simple, elemen-ry, and apostolic services. He was firmly persuaded at mission-halls were a splendid means of reaching e poorer classes.

BAPTIST.

Memorial stones of a new chapel at Redhill, near Day-ook, Notts, have been laid. Hitherto the services ve been held in the open air in the summer, and in ivate houses in the winter.

On Sunday week eighteen persons were received into llowship at the Centenary Chapel, March, which is der the pastorate of Rev. S. H. Firks. Fifty have en added by baptism during the past twelve months.

On Thursday, July 11, Rev. F. B. Meyer visited York, d gave at Priory-street Baptist Chapel in the after-on a Bible-reading, and at night a sermon, both of hich were listened to by large and appreciative audi-ces. The word was with power, and his visit proved be a red-letter day in the history of the church, of hich he was once pastor.

A large number of delegates to the Sunday-school nvention attended, by invitation, the morning service the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday week. Mr. urgeon preached from the words, "And the king mmanded, and they brought great stones, costly stones, wed stones, to lay the foundations of the house." He ged throughout his discourse the importance of foun-tion work.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. W. Pedr Williams held an open-air service in nt of his church at Lower Clapton on Sunday evening. e service was largely attended, and will be continued ery Sunday evening during July and August.

Rev. John Bain's work in connection with Chatsworth-ad Tabernacle, Clapton, E., continues to be favoured th prosperity. At the recent annual meeting of the urch a very encouraging report concerning its various encies was presented, the work among the children ing mentioned as giving special cause for thankful-ss.

While Whitefield's Tabernacle is being rebuilt, the ndon County Council has licensed the erection of an n church for Rev. Jackson Wray on the north side of e present edifice, in Tottenham Court-road. It is pected to be ready for use in about three weeks. The nporary tabernacle will accommodate about a thous-d worshippers.

Queen-street Church, Leeds, being in the centre of a ge and growing ready-made clothing industry, which ds employment for thousands of young women in eds, the pastor (Rev. J. Charteris Johnston) has own open the schoolroom once a week for a bright cial gathering during the dinner hour. Some hundreds young women generally attend the meetings, which e closed by a Gospel address.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

New York Yearly Meeting, after careful consideration, s confirmed the current practice of the Society, and dorses and retains "birthright membership."

A girls' training home is likely to be opened in the tumn at Ramallah, ten miles north of Jerusalem, and ree American young lady Friends are going to assist the work.

At Van Wert, Ohio, a Quarterly Meeting, with 1000 mbers and ten meetings, has been opened. Thirteen rs ago there was no meeting within forty miles of Van ert.

The Dépôt Central, 4, Place du Théâtre-Français, is en every Sunday during the time of the Paris Exhi-ion, at 10 o'clock, a.m., for the holding of a Friends' eting for worship.

Among other well-known Friends attending New gland Yearly Meeting, lately held, were John Green-f Whittier, the poet, and H. S. Newman. There was o "Mary Morrell, who had so recently arrived from thrilling experience at Johnstown, Pa., when she d her children escaped miraculously from the sad ults of that calamity."

Elwood Scott proposes, in The Christian Worker, a centennial next year of the death of George Fox. ervices embracing a sketch of our early history, the and labours of Fox and the early ministers of the iety, the success of those early labourers, and the se of decline in after years, might render such a vice highly beneficial, not only to ourselves, but to er churches and the world at large."

SALVATION ARMY.

The authorities of Locle, Canton de Neuchâtel, are trying to stop the Army. Some short time ago they declared the Army meetings to be a source of disturbance, and ordered their cessation. Such an order was respectfully disregarded, and the names of twenty-nine soldiers have been taken, with a view to their being tried.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. W. M. Thompson, of Woolwich, will shortly celebrate his ministerial jubilee, having completed fifty years of service in connection with the London Presbytery.

The sustentation fund of the Presbyterian Church of England has been so well maintained that it is able to pay to each minister, as a minimum income, £200 per annum.

Rev. John M'Coll is conducting Sunday evening services for men in the hall of Lylesland Church, Paisley, N.B., at which subjects of special interest to the working folk are dealt with, such as the church's relation to the temperance question, scepticism, gambling, capital and labour, &c. First a brief address is given, and then a discussion follows.

METHODIST.

The work carried on at the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, for seventeen years, by Mr. William Birch, jun., has now been taken over by the Wesleyans, under the lead of Rev. S. F. Collier. As many as 3000 persons were present at the first service held by the Wesleyans on Sunday week.

Rev. John Scott Lidgett, who is spoken of as the leader of the proposed Methodist "Toynbee Hall" for East London, gives some particulars in The Methodist Times of the Settlement for Religious and Social Work, as the movement is termed. By the settlement is meant a community of educated Christian men, who will live among their poorer brethren, and devote some part of their leisure to bring the higher blessings of the few within reach of the many.

Six years ago the Wesleyans commenced mission work at Totawatte, a village five miles from Colombo, in Ceylon. Last year more than fifty persons were converted during a special mission conducted by the native minister. At a praise-meeting held after the services, thirty persons, including some who had been notorious Buddhists, testified to the saving power of Christ. There is now a little native church of thirty-five members, and a good Sunday-school.

One of the most novel and interesting phases of the "Forward Movement" has recently attracted the approval of many hundreds of people in Herefordshire and Breconshire. Under the name of "The Gospel Crusaders," a week's expedition was arranged by a party of Methodists, consisting of Rev. E. A. Evans, of the Mumbles; Mr. Oswald Hobday, Wesleyan home missionary at Brecon; and Mr. D. J. Thomas, aided by contingents of local helpers at the various places visited. During the week (says The Methodist Times) the Crusaders travelled over 150 miles, every mile of which was blessed with the Gospel literature they distributed. Struggling churches were quickened, believers encouraged, sinners convicted, constant hospitality and kindness were received, and hearty invitations given to "Come again soon."

The Special Committee for Evangelistic Work in London, recently appointed by the Primitive Methodist Conference, held its first meeting on Friday week at New Surrey Chapel. A series of resolutions for the guidance and conduct of the new aggressive movement were adopted by the committee. It is proposed to appoint evangelists to open new causes in different districts of neglected London, as well as in new centres of population which are rising up in the outward parts of the city. Another part of the movement will be to make some of the large chapels and halls in the midst of dense populations into mission or evangelistic centres. One resolution impresses upon the agents to exercise the greatest care in reporting cases of conversion, the desire being to make the work a reality rather than a noise, and to secure an abiding fruitfulness in the sight of God than a mere success in the sight of men.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Messrs. Peatt and Crozier have for the past few weeks been holding successful Gospel services in one of the Irish Evangelisation Society's tents at Dromore, co. Down.

Rev. Samuel Patton, of Londonderry, has been elected Moderator, for the ensuing year, of the Eastern Reformed Presbyterian Church (one of the two Covenanting Churches in Ireland.

The "field meeting" which has been annually held for very many years at Feagh, co. Fermanagh, was held on Sunday week, and was addressed by Revs. Dr. Ker, James Carson, William Moore, Robert Knox, and Mr. S. Clarke. There was a very large attendance, and the various addresses were accompanied by much power.

An evangelistic campaign of a novel and unprecedented character was held with encouraging results at Lambeg on Friday, and at Scarva on Saturday. On the days referred to thousands of Orangemen and their friends assembled at these places, and Rev. R. Crawford Johnson got one of the Methodist Mission tents erected at each place, and organised a band of workers who distributed hundreds of tracts and invitations, and who preached the Gospel to multitudes, both in the tents and in the open air. The new departure had the hearty approval of many, and is believed to have been blessedly successful.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Jane Oliver Dunn, the beloved wife of W. D. Dunn, evangelist; at Anniesland Cottage, Maryhill, N.B., on July 10.—Rev. Wm. Warner, Presbyterian minister at Dungooland, co. Down.—Rev. G. Kirkpatrick, episcopal minister at Hazlebank, near Ballymena, Ireland.—Rev. H. R. Hartley, vicar of Wyke, Bradford, Yorks.—Rev. Pyari Mohan Rudra, C.M.S. missionary at Bollobhpur, Bengal, India.—Rev. Dr. Gordon, who was for thirty years pastor of Bridge-street Congregational Church, Walsall, Staffs.—Rev. Thomas Llewellyn, of Bowdon, Cheshire, an eminent minister of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, and for fifty-two years in the ministry.—Rev. R. Clark Craig, senior minister of the Free Church, Fenwick, N.B.—Rev. Vincent Saules, rector of Canton, Cardiff.—Mr. John Templeton, of Romford, Essex, a prominent layman of the Baptist denomination.—Rev. Thomas Ching Penwarden, of Southampton, an ex-president of the Bible Christian Conference.—Rev. Edward Morris, who was for forty years pastor of the Congregational Church, Sale, Manchester.

MALOGA ABORIGINAL MISSION.

MR. AND MRS. DANIEL MATTHEWS, whose names are well known by our readers in connection with the Maloga Mission to the Aborigines of Australia, are in England, with a married Aboriginal couple, Paddy and Jenny Swift. They have just held a series of evangelistic meetings at Blean, and other villages in the neighbourhood of Canterbury, where many most interesting conversions have taken place. Friends in the provinces desirous to arrange for meetings are invited to apply to Mr. Matthews, at 72, Cornhill, London, E.C. Either Mr. or Mrs. Matthews could go alone, or Mrs. Matthews accompanied by Jenny, or Mr. Matthews and Paddy, or the whole party could go together.

Mr. Matthews is issuing a circular respecting the work of the Maloga Mission, copies of which he will be pleased to send to any interested friends.

CHILDRENS' HOMES.—Another addition has been made to Dr. Bowman Stephenson's Children's Homes. The new Home, named "Copeley," is an extension of the "Princess Alice" Orphanage at Birmingham, and is the gift of two ladies who are members of the Church of England. Their donation of £3000 provides for the partial endowment as well as the building of the Home.

UNITED WORK.—On Wednesday week members of six evangelical denominations took part in a meeting to commemorate the laying the foundation of a hall at Parbold to be used for making known God's infinite love to all. During last September Mr. W. Wilkinson, of Southport, with his family spent several weeks in the place, and seeing the great need of the people, he invited the cottagers to his house for a little Bible-reading and prayer. A widespread interest was aroused; some of the most unlikely people being led to the Lord Jesus Christ. A larger meeting-room became necessary, and for ten months has been crowded every Sunday; some have repeatedly walked more than three miles, and have been unable to get in. There are also weekly meetings held by the British Women's Temperance Association largely attended. The new hall is intended to seat 250 people.

JUBILEE OF A RAGGED-SCHOOL VETERAN.—The jubilee of Mr. Charles Montague, hon. superintendent of the King Edward-street Ragged school and Institute, was celebrated on Thursday evening last week, when an address and two albums were presented to him. Dr. William Tyler presided, and the presentation was made by Mr. H. R. Williams. The school was mainly originated by Dr. Tyler. Beginning with a dozen scholars, the school now contains about 1100, while the influence of the Mission generally is very largely extended among adults. Mr. Montague told remarkable life histories in connection with Christian work in London. At eight years of age, while earning his own livelihood, he was one of the first scholars; he was a teacher at sixteen; and now, for a quarter of a century, he has acted as a superintendent. Before the advent of the School Board the general work had so prospered that spacious buildings were erected as schools of industry, and one of them in Albert-street is now appropriated for ordinary purposes. Former scholars were found in the provinces, and in various parts of the world. Some were prospering splendidly in London, one being secretary to an hospital, while another was the wealthy deacon of a Christian church. As a reunion of old friends, and as a meeting for prayer and praise, the occasion will long be remembered.

Notices.

CORRECTION.—The conference reported in our last issue was at Dallinghoo, not Dollinghoo; and a clergyman mentioned is Rev. W. S. Walford, not Watford.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

In favour of the English Sunday Closing Bill, 4089 petitions have been presented, and only 23 against.

Permission has been given by the Bristol School Board for the delivery of temperance lectures in their schools.

A successful sixteen days' Gospel temperance mission has been held in a tent at Thurlow Park-road, West Norwood.

The fifty-fifth annual conference of the British Temperance League has been held at Scarborough. Good work has been done during the year.

The Government have promised to do their best to pass the Irish Sunday Closing Bill this session. The English Sunday Closing Bill is virtually dropped.

The Weekly Times and Echo indicts "the open public-house on Sunday as an unnecessary and noisome plague which should be suppressed," its "regulation" having proved impracticable.

A Glasgow firm agreeing recently with a young man to go to the West Coast of Africa as clerk, bound him to be a strict teetotaler on pain of instant dismissal and being sent home at his own expense.

Under the auspices of the Edinburgh Total Abstinence Society, open-air meetings are being held on Sabbath evenings. Good singing is an attractive feature, and there have been large audiences.

Temperance missions have been arranged for at New Cross and East Dulwich. The former will be conducted by Rev. F. Barclay, at Queen's-road, New Cross-gate, from July 13 to 22; and the latter by Mr. W. P. Goulding, with Mr. B. W. Burgess as local secretary, at Barry-road, Peckham-rye, from July 27 until Bank Holiday, August 5.

FOREIGN.

Mr. Glover has gone to Australia on three months' leave; he will address meetings in all the colonies there.

Miss Willard, president of the American Women's Christian Temperance Union, has issued an address eulogising the late Mrs. Hayes, and praising the earnest work carried on by her against the social use of intoxicants.

The saloon is a gathering-place for the pests of society. The anarchists of Chicago hatched their infamous plots in the dens of that city, and inflamed their wicked passions with the liquor those dens were licensed to furnish. A few years ago the authors of a series of incendiary fires were discovered in a city in New Jersey, and their confessions showed that they had been in the habit of meeting at a certain saloon to fortify their wicked purposes with whisky, and then go forth and apply the torch to somebody's barn or dwelling-house.—New York Independent.

East-end Gospel Mission.—Funds are urgently needed to continue the various branches of work, amongst which are visits to poor, to police, railway, and tramway men, sailors' bag mission, Bible flower mission, &c. Contributions may be sent to Mr. GEORGE FULLER, superintendent; or the hon. sec., Mr. JOSEPH BANKS, Brunswick Hall, Poplar, E.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT
TO MONDAY, JULY 15, 1889.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

Nearly 6000 girls have been benefited since the opening—50 provided with situations, 77 stayed at the Home, 17 trained for service. Funds are urgently needed, and an earnest appeal is made for donations and subscriptions towards the Girls' Home Fund.—G. H. BRETON, 84, Great Dover-street, Borough, S.E., Superintendent.

VINEGAR should be VINEGAR.

MOORE'S MALTINE VINEGAR

FOR FAMILY USE.

In FIVE-GALLON SEALED BARRELS DIRECT from the BREWERY.

SPECIALLY PREPARED FOR PICKLING, SALADS, AND THE TABLE.

The Public are respectfully requested to see that the Barrels are delivered to them with the Seals intact.

MOORE'S MALTINE VINEGAR is guaranteed free from all Adulterants, and to be the highest class of True Grain Vinegar, of full strength, in its natural purity, untampered with. It is brewed in the same manner as beer, the whole of the sugar and alcohol in the grain being transformed into the finest vegetable acid, producing the purest form of Vinegar known. After maturing for upwards of twelve months in enormous vats, of 80,000 gallons each, it is sent out in Sealed Barrels, which are filled fresh from the vats the same day as ordered.

MOORE'S MALTINE VINEGAR improves the longer it is kept. There is therefore a great economy in buying even so small a quantity as a 5-gallon barrel. The ordinary Vinegars of commerce will not keep, and where adulteration exists, they speedily become putrid.

Barrels of MOORE'S MALTINE VINEGAR can be ordered through any Grocer, or Italian Warehouseman, and will be delivered Free, Sealed, direct from the Brewery. Price, including Barrel and Patent Tap, Half-a-Guinea. Empty Barrels are re-filled at the Brewery and re-sealed for 8s. 6d.

If any difficulty is experienced in obtaining MOORE'S MALTINE VINEGAR (which is supplied only in Sealed Barrels), a Post-card to the MANAGER of the MIDLAND VINEGAR COMPANY, ASHTON CROSS, BIRMINGHAM, will bring the name of the nearest Retailer by return, or if preferred a Sample Barrel will be sent direct from the Brewery, CARRIAGE PAID, for 10s. 6d.

A New Invention. Changes Colour and Develops Ozone in Water.

SALT REGAL

Supplies a Refreshing, Appetising, Effervescing Drink.

SALT REGAL is a high-class Antiseptic Salt, possessing hygienic properties hitherto unknown to Science. A grateful cooling cup, developing Ozone (the principle of life). Will cleanse the mouth, clear the throat, sweeten the breath, and maintain a natural condition of the system. Corrects all impurities arising from the errors of diet—eating or drinking. Salt Regal has the special property of purifying the water in which it is mixed. Patent Rights protected throughout the world.

"As the result of careful analysis of 'Salt Regal' I certify that it is in every respect a well-made preparation. It forms a pleasantly palatable effervescent drink, possessing the useful refrigerant and mild laxative properties appertaining to the alkaline salts of vegetable acids, while the ozonic character of the salt and the development of a delicate rose colour while dissolving are novel features of this preparation, which give an agreeable freshness and attractive appearance. The general character of 'Salt Regal' renders it admirably adapted for domestic use, and especially so in tropical climates.

"B. H. PAUL, F.I.C., F.C.S., Analyst,
"20, Victoria Street, London, S.W."

SALT REGAL is sold in bottles (hermetically sealed), price 2s. 9d. It cannot be imitated, and stands alone. Be careful to observe Salt Regal is a delicate white powder, but it turns the water to a beautiful Rose Pink; unless it does this it is not genuine, and its sale should be at once reported to the Secretary of the Salt Regal Co. A real Royal Patent—Not a Patent Medicine. Patent Rights Protected in every civilised country. All London and Provincial Wholesale Houses regularly stock it.

SALT REGAL WORKS,
LONDON AND LIVERPOOL.

☞ If Salt Regal is not procurable from the nearest Chemist, a P.O. for 2s. 9d. addressed to the Manager, Salt Regal Works, Liverpool, will bring a Bottle by return of Post.

All who value their health and comfort will do well to give this New Discovery a trial.

"A CLEAR HEAD."

NEW WORK by Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

THE SHEPHERD PSALM:

MEDITATIONS on the 23rd PSALM.

"The Lord is my Shepherd:
I shall not want."

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

(OF REGENT'S PARK CHAPEL).

In a Pocket Volume, Cloth boards, 1s.;
Superior Edition—Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 1s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

"The Psalm of Psalms."
The Shepherd-Lord.
Pastures of Tender Grass and Waters of Rest.
"He Restoreth my Soul."
The Shepherd's Leading.
The Valley of Shadow.
Comfort through the Rod and the Staff.
"The Banquet."
"Thou anointest my head with oil."
The Overflowing Cup.
The Celestial Escort.
"The House of the Lord for ever."

. . . "And all this is the Psalm before us. It is an oasis in the desert; it is a bower on a hill of arduous climbing; it is a grotto in a scorching noon; it is a sequestered arbour for calm and heavenly meditation; it is one of the most holy places in the temple of Scripture. Come hither, weary ones, restless ones, heavy-laden ones; sit down in this cool and calm resort, whilst the music of its rhythm charms away the thoughts that break your peace. How safe and blest are you, to whom the Lord is Shepherd!"

Extract from First Chapter.

"Mr. Meyer always displays the force of a vital personality in his exposition of Scripture. It is this which attracts crowds to listen to his spoken addresses; and these never lose their force by being put into print. In the unfolding of the Shepherd Psalm he tells the story of its influence upon his own heart and life, and indicates subtle beauties which may have escaped the reader's notice. . . .

"This exposition is the work of a poet; it gives the precious fruit of searching, spiritual insight, and cannot fail to bring comfort to many a troubled heart, for it assures us that there is no want to the man who lives under the shepherd-care of God. It is needless to add that the little volume is studded with gems of thought."—Christian Leader, July 11, 1889.

"This book is beautifully illustrated, and so tastefully bound as to be a most acceptable gift book. . . . Our teachers may learn from it how to draw out the spiritual lessons of the sacred Word."—Gospel Magazine.

"The studies in the lives and times of Biblical characters which the Rev. F. B. Meyer has from time to time issued during the last few years have been marked by great care in preparation and a suggestiveness that has made them very acceptable to preachers and teachers. This is no less true of his latest work, "Abraham, or, The Obedience of Faith."—The Quiver.

"Mr. Meyer is a meditative writer, keen to observe the spiritual suggestions of Bible narratives. He works along the lines made familiar by the works of Dr. Macduff, but there are signs of wider reading, and a stronger and more independent mind. This book is beautifully illustrated, and so tastefully bound as to be a most acceptable gift book. But the contents are such that no Christian can rise from its perusal without feeling consciously strengthened in God, and inspired afresh for the godly life. Sunday-School Chronicle.

NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

PULVERMACHER'S WORLD-FAMED GALVANIC BELTS, for the cure of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION and DEBILITY, have received Testimonials from three Physicians to Her Majesty the Queen and the leading Physicians of Nine London Hospitals, including Forty Members of the Royal College of Physicians of London.

The distressing symptoms of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION and DEBILITY are speedily removed by means of Pulvermacher's World-famed Galvanic Belts, which are so arranged as to convey a continuous electric current direct to the affected parts, gradually stimulating and strengthening all the nerves and muscles, and speedily arresting all symptoms of waste and decay.

Dr. C. HANDFIELD JONES, F.R.C.P., F.R.S., Physician to St. Mary's Hospital, says: "I am satisfied that Mr. PULVERMACHER is an honest and earnest labourer in the field of science, and I think he deserves to meet with every encouragement from the profession and scientific men."

Dr. H. A. ALLBUTT, M.R.C.P., 24, Park Square, Leeds, writes, October, 1888: "I always recommend with confidence Mr. PULVERMACHER'S BELTS. Ladies recovering from illness incidental to their sex will find these BELTS of vast assistance in restoring lost nerve power."

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of a LITTLE BOY at BOURNE.

"We are very grateful for your kindness, and hope your treatment will be known the wide world over—that all may know that such fearful chest diseases as Consumption are curable."

So writes MR. SMITH BELTON, of 6, Exeter-row, BOURNE, who consulted me, in the spring of last year, respecting his son, a boy eight years of age.

Measles, occurring when the little patient was three years old, had left great weakness of the chest. The cough was now very bad, with much expectoration. Blood had been mixed with the phlegm, the breathing was much oppressed, there had been great loss of flesh and strength. At this critical period Mr. Belton saw an announcement in The Christian Million, which induced him to apply forthwith to me. The Rev. J. Woollerton, Wesleyan minister, of Bourne, also wrote me respecting him.

The result of my advice and medicine may be gathered from a letter of Mr. Smith Belton recently received: "Our son, Eugene, has continued well since recovering under your treatment. When I first wrote he was as low as he could be to be alive. From the commencement with your medicine he began to improve. He has now gone to school."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

WORKS by Rev. Dr. PENTECOST.

"It is well known in Boston that whenever Mr. Moody was obliged to be absent from the great assemblies or the inquiry-rooms of the Boston Tabernacle, in the winter of 1876, Dr. Pentecost was the only man who could fill the gap.

"I heard Dr. Pentecost several times in those days, and rejoiced greatly in his remarkable endowments, and their employment in the service of Biblical truth."—JOSEPH COOK.

OR, THE PROFIT AND PLEASURE OF BIBLE STUDY.

NINTH EDITION.

With Introductions by
Revs. JOSEPH COOK and J. H. VINCENT, D.D.

Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth limp, 2s.;
Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"This is an almost unique book; and it will, we are sure, be widely read by Bible Students. Dr. Pentecost has said and written many good things in his time; but we doubt if anything of more abiding value than this volume has yet issued from his laboratory."
Night and Day.

"We have read this work with unusual pleasure. It is full of healthy thinking. It contains a large amount of information; abounds with wise counsels; is tersely and racily written; and is certain to captivate every reader who has even the least desire to be instructed in the many matters with which, in the preparation of it, the author had to deal."—Baptist Magazine.

OUT OF EGYPT.

9th Thousand.

A SERIES OF ADDRESSES AND BIBLE READINGS ON THE EXODUS OF ISRAEL, AND ITS SPIRITUAL LESSONS.

Tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth limp, 2s. 6d.;
Cloth boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"Bright and manly in utterance scriptural in teaching; enriched everywhere with suitable anecdote and apt illustration—this volume is a most welcome and practical commentary on the portion of the Word with which it deals."—British Messenger.

"Will be found full of helpful and suggestive thoughts, both for the private reader and the teacher."
Christian Progress.

"Most profitable and spiritual. We wish a large circulation to these valuable Papers; and would recommend them as a useful present to the many young Christians entering upon the Divine life—that they may be kept from the worldly spirit of the Church of God in these last days."—Footsteps of Truth.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING FEMALE EDUCATION in the EAST.

THIS Society has been before the public for 55 years as one honoured and blessed of God; being the first of its kind, it has been the pioneer of all others labouring more or less upon the same lines; it has been permitted to see the work, which was once considered Utopian, fully recognised, not only as possible, but even as indispensable; and surely, therefore, it presents strong claims upon the sympathy and the liberality of the Lord's people.

A few who witnessed its establishment in 1834, are spared to see its object, so looked down upon at first, now one of the most popular of the day, taken up with hearty goodwill by all the churches, and by many private individuals. But what of the Mother Society? Old helpers enter into their rest, and their children do not fill their places, but push on newer plans. In consequence, the Mother Society suffers, and its funds diminish. This renders it necessary to utter a loud cry for help.

The Missionary ladies sent out by this Society have been permitted to bring in many "sheaves" with joy; though the earlier ones in the field had often to sow the good seed "weeping." Several of their stations have proved nurseries for native labourers, who are now a goodly array of workers among their countrywomen as Zenana Missionaries, School Mistresses, House and Hut Visitors.

The work carried on by the European ladies who have gone forth includes the establishment of Orphanages, Boarding, Day, and Infant Schools, Bible and Sewing Classes, Mothers' Meetings, Zenana and Harem Visiting, and Medical Work.

The sphere of the Society's operations includes China, Japan, India, Persia, Africa, and the Levant.

But this Society, with its band of faithful workers, and its rich harvest of souls, is not adequately supported, and, like many others since the prevailing depression, has the sorrow of announcing a deficit. They have had the pain of refusing many applications for labourers and for help; nor is this all. Already the Committee have been compelled to "draw in," instead of extending; and unless speedy and liberal help be afforded, further reductions will have to be made. Surely "these things ought not so to be."

Shall the Committee appeal in vain?

Contributions will be gratefully received by the Society's Bankers, Messrs. Herries, Farquhar & Co., 16, St. James'-street, S.W.; and by the Secretary, Miss Webb, 267, Vauxhall Bridge-road, S.W.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness

WISH to remind their friends that the COUNTRY BRANCH of their MISSIONARY TRAINING INSTITUTE—Cliff House, near Chatsworth, in the Peak of Derbyshire—will be THROWN OPEN as usual during the long vacation for the reception of Christian visitors and families.

The house is spacious and comfortable, and has lovely views from every window.

It is situated in one of the most attractive tourist districts in England, and stands in 20 acres of picturesque grounds, through which the River Derwent runs, close to the extensive grouse moors of the Duke of Rutland. The climate is bracing.

Tennis grounds, fishing, boating, &c.; library and observatory.

There is an Evangelical ministry in the parish, and interesting excursions on every hand.

TERMS, TWO GUINEAS A WEEK.

Full information on application to

The SECRETARY, Cliff House, Curbar, via Sheffield.

AMERICAN MISSIONARY SCHOOL AT CAWNPORE, INDIA.

THIS School has been working for some years under the earnest efforts of the missionaries of the American Methodist Episcopal Church. The number of European and Eurasian people in India is increasing, and many are so poor as to be unable to educate their children. The terms of this School are at the lowest possible rate, being for board and education only sixteen rupees a month, that is, in English money, about £1 2s. 0d.; but there are many children whose parents cannot afford even this sum, and it is most lamentable to see these children growing up in ignorance and idleness, particularly in a country like India. The Rev. Dr. Johnson, Superintendent of the Mission, writing, with reference to this School, under date of April 23 last, states:—

"I am moved to write just now because of the numerous needy cases coming to light. The Rev. Mr. Rockey, Principal of the School, has received, within the past month, applications for admission of twenty boys, nearly all of whom are unable to pay the fees, though so very low, and all asking for admission at greatly reduced rates, or altogether free. A widow with a family of children has an income of thirty rupees (about £2 1s. 3d.) a month. Another, with five children, has forty rupees (about £2 15s. 0d.) a month. A woman deserted by her husband, has two boys, whom she is very anxious to educate, has no income, but says she is willing to work her finger-nails off in order to have her boys educated. Two boys picked up a few days ago, without either father or mother, were taken to the School, but if they remain money must be secured somewhere.

"Well, under these circumstances, it is our duty to publish these facts, and present to the friends of humanity these as proper cases for their charity.

"The school has three perpetual scholarships, endowed by the late Mr. Petman, but there should be more such, and a still greater number of scholarships of less amount, say equal to about half the full fee charged by the school, to assist those who can pay something themselves, but cannot pay the full amount. Where parties can pay anything, be it ever so little, they should be required to do so.

"The sum of two hundred and twenty pounds at the present rate of exchange will permanently endow a scholarship which will support and educate a boy, and perpetually continue this good work. Half the sum will yield a scholarship which will perpetually meet half the expense of a student in cases where parents or friends can meet the other half. This school ought to have at once twelve more full scholarships, and twenty-five of the latter, or half-scholarships.

"To meet present need, contributions of sixteen pounds a year will support a boy, and half the sum one of the other class who can pay part. Are there not many of the Lord's stewards in England who will gladly invest a portion of their Lord's money to help his poor in this needy country?"

This School is under the management of a responsible Board of Trustees, regularly appointed by the American Methodist Episcopal Church Mission in North India. Reference may be made, and subscriptions paid, to the following gentlemen:—Sir William Muir, K.C.S.I., LL.D., late Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces of India, address, University of Edinburgh; John Inglis, Esq., C.S.I., late Chief Commissioner of Oude, address, 54, Melville-street, Edinburgh; or Lewis Ingram, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, of 24, Lewes Crescent, Brighton.

The GOSPEL of WEALTH

BY ANDREW CARNEGIE,

The American Millionaire.

Published at the Special Request of Mr. Gladstone.

Under the above title is published in the Pall Mall Budget, of Thursday, July 18, a remarkable article by Mr. Andrew Carnegie, the well-known Pittsburgh iron-master and millionaire.

The article has attracted the notice of Mr. Gladstone, who has spoken in the highest terms with regard to it, and strongly urged its publication in this country. Mr. Gladstone writes:—

"I have asked Mr. Lloyd Bryce (NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW) kindly to allow the republication in this country of the extremely interesting article on 'Wealth,' by Mr. Andrew Carnegie, which has just appeared in America."

BIBLE READINGS AND GOSPEL ADDRESSES.

By CHARLES INGLIS,

EVANGELIST.

Price 2s. Cloth boards, bevelled edges.

"The object of this volume is to help those who seek to speak for the Lord Jesus, and yet have little time at their disposal for the preparation of their message. Most of these Bible Readings it has been my privilege to deliver to thousands of workers in all parts of the world; and many of my hearers, who have received blessing and profit, have urged me to issue them in a printed form.

"We have gone through some thousands of references with a great deal of care, but should our readers find a blemish here or there, they will remember that many of these Bible Readings have been searched out on long railway journeys and ocean voyages.

"Should this volume be the means of stirring up any to search the precious Word of God, in these days when its fundamental truths are being denied, we shall feel that our labours have not been in vain."

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Mrs. Meredith, of the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, London, S.W.

Our report of the meetings at Fenaghy, near Ballymena (p. 20), demands the consideration of those who are making arrangements for Conferences and Conventions, from this point of view:—The great commandment of this dispensation is summed up in the words Foreign Missions. It has been usual to give to hortatory, expository, and evangelistic addresses, the chief place; and to relegate Missions to the afternoon on the closing day; to the tent or the lower room; to a sectional or supplementary gathering. The people have accepted the arrangement, and have treated this, the chief of the King's business, as though it were of minor importance.

But at Fenaghy on the second day the words spoken by Rev. W. S. Swanson and Mr. Radcliffe on Foreign Missions moved the thousands seated in the great natural amphitheatre in the open air as nothing previously had done. And when the speakers were followed by a comparatively unknown, though much-used evangelist (Mr. W. R. Lane), it was evident that the appeals on behalf of the unevangelised millions of other lands had been mightily used of God to break many hearts into fitness to receive a crucified Christ.

"Them that honour Me I will honour." The multitude of men and women, young and old, who rose to their feet, with an unusual emotion and enthusiasm, finding Christ upon the spot, or in the "Inquirers'" Tent, to which they followed Mr. Radcliffe, Mr. Lane, and others, were the seal of God's approval to the giving to Foreign Missions their foremost place.

A singular argument in favour of the Sunday Closing of Public-houses comes from Liverpool, where the School Board, on the motion of Miss Davies, have resolved to send a petition to Parliament, in which it is stated that "the sale of intoxicating drink on Sundays militates against the objects for which the School Board was called into existence." The Liverpool Board have discovered that Sunday drinking is followed in only too many cases by appeals for the remission of school fees; but what about the effect of it upon the children themselves?

An article in The Century Magazine, on "The Temperance Question in India," is written by one who is fully acquainted with the subject. He tells us that intoxicating liquors in India are designated by the natives "Government Shame Water." Hindu and Mohammedan rulers discouraged their manufacture and use. The English Government took the manufacture into their hands, made itself the bar-keeper to the Indian Empire, and obtained a revenue from the sale of intoxicants among a people whose social customs were in favour of temperance. This is an indictment that ought to be read with shame. The writer adds: "The proof is overwhelming that the temperate Hindus are becoming a nation of drunkards." Happily, there are native movements to arrest it; but, if at home we have no power to do this, ought not every pulpit in the land to hear occasionally a confession of our guilt in the matter?

Lord Wolseley, speaking on the Drink question in the Army, at the Crawford Rooms the other day, expressed his conviction that the only way to secure an efficient army is to have good and moral soldiers, and that the only way to obtain good and moral soldiers is to get them to abstain from intoxicating drink. He further averred that his own experience of an abstaining regiment was that the soldiers performed their work better than others, enjoyed better general health, and did not expose themselves to punishment for offences. We rejoice that a General in Lord Wolseley's position should make so emphatic a stand in this matter, and that his weighty influence in the Army has been enlisted upon the right side.

"Cruel cheapness" is being shown to have results which may reach far beyond the miserable homes of the sweater's victims. Before the House of Lords committee a few days ago, Dr. Bate, Medical Officer of Health for Bethnal Green, testified that he had visited sweaters' workshops, in which partly finished clothes had been placed upon fever patients to keep them warm, and that frequently rag sorting, in the midst of filth, was carried on in the basements. Perhaps a knowledge of this attendant danger may stimulate the public mind in regard to the necessity for prompt legislation as to sweating. Such a stimulus appears to be required, if we may judge from the comparative apathy with which the question is being treated; and sometimes an appeal to selfishness is successful when other appeals to nobler motives have failed.

Archdeacon Farrar recently stated in convocation that there are in London 100,000 paupers, 80,000 fallen women, and 60,000 married people living in single rooms, and that to this mass some two hundred and forty souls are being added every hour. In the face of these figures (the terrible truth of which could be vouched for by many an unknown but quietly heroic worker in the London courts and alleys) it may well be asked, in the words of Mr. Francis Peek, "Is this the grand result of the wisdom of our legislators, the efforts of our philanthropists, the Christianity of our churches?" But whilst deploring this human wreckage, it must not be forgotten that much of it is preventable; indiscriminate almsgiving, early and reckless marriages "within half-a-crown of destitution," imperfect enforcement of existing laws and regulations, an administration of poor-relief, which is often either injuriously excessive or cruelly inadequate, are among the causes of the first item in the above indictment. Is not Society itself largely responsible for those thousands of its erring sisters? And, it is once more asked, How much longer is the mass of evidence collected by the Royal Commission on the Housing of the Poor to lie unproductive in official pigeon-holes?

It appears from evidence given last week before the House of Lords' Commission on the Sweating System that, in 1888, no fewer than 130,000 dozen pairs of boots, valued at £390,000, were imported into this country, and this at a time when myriads of our own work-people were literally starving. This is another example of the results accruing from the public demand to have articles "cheap." As a consequence the great army of the unemployed is ever increasing.

The proposal to establish orders of lay and clerical brotherhoods, which formed the basis of the article "Convocation Copying Rome" in our last issue, has called forth the following from a well-known writer:—

> Not many faithful members of the Church of the blessed Reformation could have read of the proposal in Convocation for orders of lay and clerical brotherhoods, under vows of celibacy, poverty, and obedience, without a painful foreboding that a development of the monastic system, once so terrible a bane to this country, is threatening it again after a merciful cessation of three hundred years. Whether the plan of life vows, or of vows which may possibly be released by the Bishop of the diocese before whom they were taken, should obtain, the result would differ little as to the dangers and evils of the system. The blessed influences of home life, the sacred ties of husband and of father, would thus be cut off from the flower of the enthusiastic young home missionaries of the land. There would be no gentle influences to soften the asperities of their middle age and no tenderness to comfort their declining years. Without alluding to the moral evil, which all history betrays as incident upon the monastic system, is there not enough in these facts to make us foresee that such an organisation would be shorn of its best qualifications for benefiting others, as surely as its members would suffer hopeless loss for themselves? Let us, therefore, stretch forth our hands towards heaven, and plead with our faithful God, for his dear Son's sake, to deliver us from so tremendous a danger to our Church and country. What cannot that blessed Saviour win for us, whether of dangers averted or of blessings granted? For He Himself has promised, "If ye shall ask anything in my name I will do it." Let us then continually implore Him for a fresh outpouring of his Spirit on our Church and country, that the love of his truth, untampered with and unadded to, may still be the strength and the glory of our land. CREDO.

Professor Masson has told an interesting incident in the life of Thackeray, who, walking one day in the slums of London, came upon a band of gutter children singing the hymn, "There is a happy land, far, far away," whose faces lighted up with the sweet thought. The hymn has been translated into nineteen languages, and is to be found in nearly every hymn-book. Although it is fifty-one years since it was composed and published, its author, Mr. Andrew Young, was present, several weeks ago, at a children's service in Edinburgh, and gave an address. Mr. Young is now eighty years of age, but we trust he may long be spared to hear his hymn sung by the little ones.

We have to remind contributors that we cannot undertake to return communications, that are found unsuitable for insertion although we do so in the case of lengthy papers, if desired.

The Times' Calcutta correspondent writes as follows:—

A case illustrating the hardship inflicted by Hindoo marriage customs, and the growing feeling of revolt by native women, has been creating considerable interest in Bombay. A young Hindoo widow applied to the magistrate for protection. She stated that she was left a widow at nine years of age. She had been cruelly treated by her relations, and had determined to re-marry; but all her caste people threatened her with persecution. The magistrate referred her, with an introductory letter, to Madhowdas Rugnathdas, the famous Hindoo social reformer, who not only provided her with shelter, but arranged for her re-marriage in his own house. This is the twenty-eighth widow whom he has enabled to re-marry, sixteen of these marriages having taken place under his roof. A large number of Hindoos were present at the marriage.

Progress in the noble work of improving the conditions of female life in India must needs be slow. The abuses of centuries cannot be remedied in a year, but the incident recorded above is encouraging, since it indicates that there exists the germ of a healthier public opinion in Hindoo society on this vital question.

At a recent meeting, at Lord Aberdeen's house, of the committee formed to see the Shop Hours' Regulation Act enforced, one of the speakers stated that in London alone over a million persons are required to give from 75 to 100 hours of labour per week, or, in some cases, more than 14 hours each day, Sunday included. It is not so much fresh legislation that is needed as a number of individuals who will take trouble to see the existing laws applied.

We are glad to see that a subject which we frequently referred to in these columns—the excessive hours of labour of railway servants—has at length come under discussion in the House of Lords, Earl de la Warr having expressed the very general feeling that some restriction ought to be placed upon the companies in the matter. It was stated that many railway servants, including signalmen and engine-drivers, were kept on continuous duty from fifteen to eighteen hours at a stretch. The matter will not now be allowed to drop, and we trust that remedial legislation may not long be delayed; and if it can be made to bear specially upon Sabbath day labour, so much the better for all concerned.

All loyal subjects of the Crown must have read with deep regret the announcement made in an evening paper that the Prince of Wales was a winner last week of over £11,000 at the illegal game of baccarat. It will be remembered that it was for playing this game that the members of the notorious Field Club were made amenable to the law some weeks ago. The Prince should recollect that "to whom much is given, of him shall much be required," and that he owes it to his high position to set a useful example to society. His influence, whether for good or bad, must necessarily be enormous, and, if for no other reason, it behoves him to behave with extreme circumspection, lest by any action of his he should cause other men to offend. The vice of gambling is one which has been making huge and alarming strides of late years in this country, and the consequent evils are so extensive and alarming that no protest can be too emphatic against any course which may tend to popularise or diffuse it.

A recent statement by Rev. Dr. Dale condenses recent questions as to "broad views" and "honest doubts" in the pulpit, into such small compass that we should like to see it circulated in all directions:—

It is the duty of the man who would be a minister to master the mysteries of God (1 Cor. iv. 1), in order that he may communicate them to others. Without these he is powerless to distribute the treasures of which he ought to be steward—for he has no treasures to distribute. This conception cuts away at the roots of a conception that began to be entertained some twenty years ago—the conception that a man with "honest doubts" might yet be a good minister. I differ from those who think such persons ought to be ministers of Christ. They should remain among the learners. A minister must be a servant of Christ, not a critic of Christ. He must have sure knowledge of what Christ teaches, and must have absolute, unreserved, exulting devotion to Christ.

The Nonconformist ministers of Chester are doing well to protest emphatically against the action of the Mayor and Corporation, in decorating the streets and gates of that city on a Sunday, in honour of the passage of the Shah. They rightly regard it as a gross desecration of the Sabbath, and pronounce the occasion to have been a day of humiliation for them. Our country is especially privileged in the possession of its Sabbath, and it must be clearly recognised and unwearyingly pointed out that those who seek to abolish or neutralise it are setting their faces against the precepts of Scripture, and the interests of the nation. It especially behoves those in authority to "remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

Popular education is to have a prominent place in the approaching Church Congress at Cardiff. Chairmen of the School Boards of London, Manchester, and Birmingham, with clerical educationalists, are expected to take part in the proceedings. We hope there may also be representatives from rural schools, where attendance is professedly under the supervision of Boards of Guardians. The crime and pauperism of our cities are being alarmingly swollen by those who come up from our country parishes. With twenty-five per cent. of absentee children from our English schools, against four in Germany, the nation has a right to expect that the causes shall be fully inquired into.

It is not surprising that proprietors of theatres and actors generally should leave no stone unturned to upset the decision of the House of Commons, prohibiting the employment in places of public amusement of children under ten. The question affects their pockets, and therefore any action they may take can scarcely be unbiassed. The true friends of the children will continue to wish for them some better fate than familiarity with the glare of the footlights, and the unreality of stage plays at such an early age. In a letter to The Times, Mrs. Fawcett finds a timely illustration of the harm that such occupation works on the young, in the recent attempt at suicide on the part of a very youthful performer. As a contemporary points out, it is a significant fact that The Era, the leading journal of the theatrical profession, is opposed to the employment of children.

The deputation of "leading members of the theatrical profession" which waited upon Lord Dunraven last week were curiously at sea in their arguments. Mr. Augustus Harris, to prove one point, declared that "the managers of the theatres took the children as ragamuffins, and manufactured them into respectable members of society. They took them from the gutters, from bad influences, and gave them technical education, and provided for their comfort." But Mr. Oscar Barrett, to prove another, observed that "theatrical children generally were far better off than ordinary children. They were supposed to be gutter children, but they were not; they were mostly the children of people connected with theatres."

In the House of Lords, on Monday, Earl Granville urged an important consideration:—

That not a single argument had been used against prohibiting the employment of children in theatres which was not applicable to principles which, rightly or wrongly, Parliament had adopted in other legislation. There were already factory prohibitions, mining prohibitions, and agricultural prohibitions, and in each of these cases it was urged that injury would be inflicted both upon employers and employed. He thought it was too late now to make such an exception as was asked, and to legalise the performances of children in theatres and other places of amusement.

We earnestly hope that the Bill will pass through the final stage untouched.

The last issue of the annual statement in regard to Roman Catholic Missions has just been sent out from the Propaganda press, and from it we gather that in Ireland the Roman Catholic estimated number of Romanists is 3,792,357, with 3251 priests, and 2547 chapels. In England the Roman Catholic population is stated to be 1,353,455, with priests 2340, and chapels 1261, and in Scotland 338,643 Romanists, with 329 priests, and 295 chapels. It is not by any means likely that these figures have been under stated, and they may, therefore, be taken as a fair basis for any comparative statement with reference to the spread of Romanism in these islands. And yet many Christians "see no cause to fear that Popery will ever gain ground in England again"!

MR. E. P. TELFORD'S meetings at the Great Assembly Hall during the past week have been scenes of much blessing. There was a breaking down on Sabbath night week, and the results have been appearing every succeeding evening. Prayer is asked for this the concluding week.

THEATRICAL EMPLOYEES. — Mr. William Forbes took a second party of ladies connected with the ballet for a day's outing on Epsom Downs on Friday last. The party consisted of about 140 women employed at the Alhambra Theatre. At the close of the day hymns were sung, and a gospel address was delivered by Mr. Forbes. The stage manager of the Alhambra was present, and expressed his indebtedness to Mr. Forbes for the kindly interest taken in his employées. Friends interested in this work may communicate with Mr. Forbes, at 71, Tollington-road, Holloway, N.

The Good Tidings of the Reign of God.

I.—THE REBEL.

"And these good tidings of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the inhabited earth, for a testimony unto all the nations; and then shall the end come" —MATT. xxiv. 14, R.V. margin.

Oh, what a bright and blessed world
This groaning earth of ours will be,
When from its throne the tempter hurl'd,
Shall leave it all, O Lord, to Thee.

The late SIR E. DENNY.

WORDS lose their significance by being technically used. "The Gospel of the Kingdom of God" is a phrase which, to many minds, conveys no definite and well-formed idea. Let us translate it into The Good Tidings of the Reign of God, for that is the true meaning of the term.

To a nation whose king had been deposed and his throne occupied by a wicked and tyrannical usurper, there could be no good tidings in the full sense of those words, except the restoration of his dominion to the rightful king. God has not been deposed from the throne of the universe, but He has been deposed from his rightful throne in the hearts of men. To the world writhing in the serpent coil of Satan, its usurping prince and god, there can be no gospel but the Gospel of the Kingdom; no good news but the Good News of the Reign of God.

It may be fairly gathered from Isa. xiv. and Ezek. xxviii. that Satan rebelled against God, and was consequently cast from the heaven which his ambition would have turned into a hell. Just as in the Messianic Psalms we perceive the personality of the Son of God beyond that of David or Solomon, so do we perceive another beside the King of Babylon in Lucifer, son of the morning. We understand the Prince of this world when Ezekiel addresses the Prince of Tyrus: "Thou art wiser than Daniel; there is no secret they can hide from thee." And we know that none but Satan exhausts the pregnant meaning of the lamentation upon the King of Tyrus: "Thou hast been in Eden the garden of God...Thou art the anointed cherub that covereth; and I have set thee so: thou wast upon the holy mountain of God; thou hast walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire. Thou wast perfect in thy ways, from the day that thou wast created, till iniquity was found in thee....Thy heart was lifted up because of thy beauty....Thou shalt be a terror, and never shalt thou be any more." So also in the New Testament we know that when Jesus had spoken of his coming death, and Peter said, "Pity Thyself: this shall not be unto Thee," the Lord heard the hiss of the Old Serpent within the disciple's voice, and answered, "Get thee behind Me, Satan."

This fallen spirit has become the prince of this world, since the fatal day when Adam put his faith in Satan, repented from God, and rebelled against Him. Thus transferring his allegiance to the tempter, Adam lost the royalty which he had received from God, and from being a ruler under the King of Love he became a serf of the usurping tyrant.

But the real enmity of Satan was not against man, but God; his victory over the creature in Paradise was indeed an attempt at victory over the Creator in heaven. From that day to this the sons of God in heaven have prayed, as the Saviour taught us to pray on earth, "Thy kingdom come: hy will be done, as in heaven so on earth."

Every crisis in human history has been an era in government. To Adam and to Noah dominion over the earth was given; but the latter failed more disastrously than the former had done. Then God chose a nation to be a royal priesthood to Himself—a kingdom of priests; but they disqualified themselves by the worship of the golden calf. God had separated them from the nations to be a peculiar treasure unto Himself; but his people rejected Him, and would have a king like all the nations. Saul was a man after their own heart, and he soon failed. But also the man after God's own heart failed, even of his own ideal—"he that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God." Self-indulgence in his son led to tyranny in the grandson, and the divided kingdom bore witness in its conquest and captivity, that, unruled by God, kings cannot reign, nor princes decree justice.

Then rule passed over to the Gentiles, and the four successive monarchies made manifest that under the Prince of this world, who ruled through the princes of this world (1 Cor. ii. 8), there could only be wars and fightings, sin and misery—no righteous, beneficent, and permanently successful rule. To rule and to feed are synonymous terms (Mic. v. 4; Matt. ii. 6).

It had been an important part of the mystery of God to suffer the arch rebel against the Divine government to prove before the principalities and powers in heavenly places his incapacity to direct the affairs of one little world: how much more to rule the universe! The ancients embodied their perception of this truth in the myth of Phaethon's attempt to drive the chariot of the sun, and its disastrous consequences. For the wisdom of the Prince and of the princes of this world comes to nought; they did not know God's hidden wisdom: for had they known it they would not have crucified the Lord of glory; by which deed they brought themselves to nought (Heb. ii. 14).

God might have crushed the rebellion of Satan by his instant destruction; but in his wisdom He permitted the king of pride to develop the spirit which was in him, and suffered its wickedness to work itself out to the bitter end, that all created intelligences might see the contrast between the reign of the rebel and the reign of God.

SOUTH RUSSIA.—A correspondent writes to tell of the spiritual needs of an English colony, about a hundred miles from Mariapul, South Russia. The colony embraces some 350 residents, employed in the place, and they have no stated means of grace. Anyone who feels led to volunteer for this service should communicate with Mr. Thomas Wiskin, Hersovsky Steel Company Limited, Henzova, South Russia.

THE JESUITS IN CANADA.—Under the persistently aggressive endeavours of the Jesuit Society to obtain possession of the land, the Protestant community are being brought face to face with a power the Old World is shaking off as the foe of human liberty and progress, and which is finding on Canadian soil a strong fulcrum for its leverage, whereby it hopes to gain again the elevation from which it has been most righteously thrown. It may be questioned whether there is any spot on this earth to-day where Roman Catholicism is as firmly seated or as richly endowed as in the Canadian province of Quebec. A moderate estimate rates these endowments at a minimum of £10,000,000 sterling, which, under existing circumstances, yield an annual revenue of £600,000. A Church containing less than a quarter million of families rejoices in an annual income of two million and a half sterling, or twelve million dollars! Propaganda schools in the neighbouring States and in other parts of the Dominion have their headquarters in Quebec.—Nonconformist.

State Insurance.

AN experiment in workmen's insurance against old age is being tried in Holland which will be watched by philanthropists, and all interested in social questions. In order to secure to workmen when sixty years old a pension of not less than five shillings a week, the employers, who are members of the "Employers' Union of the Netherlands," make a weekly contribution of threepence per man towards the necessary premium, the workmen paying the balance. Provision is made for the insurance of apprentices, who are not required to pay any premiums until they attain twenty-one. It is also proposed to establish a fund, out of which may be paid the premiums of workmen temporarily disabled from labour. Another good feature of the scheme is that cessation of payments does not entail forfeiture of all benefits, or loss of the premiums already paid, but in case of the insured living to be sixty, he receives a proportionate allowance.

It will be instructive to compare the working of such a scheme of voluntary co-operation with that of the German system of compulsory insurance aided by a State subsidy, which latter, beginning with trades exposed to special risk has been gradually extended to other trades and industries, and is now assuming very large proportions, the details of which recently occupied more than four columns of The Times. Though the German plan may savour somewhat of imperialism and State socialism, and though its success may be doubtful, yet it is difficult to see how, as was objected by a speaker in the recent debate in the Reichstag, it will discourage frugality and thrift. It is better, surely, that a man should provide against "a rainy day" and old age involuntarily than not at all. Thrift being by no means too common a virtue among the English working classes, it would be well if some carefully considered insurance or superannuation scheme on similar lines to the above, but without invoking State aid, were set on foot in our own country. In addition to its primary object it might tend to promote good feeling between employers and employed.

BRITISH TROOPS IN EGYPT.

DEAR SIR,—Last night the workers of Miss Robinson's Sailors' and Soldiers' Institute at Alexandria went to the railway station to bid "Good-bye" to several soldiers whose spiritual birthplace was our Institute, and who, whilst cheerfully going forward in the service of Queen and country, yet deeply regretted losing the privileges they enjoyed here. Some of these have left what few valuables they possess in our charge, in case they find their graves in the Soudan.

During the week we have bidden farewell to hundreds of soldiers en route for Assouan, at the same time supplying them with tracts and periodicals, as well as some little comforts for the journey.

Our balance-sheet, made up to the end of last-year, showed an outlay of £2,291 15s. 4d., and at ordinary times we require only £200 a year in voluntary subscriptions to support the work; but we cannot get even that out here.

Now that several other regiments will be passing through, and at least one more stationed here, we hope your readers will help us in this emergency, so that the work may not be crippled.—Yours,

THE PAKEFIELD CONFERENCE will be held on August 13 and 14, instead of on the 14th and 15th inst., as previously advertised, in consequence of another local arrangement.

Our Spanish Brethren.

A SPANISH Christian brother takes exception to some depreciatory remarks which an Englishman had made, to the effect that the Spanish people were "not too capable of living the Gospel." We entirely and emphatically endorse the Spaniard's objection, whether made respecting his or any other nation. We believe the notion which he resents to be utterly unscriptural. Taking all the circumstances into view, the national characteristics of Englishmen may come under as severe condemnation from God as those of any people.

The Apostles never thus depreciated the Gospel in relation to the Gentile world. No worse character was ever stated of a nation than that of the Cretans by a prophet of their own: "The Cretans are alway liars, evil beasts, slothful gluttons"; yet the Apostle of the Gentiles instructed Titus to "ordain elders in every city," men "blameless" in word and deed, and drew a picture of saintly life to be realised in Crete, second to none in Jerusalem, where great grace was upon them all, or in Antioch, where the teaching of Paul and the pastoral care of Barnabas had produced a people so Christlike that the disciples were first called Christians there.

Even the bondslaves of these degraded Cretans were exhorted and expected so to walk as to "adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things." To suppose one nation to be less amenable to the Gospel than another is to falsify and degrade the Gospel: for the most respectable and estimable men are only flesh, and equally with the worst must be born again to enter the kingdom of God. If any people now are not "capable of living the Gospel," then the Gospel has lost its power to turn the world upside down. This comparison of ourselves with others, to our own advantage, must be one of the greatest hindrances to the Gospel in our hands. It is contrary to the love which hopeth all things, believeth all things, and which never faileth; it is unjust to the people whom we thus depreciate; and it limits the Holy Spirit.

The Apostle, who even in his unconverted days was the most exemplary of men (Phil. iii. 4—6), is so far from comparing himself with the Cretans to their disadvantage, that he reminds Titus that

> We ourselves also were sometimes foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful and hating one another.

And he attributes his and Titus's participation in the common salvation, not to works of righteousness which they had done, but to the love and mercy of God to man, through the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost, which they needed as abundantly, through Jesus Christ our Saviour, as the quondam liars, and evil beasts, and lazy gluttons of Crete.

When the writer was in Spain, some such remark as that quoted at the beginning of this paper led him to see that Titus i. 12 is the key to the whole Epistle, and that great significance is given to every statement and exhortation, by the fact that the Gospel of the grace of God was relied upon by the Holy Ghost to produce out of such human mud diamonds of the first water for the crown of Christ. No minister of Christ has attained the right point of view from which to look upon his work until he has brought the natural character of the heathen (Titus i. 12) into line with his own (iii. 3—7), and set his seal to the truth that the grace of God which bringeth salvation TO ALL MEN hath appeared, teaching Jew and Cretan, Englishman and Spaniard, nominal Christian and heathen devil-worshipper, all alike, that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ; who gave Himself for us, all alike, that He might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto Himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works.

The Church is beginning to realise the fact that the preaching of the Gospel to every creature must depend largely on native evangelists, pastors, and teachers; but nothing could more surely hinder their efficiency than to learn that those who have brought them the Gospel, and who say they are not ashamed of it, for it is the power of God, believe that other nations, Spaniards for example, are (to put it mildly) "not too capable of living the Gospel." In other words, that the Gospel is not the power of God to them.

We earnestly hope that all missionaries who are holding this erroneous opinion will weigh it in the balances of the sanctuary, and then we are sure they will cast it from them with indignation. M.

"TELL JESUS."

"The Lord God will help me, therefore shall I not be confounded."—ISA. l. 7.

I ONCE occupied the first floor in a house, the ground floor of which was tenanted by an invalid gentleman and his valet. Weeks passed, and I had not met with any opening for ascertaining whether he knew my Master, when my landlady told me that her ground-floor lodger was about to leave on the morrow. A pang went through my heart, that I had not made some effort either by paper, or book, or some act of courtesy, to reach my neighbour. I looked through my leaflets and books, and nothing suitable presented itself except "Tell Jesus." It seemed useless to offer the message of the King to one, who, I had now heard, did not believe in his power, or even in the person of the King, and could therefore have no interest in, or comprehension of, all that these two words enshrined.

Long Satan sought to turn me from my purpose. But when I gave up the thought, I became burdened, and it seemed better for me and my book to be rejected, than to miss an opportunity of blessing, by trying to help a soul to know more of a Saviour's love and power in life's daily walk, so I sent it.

On the morning of his departure my neighbour desired to see me. He came, announced by the landlady. He was of middle age, of a military figure and bearing, well bred and gentle in his manner; the expression of deep distress and dejection on his countenance, added to the marks of recent illness and suffering, awoke my sympathy.

He acquiesced in the few words I spoke, but, as if to close our interview, he thanked me for thinking of him and sending him the book, in which he requested me to write his name. I complied, and then, as though avoiding anything more personal, he said the binding was tasteful, and the type good, a rare thing in these cheap book days, and, as if to prevent another word, added that his train was due; and he was gone, leaving me to ask the Lord to speak through the words that had already so often conveyed a message of His love, and to comfort the heart of the stranger.

Before the year was gone the gentleman returned to the neighbourhood on his way to London, and a few days later he sent up his card with a request that I would see him. As he entered, I was struck with the alteration in his appearance; the heavy cloud of distress had passed from his face, and the air of cheerfulness with which he greeted me was quite unlike that of the dejected invalid who had taken leave of me in the spring.

I was a little startled when he told me that at the time of his first visit he had just left an asylum in which he had been unjustly detained. His valet was in fact his warder, and, though his health was quite restored, his family could not agree to his attendant being dismissed. This perpetual oversight and inquisition had driven him nearly to despair. After he had left me, and arrived at his new abode, he pondered again and again as to the way by which he could free himself from the painful restraint of his presence that continually kept up the remembrance of his past misery.

That night, when he went to rest (though not to sleep), the book which I had given him fell from his pocket, and to his despairing cry, "What can I do?" the golden letters on the little messenger replied, "Tell Jesus." "I will tell Jesus," he cried (as he repeated the matter to me); "but will that really help a man in such trouble as I am in? Nevertheless I did so. I knelt down and told Him, yet not knowing how I could be helped." He continued, "I went down to breakfast next morning, my attendant bringing in my tray. He seemed very cross, and, as he placed it on the table, he abruptly said that he was going to leave me, and would not stay another day with me. It was like an electric shock; for a moment I doubted my senses. No, it was true, and no illusion. He left at once. I do believe in my Saviour," added my friend, "but I never thought that I could tell Him, or that He would hear me on such a matter as this, and answer me too!" How many of us have felt the same when the Lord has "dealt wondrously" with us. He has revealed things to come, or given us sudden deliverance, and we are afraid to take the blessing, perhaps remembering our unworthiness, forgetting that He has accepted us in "the Beloved," and He will never forsake his own; as if our joyful comprehension of his favour boded disaster; see Judges xiii. 22, 23.

As the gentleman recounted the circumstances, I could trace one of those painful and cruel detentions, that a little patience, kindness, and firmness would have prevented, and the embittering of a life that only the power of the Great Physician could heal; but he was healed, and has since had opportunities of pointing others to the little rivulet of the Fountain of Life that flowed from the now silent lips of Emily Gosse. OMNIBUS AND TRAMCAR MEN.—On Sunday week, at 7 a.m., Mr. John A. Arnold, the city missionary, gathered about 100 tram drivers and conductors to a substantial breakfast in the Athenæum, Camden-road. Addresses were delivered by various friends. Mr. J. Barber Glenn, the secretary of the Tram Company, informed the men that he should be glad to hear any grievances at any time, and hoped the day would soon come when they should be able to get more rest on Sunday. Mr. Arnold would gladly confer with any clergyman or minister who would like to arrange for a similar meeting. His address is 26, Oseney-crescent, Camden-road, N.

REV. DR. THAIN DAVIDSON preached his monthly sermon to young men, in Colebrook-row Presbyterian Church, Islington, on Sunday week, thus completing his eleventh year of these services. His subject was, "The Mysterious Young Man" (Mark xiv. 51). This young man, who followed Jesus, but, who on being laid hold of, fled, was taken as a type of many in our own day, who follow for a time in the Saviour's footsteps, but who, on being sneered at by their companions, are turned aside through not having a firm foundation. Young men were earnestly and affectionately warned against the danger of relying too much on youthful and sudden impulse, also of allowing themselves to be frightened out of their religious profession, and were entreated to see to it that they were established fast upon the Rock, which is Christ.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR:—FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Reply of "A Missionary" to Mrs. Guinness' "Critique" in "The Regions Beyond" for April.—II.

ABOUT MIRACLES.

(6) THE sixth objection is thus formulated in the "Critique": "The most dangerous feature of the series of articles under consideration is the assumption—for it is nothing more—the groundless and most misleading and mischievous assumption, that but for Christian unbelief miracles would never have ceased." I sought to be temperate and guarded in all I said on what I termed "the confessedly difficult question of the recurrence of miracles in the present day." Mr. Stock, with kind candour, passed over this point of "miraculous power" with the comment, "I will not enlarge on this, as 'A Missionary' does not lay great stress upon it." He adds then the statement which is the opposite of Mrs. Guinness' above quoted: "But I agree with him that we have no warrant for saying that the age of miracles is past for ever, and no right to limit the honour it may please God to put upon faith." (Well said, my esteemed brother! Your spiritual instincts all through are better than your literary arguments. We may be at one yet on the main issues.) I will just mention the names of some who have believed or testified that miracles did not cease with the Apostles, and who in this respect differ from Mrs. Guinness. They include Justin Martyr, Irenæus, Tertullian, Origen, Clement, Mosheim, Eusebius, Luther, Bengel, the Waldenses, the Moravians, the Scotch Covenanters, Archbishop Tillotson, Dr. Gerhard Uhlhorn, Dr. Waterland, Dodwell, Dr. Marshall, Professor Christlieb, and many more.

I submit that the ground the "Critique" takes is unsafe. The first incline in the "Down-Grade" theology (whose motto is "Christianity without dogma or miracle") on miracles is, "None are possible now." The second is not far on, viz., "There never were any miracles, according to the popular conception of a miracle." Doubtless the gifted authoress of the "Critique" is safe enough in this regard; but her strongly put assertion may be DETRIMENTAL TO WEAKER MINDS.

On this subject of miracles, the "Critique" gives us a thought which is prominent in "The Approaching End of the Age"—viz., that God had "grouped these supernatural signs around the great crisis of God's revelation of Himself to man—around the great epochs of the creation, the Flood, the call of Abraham, the exodus, the restoration of Divine worship in the days of Elijah and Elisha, the critical days of Daniel, and the first advent of Christ." True. And this clears the ground well for an obvious remark before which the objection to miracles in this day must retire as a silenced argument. The remark is that, according to "The Approaching End of the Age" itself, as well as the conviction of all pre-millenarians," one of these "great crises," these "epochs," is now "approaching"—yea, is upon us—the coming again in glory of our blessed Lord. How suitable, then, that our faith thus instructed, not only by God's Word, but by the prophetic writings of our friends Mr. and Mrs. Guinness, should be looking out for the recurrence of these "supernatural signs."

Or we may look at it thus: According to Mrs. Guinness's principle of the recurrence of miracles they may be looked for in such days of departure from God and his truth as marked Elijah and Elisha's time, or in such critical days as those of Daniel. Surely, then, we may look for them now. Is not this a time of departure from the truth and worship of God? Are not these "critical" and "perilous times"? It would not be difficult to bring from the books on prophecy just alluded to abundant evidence of this being the character of these days. What, then, could be more appropriate than the interference of God in miracles? I do not say this. I only attach to Mrs. Guinness's own words their necessary outcome. While avowedly combating a thought she imputes to me, and which she terms "groundless and most misleading and mischievous," she becomes my instructor in that very line of things, and is, in the logical consequence of her own reasonings, in advance of me therein.

Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, U.S.A., in his book, "The Ministry of Healing," writes: "But now comes a most suggestive fact: that wherever we find a revival of primitive faith and apostolic simplicity, there we find a profession of the chaste and evangelical miracles which characterised the apostolic age. These attend the cradle of every spiritual reformation as they did the birth of the Church herself. Waldenses, Moravians, Huguenots, Covenanters, Friends, Baptists, Methodists, all have their record of them." This is true. Is not even now the last of the reformations upon us? What then may we not expect?

Then we are told that the value of miracles would have been destroyed if they had continuously occurred. But they did not continuously occur. Surely if this is a valid objection, it is sufficiently met by the fact which is asserted, that for more than a millennium and a half miracles have been absent. Then may they not recur again safely in the little time of the dispensation that remains, without "their value being destroyed," or the rule our critic lays down seriously infringed?

A VITAL POINT.

We are then told that to be consistent, Matt. x. missionaries ought to heal diseases, and cast out devils. Here is touched the point that to my mind is more vital than all else that has been said either in the "Critique" or the "Remarks" of Mr. Eugene Stock. But this is God's work, not ours. However, when the scepticism so common among God's people, and which is well illustrated by the paper under review, is somewhat lessened, the healing of the sick and casting out of devils will be more possible to those who would gladly exercise the needed faith. It is a grave question as to how far the general unbelief of the Church is responsible for the weak and partial character of "faith healings" at home, and their almost total absence abroad. "Almost," I say, for they are not totally absent from the mission field, as even the work here in Southern Morocco can testify.

Then the thought is pressed at length that miracles would be useless, as they "cannot enlighten dark minds," "cannot convert." The firearms and fireships of missionaries, we are told, astonish the Africans now, and are regarded as supernatural. In addition to these, it is asked, "What advantage would it be if we could do a few more," viz., supernatural signs. That is, in plain words, miracles would be a disadvantage. But let us turn to the Acts and see what was there the relation of miraculous healing to conversion. Chap. iii.: The lame man is healed, the people, amazed, run together; Peter exhorts them, and five thousand men believe. Chap. iv.: Note the prayer of the chapter: "And now, Lord, behold their threatenings: and grant unto thy servants, that with all boldness they may speak thy word... and that signs and wonders may be done by the name of thy holy child Jesus." A pregnant thought—boldness in preaching to be granted through God stretching forth his hand to heal. What unspeakable boldness this gave the disciples in the fifth chapter, and what boldness it would give some of us who have to confront Mohammedan "threatenings"! Oh, how we could speak,

IF OUR WORDS WERE THUS ATTESTED!

Is this the "craving of a restless unbelief" on my part? Then it must have been so on the part of the Acts iv. disciples. Mrs. Guinness says the "Jews, trained so long in the strictest monotheism," required that the claims of Christ as divine be proved by miracle. Might I not reply: "The Mohammedans, long trained in the strictest monotheism, require that the claims of Christ as divine be proved by miracle"? They do so demand.

But we have digressed. We are showing from Acts the relation of miracle to conversion. Chap. v. 12: "Many signs and wonders wrought...And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women." Chap. viii.: "And the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did...And there was great joy in that city... they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God." (Another instance as to the kingdom being preached. See prior objection, No. 3.) Acts ix.: Peter raising Dorcas. (This, again, by the way, is in fulfilment of the Matt. x. word: "Raise the dead." The disciples had not done it before this, and there is no command of this nature, save in Matt. x.): "And it was known throughout all Joppa; and many believed in the Lord." One other instance, this from Paul's ministry, will suffice: Acts xix.: "God wrought special miracles by the hands of Paul": the sick were healed, and evil spirits cast out. "And fear fell on them all, and the name of the Lord Jesus was magnified...So mightily grew the Word of God and prevailed."

IF BAD SIGNS, WHY NOT GOOD?

Mrs. Guinness refers to the bad miracles of spiritualism. This suggests the query: How is it that spiritualism, which is the devil's counterfeit of the supernatural in Christianity, has continued its miracles throughout all the ages? He was working his signs side by side with Paul at Ephesus. He has been doing so through ancient oracles and mediæval wonders and modern rappings; by his ancient theosophy, for the educated, in the East (which has now made its home also in the Occident), as well as its Western counterpart, spiritualism, designed for the masses. Why, then, should it be thought incredible that the Spirit of God would have borne a counter testimony by "signs and wonders" throughout the dispensation but for the unbelief of God's people? We know the "lying wonders" of Satan will abound in the time of the end, and this is even now coming to pass. Why should we not look for a corresponding manifestation of the power of God? And again, if the power of bad conviction has not been lost through the frequency and long continuance of Satan's "signs and wonders," why should it be asserted, as in the "Critique," that the putting forth of Christ's supernatural power continuously would destroy its value as a testimony?

The "Critique" closes with the statement:

"These papers positively bristle with points open to criticism, and as contrary to Scripture as they are to common sense," &c. I suggest that doubtless the authoress brought forward what she considered the most prominent of these "bristling points." All these I have quoted and replied to; and I leave the reader to judge whether I have done so effectually.

E. F. BALDWIN.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

In addition to the foregoing reply to Mrs Guinness's "Critique," we have received from Mr. Baldwin a rejoinder to Mr. Eugene Stock's "Remarks," which appeared in these columns. It consists of several papers, and would occupy far more space than we could spare. Nor do we think it necessary. The views of Mr. Baldwin, and those in reply to him, are before the public, and they are able to form their own conclusions. Our correspondence shows that, to a large extent, they have done so. Still, the discussion has done immense good, inasmuch as it has elicited thought and prayer on the most important subject of this dispensation—the proclamation of the Gospel to all nations.

The rejoinder to Mrs. Guinness, however, only occupies one of the several papers received from Mr. Baldwin, and in fairness to him we have made room for it; all the more because it also makes some reference to Mr. Eugene Stock's "Remarks." We must mention that Mr. Baldwin thinks that his position was weakened by our omission of two of his papers; and that thus some points were made by Mr. Stock which would not have appeared to the disadvantage of Mr. Baldwin's argument, had those papers been inserted. We must, therefore, assume the responsibility of this.

The only effective reply, however, from Mr. Baldwin to his critics must consist in his own practical application of the principles he has laid down. His private letters show that he has not shrunk from this; and that he has not escaped deep sorrow in the sufferings of converts who have, for their faithfulness to Christ, been unjustly imprisoned and mercilessly beaten.

Not a few whose names would carry weight have expressed warm appreciation of Mr. Baldwin's main position; such as Rev. Andrew Murray, of Cape Town, Mr. Graham Wilmot-Brooke, and others. It seems to us, however, that men are more than theories or methods. Men full of faith and of the Holy Ghost have gone forth during the past century of missionary enterprise, and to them have been due, in proportion as they have been filled with and led by the Spirit, the grand results for which we now thank God and take courage. Yet these results are insignificant compared with what they would have been had the Church of God been awake to her lofty privilege, and obedient to her great commission. We have, perhaps, had enough discussion of methods. "IF ANY MAN IS WILLING TO DO HIS WILL, HE SHALL KNOW OF THE DOCTRINE." The will of God is that the Good News of his Kingdom shall be preached for a testimony among all the nations. And the command of the risen Redeemer is, "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age."

United obedience to this command will leave no time for irritating criticism at home, and will rectify numberless mistakes abroad. And, be it remembered, the greatest mistake abroad is committed by the churches at home, in so far as they send forth men to reproduce in foreign lands our own divisions and sects, instead of preaching only, according to the King's command, the Good Tidings of the Reign of God—the Everlasting Gospel of the Everlasting Kingdom of the Everlasting God; which is the Gospel of the Grace of God; the Gospel of the Glory of the blessed God; the Gospel of Christ; Jesus and the Resurrection; Jesus Christ, and Him crucified. Oh, the pity that we should have descended from this high ground to the littlenesses of contending methods and competing sects. If by the present generation of Christians the Gospel is to be preached for a testimony among all the nations, let it be the one and only Gospel, the Gospel of the Kingdom of God. Let the dead Past bury its dead. "GO THOU AND PREACH THE KINGDOM OF GOD."

The Riffs of Morocco.

IN seeking to bring to the various tribes of Berbers the light of salvation, we have approached the Kabyles in Algeria. A work has been begun in South-West Morocco amongst the Shelluhs, and a commencement has been made amongst the Riffs in the North-West of Morocco; it remains to be seen if something cannot be undertaken for these same Riffs in the North-East. They have a name for being a violent and refractory race, but one cannot help respecting a people who have long struggled for their independence, and in their mountain homes have maintained their cherished name, "The Amazirghs"—the Free; but it may be a question whether, if they were under the wise control of a civilised power, such as that which has restrained the Kabyles from internecine conflicts, it would not be an equal advantage for the Riffs. Another outbreak has recently taken place. The Beni-bou-Zeggou, uniting with the well-known Beni Snassen, in number about three thousand combatants, fell suddenly upon the Mehaia at Tiouli, killing fifteen men, themselves losing eleven. The Mehaia fled to Ras-el-ain, of the Beni Mathar. These tribes belong to the Amalat of Oudjda adjoining the Province of Oran. The occasion of the quarrel is known only to themselves, but this incident brings them to our notice.

We have had lately some interesting details of missionary enterprise amongst the Shelluhs from the pen of Mr. E. F. Baldwin. May it please God that a day of visitation may come for the Riffs as well. Abbé Godard, in his "Description et Histoire du Maroc" (Paris, 1860), states that they are found on the north of a line drawn from Tadla in the centre of Morocco, at Tafilet, S.E., with its two or three hundred walled villages, whilst the region of the Shelluhs is upon the mountains and valleys to the south and west of Mequinez. These cultivate cereals, and live in villages built of brick or stone. The Riffs have ruder habitations, some of them the caverns in the mountains; others live in villages like the Kabyles, having their flocks and bees. Graberg de Hemso gives a list of twenty-six tribes of Riffs, and Ibn-Khaldoun, in his "History of the Berbers," written in the middle of the fourteenth century, says: "A portion of the Berbers profess Judaism; amongst them were the Djeraoua on the Aures. The other Jewish Berber tribes were the Nefouca, of Ifrikia, and the Fendelaoua, the Mediouna, the Behloula, the Ghiatha, and the Fazaz Berbers of the Moghreb-el-Acsa."

Jews are also found on the River Noun to the south, and scattered amongst the Shelluhs, by whom they are well treated; and there are Jewish villages in the oasis of Tafilet at Bou Amm, the most important place of commerce of the Marocan desert, and also at Erricane and Kasba-Khedima in the Madagra on the River Ziz; in fact, they are in considerable numbers in all the towns of Morocco. Not only have the Marocan Berbers been subjected to Jewish influence, but it is interesting to know that the Berber ruler, of the Almohades, favoured Christianity, and that Episcopal seats were founded by Abdel-Ouahed-er Reched in Fez and Morocco; his mother was a Christian. Diego de Torres, travelling from Morocco across the Atlas Mountains to the north in 1550, met with many people who had not forgotten their former religious condition, and the ruins of churches are found at the present day at Tisgui and Zarerou, between the upper course of the River Malah and Dra in the Trodra.

The Riff is a grand Kaidat, hereditary in the family Abd-er-Sadok, but only pays a religious tribute to the Shereef. Repeated troubles have arisen with the Riffs on the coast from the Bay of Alhucema to Melilla, and on the French frontier; but the Marocan Government have assumed the responsibility for their misdoings in the face of foreign Powers. They paid £1400 to the French Government in 1855, for the pillage of the Jeune Dieppois, wrecked on the coast. After the war with Spain, on account of attacks on Spaniards by the Riffs, the Emperor had to pay an indemnity of four millions sterling, and to cede various rocks, and the village of Melilla, on the mainland, as well as Santa Cruz de Mar, opposite the Canary Islands, for a fishing station. This was in 1859. Mr. Lowitz was obliged to leave Tangier on account of this war. In 1856, Prince Adalbert of Prussia, commanding the corvette Danzig, landed with a few men, and was encountered by a discharge of firearms. He then disembarked sixty-five men to correct them, but was surrounded by numbers; seven of his men were killed, himself wounded, and with difficulty he succeeded in regaining his vessel. No satisfactory amends were obtained for this aggression. But the French acted otherwise in 1859, when the Beni Snassen invaded the province of Oran, and committed assassinations in the Cercles of Marnia and Nemours. They dealt with them direct, not with the Emperor. An army was led to the Col of Tafouralt, of the Beni Snassen; it mounted the crest under fire, and took it. The Caid Hadj Mimoun saw that he could not resist, at once made his submission, and agreed to pay a fine of 100 francs a musket, which amounted to £48,000.

The border question is very unsatisfactory for the French; the Moulouia River should have formed the boundary, as it did when Justinian made Tingitana one of the seven provinces of Africa. This river then separated it from Mauritania Cæsariensis.

As we thus see the danger of intruding upon the Riff territory, it is with great satisfaction we know that some of their tribes can be approached without danger, for they are living on the mountains in the French territory, at the north-western extremity of the province of Oran, and thus well under control of French rule. These are the Beni Mengouch, the Souhalia, Msirda, and others, and beside this, thousands cross the borders and flock into Algeria, their characteristic pendant lock of hair concealed. Their muscular frames render them very fitted for heavy and laborious work. Nemours would seem to be a good centre for approaching these tribes, as well as meeting numbers of them.

Mr. W. Mackintosh, the British and Foreign Bible Society's agent for Morocco, has translated the Gospel of Matthew in the Zenaitia of the Riffs, in Arabic character; and a convert amongst the Shelluhs appears to have translated the Gospels of Matthew and John from the Arabic into Shelluh; thus the precious written Word can speak to both these Berber races. Who will be honoured by the Lord to be his messenger of Gospel grace to the Riffs?

DAILY PRAYER UNION.—A very successful preaching tour was taken this year by Rev. J. Worthington-Atkin, one of the special preachers in connection with this Mission. Mr. Worthington-Atkin addressed the students at both Oxford and Cambridge; preached in Waltham Abbey, Chester, London, Tewkesbury, Dovercourt, Wellington (Salop), Taunton, Newport (Mon.), Leyton, Llandudno, and other places. Many persons have been stirred up to think more of the person and work of the Holy Ghost, and have been led to long and pray for the "Fulness of the Spirit." The Union has now 77,000 members. Rev. H. L. Harkness, Worcester, is the secretary.

Methuselah.

CHRONOLOGY is by no means the dry, uninteresting subject which some would try to make it appear; at all events it has never been so to me, and in the research of the chronology of the Bible I have discovered many side lights of truth, confirmatory, to my mind at least, of the inspiration of God's Word. Sometimes I have suddenly been shunted off the chronological rails, and switched into a branch line of study which has proved of great service to me; and the study of the long-lived Methuselah has been one of these rather interesting departures from the main line.

One of the earliest Sunday questions I can recall was, "Who was the oldest man that ever lived?" Then in my schoolboy days one of the Bible riddles used to be, "How was it that the oldest man that ever lived died before his father?" So I was prepared to be interested in the patriarch Methuselah.

When I commenced to note every day and date, and to figure up the years and times of the Scriptures, I was informed by some that it was no use, as the early numbers at all events could not be relied upon, and were probably merely symbolical, and so forth. However, I persevered, and was greatly encouraged by your contributor, Rev. Henry E. Brooke, who brings such rich treasure out of the numbers and figures of the Bible. The fifth chapter of Genesis is pregnant with measurement of time by the lives of the Antediluvian patriarchs. In it we read about the subject of my sketch. His father is very particularly mentioned, and that by two specially distinguishing features, one positive, the other negative. Not only is it said of him, as of others, that he lived and that he begat, but it is specially stated that he walked with God. It is not recorded of him, as it is of others, that he died, but that God took him. The New Testament way of putting it is that "Enoch was translated that he should not see death"; and it is added, "before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God." The last term is probably the Greek one for the same thing as walking with God, in the Hebrew idiom. Methuselah, then, had the great advantage of a godly father, and for 300 years had this godly father's example before him. It may safely be inferred, I think, that he was a son worthy of such a father.

Enoch walked with God 365 years—a fitting figure and example for us to walk with God the 365 days of each year. His calm, studious, peaceful life's walk with God must have led to great holiness of character and blessedness of communion; and, as we are told in Ps. xxv. 14, "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him, and He will show them his covenant," we may well believe that during that hallowed period of fellowship Jehovah communicated to his faithful follower much of his own mind—his secret or hidden things, in regard to the future of the world He had made. The deep spiritual communion of the man of God with his Maker would lead to the enjoyment of God's favour and the revelation of his will in the salvation of mankind, as well as of his judgments on the wicked children of men who should refuse his offered mercy.

And in this belief we are not disappointed; for, though nowhere recorded in the Old Testament story, we find in the letter of Jude some notice of this fact, in itself surely a proof of the doctrine of the inspiration of Scripture. Had not the Spirit of God moved Jude to note this, how else could he have obtained it? Tradition might have erred, but not the Spirit of God in his teaching of his people. In Jude, then, we are told of the prophet Enoch, the seventh from Adam; by which, I suppose, we are to understand that he was the seventh man, and in direct descent from Adam. Seven is generally understood to be the perfect number in Scripture. Certainly Enoch was the perfect man of his generation. And Enoch, by Divine inspiration, if not indeed by special and personal communication, prophesied of the coming of the Lord "with ten thousands of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against Him."

Like others who received a prophecy to deliver, he may not have understood all about it, nor even known the proper time at which it should be fulfilled; and possibly thought it might be at no very distant date. However, it appears he so fully believed in an approaching judgment that he prophetically named his son to indicate the time of the outpouring of God's wrath on the ungodly—Methuselah meaning "his death shall send it." This seems to me to indicate that it was prior to the birth of his son that he had prophesied the dread event. And though the wording of the prophecy, as recorded in Jude, indicates a judgment which has certainly not yet taken place, and is therefore still in the future, nevertheless, it is a striking fact that a terrible judgment did fall upon the ungodly after Enoch's time, and just after the decease of his son, whose death was to bring about something which would probably be a judgment.

Methuselah died shortly before the Flood. It is easily and shortly worked out from the data in Genesis. Methuselah's age was 969 years. At the age of 187 he begat Lamech, who at 182 begat Noah, who was "600 years old when the flood of waters was upon the earth" (Genesis v. 25, 27, 28, 29, vii. 6). Now 187 + 182 + 600 gives us 969. We are distinctly told (Gen. v. 27) that Methuselah died. Soon after this event, evidently, came the Deluge. In a copy of Morgan & Scott's portable "Cruden's Concordance," with which I was presented some time ago, I find the meaning of Methuselah given as follows: "When he is dead it shall be sent, i.e., the Deluge." This rendering seems particularly plain and satisfactory. I remember, when I first figured up Methuselah's life-score, I said to myself, "He might have been drowned in the Flood"; but the record is too well worded, "he died," to understand by it that he was destroyed by the Deluge. But, while that is the literal meaning of Methuselah's name, when taken with the length of this life, it suggests another signification, and that is

THE LONG-SUFFERING OF GOD.

One suggestive transposition of the letters forming the word Methuselah gives "He must heal." Yes! Why did Methuselah live so long, if it were not as a lasting memorial of God's long-suffering patience with the wicked? Our heavenly Father loves to heal and save rather than destroy. In the last chapter of Peter's Second Epistle, we find, although the heavens and the earth are reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men, many will not believe it, because all things, they say, go on as usual from time immemorial, and will yet go on for ages to come. Notwithstanding their unbelief, judgment is coming, Peter tells us; but God is not slack concerning his promise. He is coming; so is the judgment. But God is long suffering, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. Again, Peter tells us it was the long suffering of God which also "waited in the days of Noah while the ark was preparing"; ay, even in keeping Methuselah alive for nearly 1000 long years to give ample time for repentance, so that sinners might escape the terrible destruction.

At last Methuselah passed away, that day of grace was ended, the day of doom had dawned, the ark of salvation was complete, God's chosen ones were safely shut within it, and they alone escaped the waters of judgment which were then poured out upon the ungodly of the earth. Now is the day of salvation, but it is drawing to a close. The day of judgment will follow. God's chosen ones will be safe in the ark Christ Jesus. God's long-suffering will be at an end. The doom will come upon the ungodly, and the world shall be destroyed by fire, according to God's own Word. But, blessed be God, we, according to his Word, "look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." Selah.

WORK AT THE PARIS EXHIBITION.

DEAR SIR,—A good work is being done in and around the Paris Exhibition. The Paris city missionaries, eight in number, devote one day in each week to the distribution of tracts at the mission-hall of Rev. Dr. McAll, 31, Avenue Rapp, and hold conversations with the passers-by who take the tracts; beside this, evangelistic meetings are held twice or three times a day in the two "Salles évangéliques," Avenue Rapp and Avenue du Trocadéro. At the latter M. Doyer, an agent of the Monthly Tract Society, is busy all day long, distributing the various French and other tracts, to different nationalities, speaking a few words about Christ to those who are willing to listen, and offering freely the portions of Gospels so generously given by the British and Foreign Bible Society, and Mr. Hawke of the Crystal Palace Bible Stand. Mr. Turner, of the Pure Literature Society, is arranging for the gratuitous distribution of 100,000 copies of "L'Ami de la Maison" and "Le Rayon du Soleil," especially to the peasants who come from the provinces to see the Exhibition. Thus all are harmoniously co-operating in spreading the good news of a free salvation to the multitudes of all nations who are visiting Paris; each in their different tongues hear of the wonderful works of God. A most encouraging field of labour opens around the Exhibition in the various cafés and restaurants, but of this I must speak in another letter.—Yours in the Gospel.

LAVENDER FOR SOLDIERS.—An earnest appeal is made for bunches of lavender, with which to fill little muslin bags to send to sick soldiers in hospitals at home and abroad; they greatly prize and appreciate them. A text-card is attached to each bag, and God has often used these little messengers in his service. Soldiers in India, Burmah, Egypt, and Army Scripture readers at Gibraltar, Aldershot, Netley, and other places, have desired to thank the kind friends who last year thus remembered them. Boxes or parcels should be addressed to Mrs. Stanley Puckle, The Hollonds, Langton, Tunbridge Wells.

MR. F. S. ARNOT'S MISSION.—Mr. W. G. Smart writes from 183, Rua dos Ferreiros, Funchal, Madeira:—On the 8th inst. Mr. T. H. Morris and party passed here for Benguelle, to join Mr. F. S. Arnot. Readers of THE CHRISTIAN will, doubtless, be glad to know that the party were well and in good spirits; they greatly enjoyed their six hours' stay in Madeira, and it did them all good, they said. Three missionaries, sent by the American Board to Benguelle and Bihé, were on board also—Mr. and Mrs. Cotton and Mr. Wilberforce Lee. We had some singing and prayer with them, and were much refreshed with their visit.

HIGHWAY AND HEDGEROW MISSION.—In connection with this Mission, an Iron Sailors' Institute, containing reading, coffee, and kit-bag rooms, with hall, 38×18, will be opened, Thursday, July 25, at Southwick-by-Sea, near Brighton. It is situated at the docks. Mr. Stock, agent of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, our missionary, will give a hearty welcome to any friends of our Mission who may come on that day. The daily, weekly, and shipping papers are always available. As a large number of steam yachts either refit at or visit Southwick, I invite the co-operation of the captains and owners to make the Institute of the greatest use. There is no charge, and men bringing their own food can have it cooked. French, Norwegian, and other foreign sailors welcomed.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

ONCE a year in America, on July 4, there is a carnival of racket, a day when small boys and big boys do their best to make mountain and valley ring with mirth. This fourth of July is not, however, merely given up to smoke and powder; patriotism shows itself in family picnics, in public celebrations, in eloquent speeches, while the Eagle soars aloft. On such an occasion as this, 500 students, in the full flush and fervour of young manhood, cannot, of course, keep silent, or give up the day entirely to religious studies. Gathered from all sections of the land, they are united in their loyalty to the one Government, which cares for its sixty millions of people. Bygones are bygones, and the Southern and the Yankee meet with clasped hands on a common platform.

The nation's holiday was celebrated this year at Northfield with rare enthusiasm. Never before in this land was there seen just such an assembly. For when, in its history, were there gathered under one roof representatives of one hundred different colleges from the North and the South, from Canada and Japan, from Great Britain and Germany, to let loose their patriotism with song, and speech, and cheers?

The fifteen students from the Universities of Great Britain must have thought that they had tumbled into "fourth of July" on the first. To be greeted with the whole-souled welcome of some four hundred men with shouts and hurrahs must have been a delightful introduction to America. There is a breezy heartiness in the fraternity of scholars when in college, which is full of hope and promise of mutual fellowship and help in the harder working days yet to come.

Mr. Moody delights in questioning the speakers, and thus, in a most informal way, gets at truth. Dr. Driver, who has floored many a sceptic, was asked concerning Evolution. The rapidity with which the Doctor plunged into philosophical arguments kept the minds of his hearers on the alert. His idea is that the solar system is the product and successor of another system, and that again of another extending into the infinite past. He thought that there were separate creations of vegetable and animal life, and different creations of the different species of these two. Spontaneous generation had been exploded; life from antecedent life was the only tenable belief. There is no life in matter; hence life must come from outside, from the Creator of eternal life. Other difficult questions were briefly discussed. The question was asked incidentally as to Dr. Driver's ideas of the Romish question. He replied that as slavery and freedom could not exist side by side, so the day is coming when Protestants and Romanists would meet in conflict, unless the latter could be led to Christ.

The work of the Young Men's Christian Association occupies a part of the time in the Conference—and well it may. This organisation is a vast power, and college men to become general secretaries are called for in all directions. Hon. Cephas Brainerd, a prominent lawyer from New York, told the students that it now has 1141 associations on this Continent, with nearly 200,000 members. It has a large number of railroad branches, and employs upon its various committees 33,960 men. Three hundred young men are needed to-day—men, not only pious and familiar with the Bible, but who have well-tried business ability; men of muscle and men of brain; men of tact and leadership, who are solid in physical, spiritual, and intellectual culture. The business men of the country are waiting to pay for such helpers.

These services are all interwoven with prayer and song; the Mount Hermon boys as usual showing the result of Professor Phillips' training and Professor Towner's service.

Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, is always strong, and gives men something to ponder over when they leave. "The Person of Christ and our Relation to Him" was the subject of one of his discourses. If we are truly united to Christ, then what He is we are, what He was we were, what He is to be we shall be. In clear and vivid words he made clear these three points, and carried his hearers on with him to the resurrection day, when Christ will reveal Himself to his waiting ones. The fourth of July was not given up to outbursts of patriotism alone. There were powerful addresses in the morning from scholarly men, who rank among the foremost in our country. Bishop C. D. Foss spoke to the students in most eloquent words on the four great and inseparable religious certainties, viz., God, Christ, Salvation, Immortality. It was specially adapted to quell the doubts which often arise in the mind of thoughtful students. At times he rose to lofty heights of eloquence, and his comparisons and illustrations were specially apt.

The appearance of Professor Harper on the platform as Bishop Foss closed was the signal for great applause. He is somewhat like Mr. Moody in physique, and is a great favourite with the boys, and with good reason. As he could be with the Conference but one day, Mr. Moody crowded in three of his delightful talks, which were very instructive. So brilliant a Hebrew scholar could not fail to rouse a deep interest. The boys made ready their note books, but they became so eager to catch every word as to leave paper untouched. His address was interspersed with quotations and comments on his own translations from the Bible in the original Hebrew. The subject was the "Book of Isaiah," and, after a brief sketch of the prophet's life, he considered in detail the various lines of prophecy recorded by him. Isaiah's life and work were divided into four great periods. When a young man, perhaps only twenty years old, he received a wonderful vision, which left a horrible impression upon him, which shows itself in every sermon he ever preached. This was about 740 B.C. The next ten years he preached against the sins of his nation, and predicted the glorious future that was to come.

The missionary meetings are full of a thoughtful, prayerful interest. The great movement in this direction, originated three years ago at Mount Hermon, has steadily increased. There were found to be, however, dangerous tendencies: (1) a lack of unity; (2) a conflict with existing Church Boards; (3) the tendency of volunteers to retract. Hence a committee were appointed to consult with different Church Boards to carry on this work with wisdom. Mr. R. P. Wilder, of Union Seminary, was chosen travelling secretary for the past year, and the result has been very successful. Drs. Gordon and Pierson have done a good work here in the tent gatherings, when the most thoughtful congregated to hear them on this subject.

There is such variety in the services, and yet one chain binding all together, that no one seems to be wearied. Earnestness, enthusiasm, and good fellowship, characterise both sport and study, and we hear of but few who propose to leave till the Conference closes.

SYRIA.—Dr. George E. Post, in an article on the outlook in Syria, says:—"Little by little the light is stealing in. Men of all religious opinions are inclining to toleration. The Bible is being circulated among the masses. The number of readers is multiplied. Those who believe are bolder, but at the same time more discreet. Those who do not believe are forced to concede that the Bible is the source of religious knowledge, and the referee in all cases of doubt or dispute. Those who are far from the spirit of the New Testament claim to be evangelical. Everything is ripening for a grand demonstration of the power of the Holy Spirit."

WORKING BOYS OF LONDON.

IT is impossible to estimate the great good done by means of such excellent institutions as the Homes for Working Boys in London. Eight in number, and situate in various parts of the Metropolis, these Homes afford accommodation to 350 lads, between the ages of thirteen and seventeen, who are able to work and earn wages, but have no homes to save them from the temptations of common lodging-houses. Employed outside as shop-boys, errand-boys, printers, out-door apprentices, &c., most of them earn sufficient wages to board and clothe themselves, but in a few cases help has at first to be obtained from friends to enable them even to do this.

The report recently published reminds us that this Institution has now entered upon the twentieth year of its existence. Beginning in a small way, the work has steadily progressed, and from the first every effort has been made, not only to improve the moral and physical condition of the boys, but to impress upon them the story of the Saviour's love, and, by Christian training, to fit them for the eternal home. Bearing in mind that the founders were anxious, in the first place, to assist lads leaving refuges and industrial homes, the committee last year received as many as 112 boys from such institutions, and some from workhouse schools. Special endeavours are also made to help friendless lads who, having tramped up to London, are often compelled, on failing to find work, to resort to the casual ward or common lodging-house. Among agencies recently founded is an emigration fund towards sending suitable boys to the Colonies. It is pleasing also to learn that "old boys" are encouraged to keep up their connection with the Homes.

The reports of the various superintendents tell of a healthy spiritual tone pervading the Homes. "It is interesting," says the report, "to hear that some of the boys kneel down before their fellows to pray at their bedside, and spend a few minutes in reading their Bible; and the committee are thankful to know that several at each of the Homes have given evidence in one way or another of a changed heart and a changed life." Some of the letters from "old boys" are deeply interesting. A boy who lived in Hanover House, 13, Castle-street, Long Acre, W.C., writing to the superintendent from Stratford, Ontario, says: "I am very thankful for the great help you have given me, and for getting me into Miss Macpherson's Home. I like Canada first rate. I think it is the best country under the sun. I have seen T. E. and T. D. ('old Hanoverians'); they told me they like Canada so much that they would not go back to England if they were paid to live there. I have seen some hard work, but I do not mind that. It is work and truthfulness and honesty that make a man. I often think of the time when I was in your Home. I was not a very good boy, but now I think I've changed to rather a different one." Reading between the lines, we cannot but see that an important work has been done for this boy; he is now contented in a country where his services are welcome, and in the quiet of his log dwelling he has not forgotten the discipline to which he was subjected in the Home.

Last year's operations closed with a considerable deficit. As already stated, the boys pay the entire cost of their food and as much as is right for lodging. When it is remembered that boys of thirteen years of age, just starting in life, seldom earn more than six or seven shillings a week, and that there are always many such youngsters in the Homes, it will be evident that the institutions cannot be made self-supporting. The Homes are at present in urgent need. They save many lads from swelling the pauper and criminal classes, and on this account, as well as because of their humane and Christian object and purpose, they deserve hearty support

THE LITTLE CHORISTER.

PART I.

THROUGH the building swells the organ,
With its grand sonorous voice;
Causing burdened hearts to lighten,
And the weary to rejoice.
Now it peals in mighty fulness,
Now its accents almost cease;
As it breathes its mystic message,
And proclaims its hush of peace.

Hark! upon that hush there breaketh,
Other music soft and rare,
Like the sound of distant church-bells
Floating gently on the air.
'Tis a child's voice, clear and ringing,
Just a "choir-boy," so they say:
But that choir-boy bears a message
Unto many hearts this day.

He is singing for his Master
And the glory of his name;
Far above the lower impulse
Of a passing earthly fame.
Shall we listen as he singeth?
'Tis a hymn we've known of yore,
But we wonder as we hear it
That we have not loved it more!

"Peace, perfect peace, in this dark world of sin?
The blood of Jesus whispers 'peace' within.

"Peace, perfect peace, by thronging duties pressed?
To do the will of Jesus, this is rest.

"Peace, perfect peace, with sorrows surging round?
On Jesus' bosom nought but calm is found.

"Peace, perfect peace, with loved ones far away?
In Jesus' keeping we are safe and they.

"Peace, perfect peace, our future all unknown?
Jesus we know, and He is on the throne.

"Peace, perfect peace, death shadowing us and ours?
Jesus has vanquished death and all its powers.

"It is enough: earth's struggles soon shall cease,
And Jesus call to heaven's perfect peace."

PART II.

Months have passed: the little singer
Lieth pale, on pallet bed;
Just "a-going home to Jesus,"
So the village folk have said.
But the doctors gather round him,
And they wish that he may stay,
As they whisper low, together,
"Operation—now—to-day."

Though the tones are hushed and guarded,
Yet the sick are "swift to hear,"
So he says without a tremble
Or the falt'ring of a fear,
"Do you mean it really, doctors?
Do you know no other way?
Then I'll try to bear it bravely
If you'll give me time to pray.

"And a moment, just a moment,
When you're ready to begin,
That the 'perfect peace' of Jesus
To my heart may enter in;
I shall then need nought to strengthen,
Or to deaden-down the pain;
For I know the grace He giveth
Is 'sufficient' to sustain."

"Yes, my child," one doctor answers
(Whilst the tears his eyes bedim):
"He will help in joy or sorrow,
If you trust yourself to Him."

Then the boy so white and weary
Lieth still, with fast-shut eyes,
Like a daisy folded tightly
When the summer daylight dies.

Till at length the preparations
Have all skilfully been made,
And the awful, awful moment
Can no longer be delayed.
Stooping low, the doctor whispers
In the little fellow's ear:
"Now be brave, my lad, for Jesus,
He is with us, never fear."

"Just one moment, Sir," he answers,
"Till I sing my 'perfect peace,'
That the Lord may give commandment
To the storm its rage to cease."
Then again we hear the music,
We have learned to love so well,
But no words can give its pathos,
Nor can tongue its sweetness tell.

"Peace, perfect peace, with sorrows surging round?
On Jesus' bosom nought but calm is found.

. . . .

"Peace, perfect peace, death shadowing us and ours?
Jesus has vanquished death and all its powers.

"It is enough: earth's struggles soon shall cease,
And Jesus call to heaven's perfect peace."

It is over: they are going;
"Never flinched," the doctors say,
"You have borne it well, my laddie,
Try and sleep whilst we're away."

PART III.

Months again have passed—'tis winter,
All the ground with snow is white,
And the stars are brightly gleaming
On this bitter frosty night.
"He is gone," the folk are saying,
As they gather round the door
Of the room where lived the singer
Who will sing on earth no more.

For in God's most holy temple
Hath the choir-boy found a place,
Where he singeth still the praises
Of his glorious King of Grace.
Where is neither pain nor dying,
Where for ever storms shall cease,
Where the music ne'er is broken,
Where nought mars the "perfect peace."

A PRECIOUS CHARGE.

In Miss Gordon Cumming's interesting book, "Wanderings in China and Japan," mention is made of a little boy, who, at the time of her visit to Ningpo, was the pet and plaything of the Girls' School connected with the C.M.S. Mission there. That little boy, now a lad of thirteen, is at present in England, desiring to obtain an English education, in the hope that he may one day be a medical missionary to his own countrymen.

He is doubly an orphan, having been born five months after his father's death, and having lost his mother before he was two years old. His mother's relations were Christians, but the father's relations, to whom, by Chinese law, he belongs, were heathen. His paternal grandfather and grandmother being dead, he was left to the care, or rather the neglect, of a great-aunt, whose cruel treatment ended in his being sold to a Buddhist priest. Upon this his maternal grandfather appealed to Miss Laurence to rescue him, undertaking, if she would support him, to go and demand the child.

Accordingly, one bitterly cold day in February, 1878, the door opened to admit a man, carrying on his shoulder a bamboo pole, with a basket at one end containing the little boy, well muffled up, and a bundle of clothes to balance at the other end. The little fellow had been so neglected that, although six months before he could run about alone, he was at that time unable to stand. Great care, good food, strengthening medicines, and daily bathing, soon produced marked improvement, and before the autumn the doctors pronounced him sufficiently healthy to warrant his adoption. He was baptized by Bishop Russell, whose name he bears. It is earnestly hoped that English friends will so interest themselves in him that Miss Laurence may feel justified in putting "Willie Russell" into English clothes, and leaving him in England when she returns, as she hopes to do, to China next year.

Our young readers, or their friends, who would like to help to educate this little Chinese boy may learn all about him from Rev. H. Laurence, 13, Bisham Gardens, Highgate, London, N.

MRS. AMANDA SMITH.

DEAR SIR,—Please allow me to say, through your paper, that I am purposing to leave Liberia not later than the beginning of August, and to tender my sincere thanks to all the good friends who have kindly sent me THE CHRISTIAN all these years I have been in Africa. I cannot say how I have appreciated this, and what a help it has been to me and to others to whom I have sent it. I have laboured hard and for some length of time in this country, and God has been pleased to own and bless his work. Now my physical strength is about exhausted, and I feel I must leave here. I would like to get to America before the hard winter sets in.

I have just returned from an evangelistic tour of seven months in the Sherboro country (to the north of Liberia), where the Lord God truly blessed us, and a large number of persons professed faith in Christ. With the little strength that remains, I am finishing my work in Africa; or, at least, in this Republic. God has been very good to me. I thank and praise Him.—Yours in Jesus, AMANDA SMITH.

BY REV. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.

Author of "From Death into Life. An Autobiography."

XVIII.—THE HORRIBLE PIT.

THERE must have been some providential event in David's life to which he refers in the beginning of the Fortieth Psalm; and yet it is so penned as to picture most minutely the spiritual deliverance which all lost sinners need.

In the first two verses of the Psalm, we have five distinct stages of the believer's life described, by which we shall do well to measure and test ourselves.

(1) Taken out of an horrible pit.
(2) Out of the miry clay.
(3) On the rock.
(4) Established in our goings.
(5) Singing the new song.

And lastly we have the effect of this: "Many shall see it, and fear, and shall trust in the Lord."

"Is not that a pure imagination?" asked one in my company. "People spiritualise everything in these days. You may, in this way, make up whatever you please, if only you are clever enough! I never knew anything like it. I suppose you do not mean to unchristianise me!"

I said: "Is it in your imagination that you are saved?"

"Saved," repeated the gentleman; "why, every Christian is saved, is he not?"

"Certainly," I answered, "if he is a real Christian; because, as such, he is saved from the penalty and power of sin. If he has not been saved, I should say he is not a real, but merely a nominal, Christian."

"Well, that beats all the narrowness I ever heard. The Roman Catholics say there is no salvation out of their Church; but you say there is no salvation for anyone who does not agree with you."

"My friend," I said, "you and I by nature are children of Adam, and, as such, dead in trespasses and sins; in the power of the world, the flesh, and the devil (see Eph. ii. 2); and by nature the children of wrath, even as others. Now this is not an opinion, but a fact; as much as the fall of man is a fact. I lived many years in the world before I was enabled to see and understand this as a reality which concerned myself. If you have not found out this truth about yourself, the very first work of the Holy Spirit has not been wrought in you. God's record of man's fall and restoration begins with this, and so does the work of the Spirit."

"Oh," said my friend, "I never felt myself so lost as all that."

"Well," I answered, "whether you feel it or not, the fact remains. We are all lost, until we are found."

"How can a man know these things?"

I answered: "By taking God at his word. If you rightly believe the Word, the Spirit of God will make you know its reality, and you shall know this as certainly as you know any other fact."

"I do not feel anything of the kind," he said, "and never did."

I replied: "We are not asked to believe what we feel, but what God says. I wonder whether you were ever conscious of danger in your life?"

"Yes," he said, "and more than once. Upon one occasion, I fell over a cliff in the dark, though I had a lantern in my hand. I was much bruised and my lantern smashed. I could not find my way up the cliff again, and the tide was coming in. I was in a fright, I can tell you."

"I dare say you were; remember that you knew your danger by natural perception only. We may know of our spiritual danger on the veracity of God. The natural danger is not to be compared with the horrors of the other."

"Do you mean to say," said my friend, "that you ever felt the lost condition of your soul, as one would feel the lost condition of himself?"

"Yes, indeed, and even more so, feeling there was no eye to pity, and no arm to save. The Psalmist would never have cried out, 'O Lord, I beseech Thee deliver my soul,' if he was unconscious of danger. Did you cry out for help in your trouble?"

"Yes, indeed I did, most lustily, till a coast-guard man heard, and came to my rescue. He led me up by a path I could never have found in the dark, though not before the waves began to knock me about on the rocks."

I said: "Now you know of such a deliverance, you would not sneer at others who profess to have had a similar one. A story like yours would remind you of your own case, and stir your gratitude instead of disputation.

"When I was a boy in India," I continued, "I was running along a very muddy lane in the rainy season. There was a drenching rain pouring down upon me, and in some places the road was impassable for mud. Looking about, I espied, as I thought, a smooth hard surface by the side of the road. I made for that, and leaped upon it with delight. To my horror, I found that I was in a miry pit, filled with thick mud and water. I instantly sank up to my middle, and felt myself slowly sinking deeper and deeper. The more I struggled the faster I sank, and if I made no effort I was conscious of steadily sinking still. I was buried up to my arms, and then my paddling was over, and I was up to my neck, and even my mouth in the pit. I cried out piteously for help, but no one was in sight. I can never forget the sickening horror of that death which seemed inevitable. I became insensible, and knew nothing more until I found myself lying in a bed, washed and comfortably tended. A friendly hand had saved me, and kindly cleansed me from the mire.

"I can never forget that, nor can I forget the similar dread and fear I was in, upon another occasion, when I felt myself sinking into hell as a lost sinner. If anything, the latter was even more horrible than the former."

"How did you ever come to feel all that?" said the gentleman.

"I gave myself to the Lord, and He opened my eyes to see my danger. In like manner, if you give yourself to Him (and no one else can do this for you), He will do the same for you. He is not bound to lead you in this exact manner of distress and trouble, but, though not in degree, yet in kind, He will show you your lost, helpless condition.

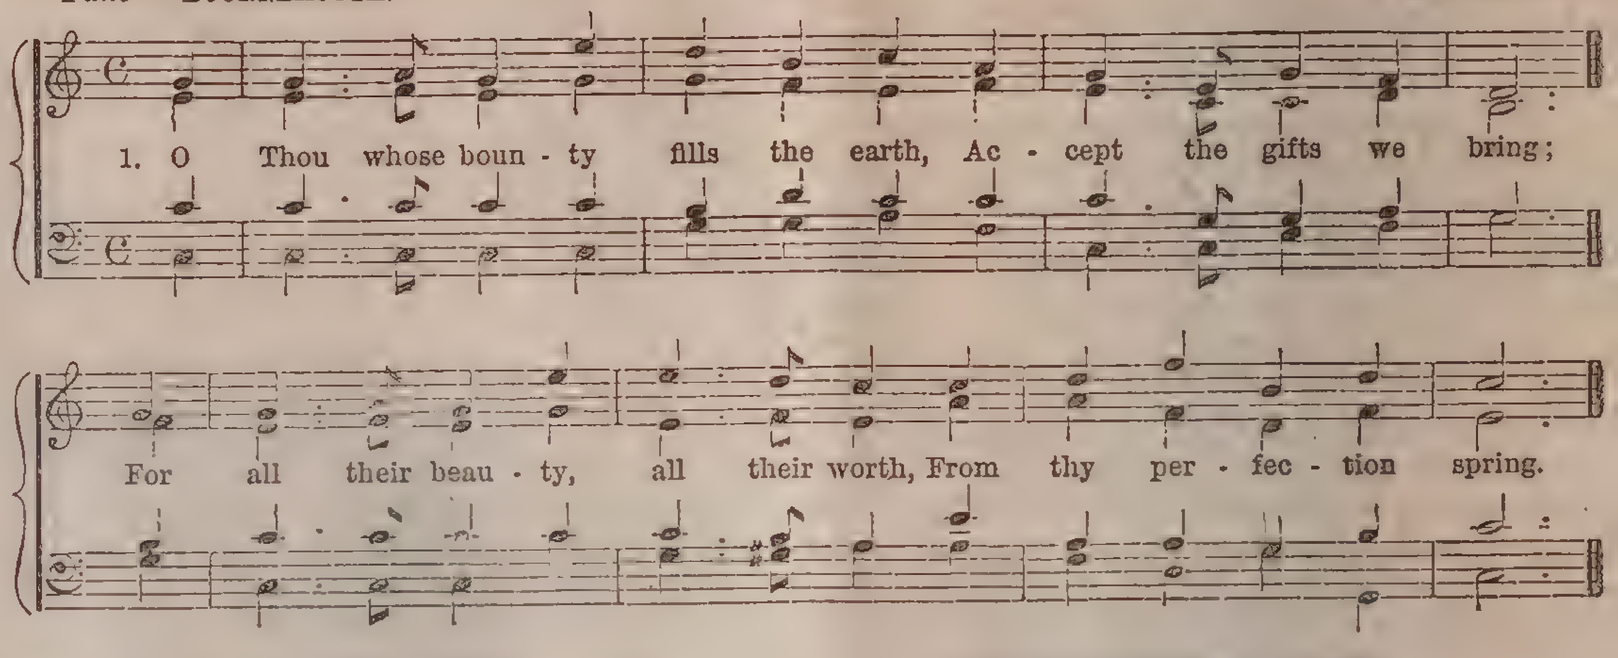
"You must give up to God sooner or later. If you will not surrender to the Gospel, then you will have to surrender when death comes. You had far better yield yourself willingly now, and wait patiently upon Him. He will make you conscious of your real state before Him, and will take you out of the pit, which He says is horrible, whether you know it to be so or not. Danger is all the more serious, if a man is in ignorance of it."

"Well, I confess," he said, "my Christianity does not satisfy me. I have my fears and doubts sometimes."

I replied: "Christianity cannot save anyone; you must have to do with a person—a living, though unseen, person. The Psalmist says, 'HE took me out of an horrible pit.'"

This young man was persuaded, and did give himself to God. In due course he was convicted, and converted too. When by the Spirit of God he was brought into the light, he was surprised and alarmed to see what danger he had been in without suspecting it.

He was not backward in testifying to the reality of God's Word, and set to his seal that it was true, from his own experience.



Upon one occasion, being asked how he knew that he was converted, he answered, "How do I know that I am standing here?" He knew it.

I said: "You asked the Lord to show you the pit, and He has also shown you your deliverance from it. Now ask Him about deliverance from the miry clay, and about being placed upon the rock, with no clay or mire between it and you. He will show you this, and will establish your goings besides. The Lord be with you."

A theology that leaves out the horrible pit is to be suspected and avoided; for we are all in it by nature, until we are taken out of it.

Flower Service.

Tune—"BOURNEMOUTH." E. JOHNSON.

2 These flowers that on our borders blow,
Each in its time and place,
Shine out like smiles that come and go
On some beloved face.

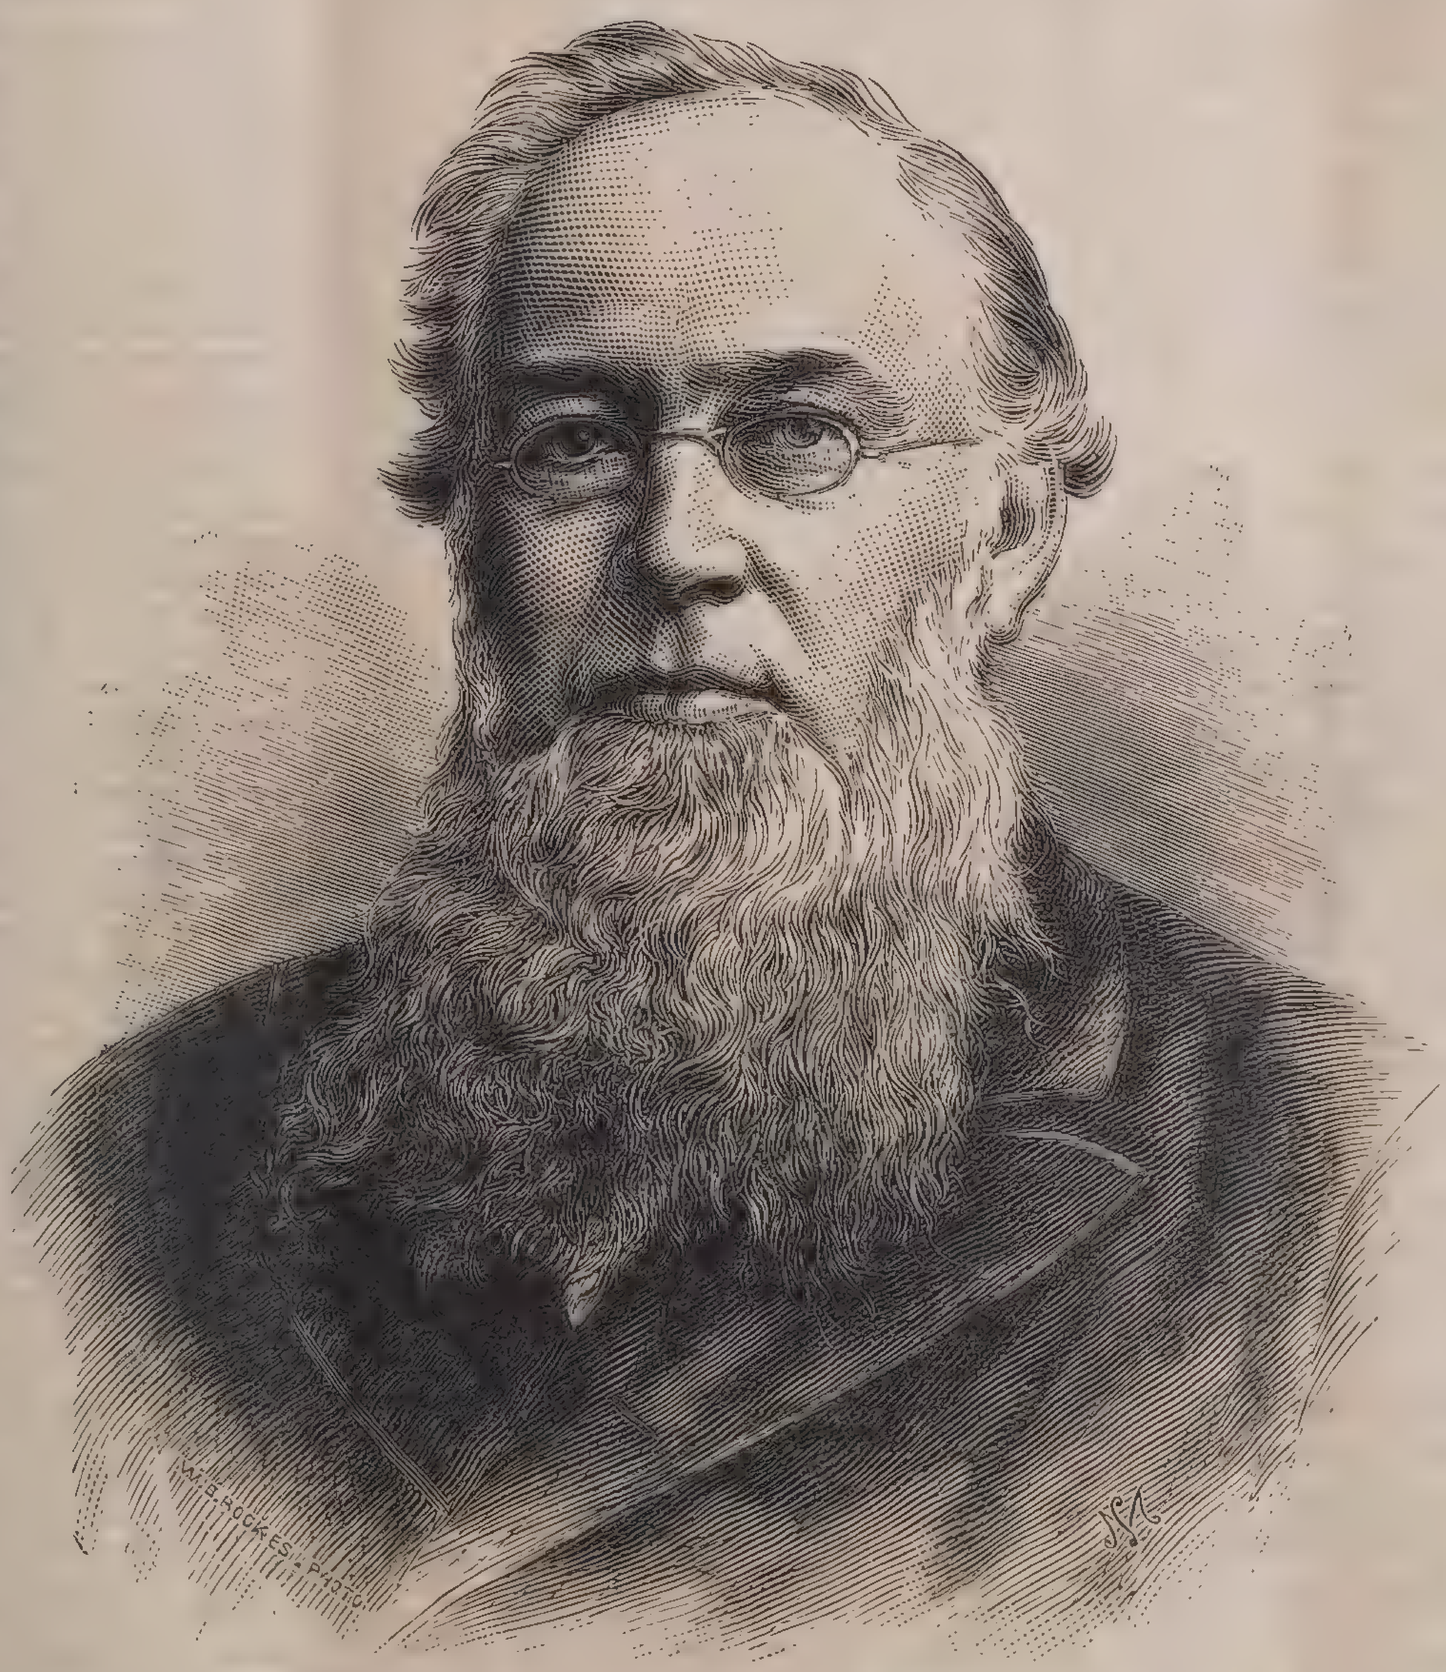
3 They make us happy, for they tell
Of love unseen but sure;
Let others, then, be glad as well—
The suffering and the poor.

4 To beds of anguish and of death
We send our store of flowers,
To whisper with their fragrant breath
Their Father's love and ours.

5 Take, Lord, our gifts, but take us too,
Thy human flowers, to prove
By lives unselfish, kind, and true,
That Thou, our God, art Love.

FRANCE.—The past year of the Société Evangélique of France has been one of steady and progressive work. In connection with Mr. McAll three new popular conferences were started in Paris, Tonnerre, and Poitiers. Regular services were held in two large villages. About 400 places are more or less regularly visited. There are thirteen schools, an average attendance of 14,000 per month. In one village the workers were asked to preach the Gospel by some of the inhabitants petitioning for this, their signatures being witnessed by the Mayor, and themselves offering light, fire, and room for the services. There is an unmistakable reaction in favour of religion, Roman Catholics coming to the places of worship in unusual numbers. The superintendent is Pastor Mouron, 76, Rue d'Assas, Paris.

Mauritius.—Gunner F. Field, Mauritius (late at Cape Town), writes to thank those friends who have sent him tracts, books, and letters. He asks for further supplies, and also requests prayer that he and his Christian comrades may bear a good testimony for the Lord in Mauritius.



The Late Rev. MARMADUKE MILLER.

THE Church of Christ in Great Britain sustained a great loss by the recent death of Rev. Marmaduke Miller, at Manchester. For several years Mr. Miller had suffered from heart disease and sleeplessness, yet few anticipated so early an end of his useful career. Although he gave up circuit work in 1883, he had, until very shortly before his decease, been able to render important service on special occasions.

Mr. Miller was identified with the United Methodist Free Churches, but his sympathies were not confined to his own denomination. Nor were his services valued only by the people of his choice. With Congregationalists especially he had many points of affinity.

The outward facts of his life are soon told. He was born at New Basford, a village close to Nottingham. His parents were of the highest type of character, strong-minded, shrewd, intelligent, and saintly. He was brought to religious decision when young, and was received into the ministry of the late Wesleyan Methodist Association in 1852, when he was twenty-five years of age. His first station was Tavistock, and his next Darlington. In each of these circuits he stayed two years. He then removed to Manchester, where he was destined to become well known, and with which the last years of his life were closely identified. In Manchester he resided three years, and then went for a similar term to the neighbouring town of Heywood. From Heywood he went back to Darlington, a town where he met with many congenial spirits, and where his gifts and labours were highly appreciated.

During his residence in Darlington he was strongly pressed to accept the pastorate of a large congregation worshipping in Brunswick Chapel, Huddersfield. This congregation had Methodistic antecedents, but was not identified with any Methodist denomination. The salary offered was much in excess of what any Free Methodist circuit gave its ministers, but Mr. Miller declined the invitation. This was not a solitary instance in Mr. Miller's life of the triumph of his Connexional loyalty over pecuniary considerations.* The Huddersfield friends were not to be baulked, and they joined the Free Church to secure Mr. Miller's services. He remained in Huddersfield for six years, and then removed to London to fulfil his duties as Connexional Editor, an office to which he had been appointed the previous year. After five years' residence in the Metropolis he returned to Manchester, to become the superintendent of Oxford-street Circuit. He there preached in the chapel which had been occupied by Dr. Maclaren, ere his present spacious sanctuary was erected. He ministered here for six years, but in 1883 he was obliged, through failure of health, to enter the ranks of permanent supernumeraries. He continued to reside in Manchester till the end came. He died in his sixty-second year, having been born in 1827.

At his own request he was interred at Old Basford, near his birthplace. The esteem in which he was held was shown by the fact that, although no steps were taken to secure a large attendance at his funeral, or even to announce the time at which it should take place, over thirty of his brother ministers from Leeds, Sheffield, Manchester, and elsewhere were present on the occasion. Many representative laymen also came to honour the sainted dead. Mr. Miller was a man of high intellectual gifts, and they had been assiduously cultivated. As a preacher he had many elements of attraction. He was of a comely and engaging presence, both in his youth, when "his locks were bushy and black as a raven," and in his later years, when "grey hairs were here and there upon him." He had a voice rich, full, musical, and very expressive, especially of the tender emotions. His vocabulary was chiefly Saxon, and his sentences were never involved or cumbrous. He had not passion enough to rouse an audience to the highest pitch of enthusiasm, yet was so clear and convincing that he could both enlighten and persuade. He was the opposite of "rough and ready": he was refined in style and manner, and his matter was always carefully prepared. He was singularly devout in his pulpit demeanour, and his prayers made every service he conducted a rich means of grace.

He was an able lecturer and a good platform speaker. He was a careful observer of passing events, and often had a word to say upon them on the platform or in the press. He might be called a "political Dissenter," but he was a deeply spiritual man. He was an earnest advocate of ministerial culture, and one of the founders of the Free Methodist Theological Institution. A pronounced abstainer nearly all his life, he had been for many years a vice-president of the National Temperance League, and took an earnest part in the formation of the Free Methodist Temperance League.

His own denomination held him in high honour. He had filled the presidential chair, occupied the office of Connexional Secretary, and been for many years successively elected on the Executive of the body, the Connexional Committee. In the year of his election to the office of Editor, he was chosen as the first Theological Tutor of the body; but from this position he modestly shrank. He had not the chief place in moulding the counsels of the denomination, but in the Annual Assembly, its chief court, he was always heard with respect and even reverence. No man in the Free Methodist Connexion was better known or was more respected by other churches as Marmaduke Miller. Those who miss him and mourn him must comfort themselves in their sense of Connexional loss by the words of Charles

* We shall scarcely be expected to place a very high estimate on "Connexional loyalty," for which we know of no Scriptural warrant; but we heartily appreciate loyalty to conviction, and therefore honour Mr. Miller's action in this case because he thought it the right course to take.—Ed.

Wesley: "God buries his workman, but carries on his work."

Mr. Miller left instructions that no biography of him should be written. It is intended, however, to perpetuate his memory by founding a "Miller Scholarship" in the Theological Institute of the denomination.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.]

THIS serenely beautiful and tranquil spot, garrisoned on every side by the everlasting hills, is again the scene of a great assemblage of Christians gathered from every point of the compass. Judging from the applications that have come for temporary accommodation, the meetings seem more largely attended than ever. The growth of the Convention in this respect has been very marked and steady; but that is not at all to be wondered at. It is the beau ideal of a place for such a purpose. The quiet and restfulness of the situation, the natural charms of the scenery, with so many potential spiritual parables wrapped up in mountain and mere — all these constitute powerful aids to meditation, and to free, unhindered communion with the great Giver and Replenisher of life.

It has been very difficult this year to meet the many applications for rooms. The whole town, so to speak, is handed over to Convention visitors for the week, but that has not sufficed. Mr. Postlethwaite has been inundated with requests for apartments, and his assistant has had to levy tribute upon houses and hamlets for miles around. Indeed, some have had to be located at Cockermouth, twelve miles distant. As the railway company runs early and late trains with cheap fares, such an arrangement is rendered available. This year the Convention meets in a fine new tent, with a seating accommodation of about 2000, and its capacity will certainly be taxed to the utmost for the larger meetings. Above the entrance to the tent and over the platform, is emblazoned in red the motto of the Convention: "All one in Christ Jesus." Three flags float in the breeze from the masthead of the tent poles, displaying in white, the words, "Peace," "Joy," "Love."

Those who arrange the Keswick meetings do not publish a detailed programme, but the names of the speakers are announced. With a dozen such good men and true as Messrs. Hubert Brooke, Elder Cumming, Figgis, Fox, Grubb, Gregson, Haslam, Hopkins, Jacob, Meyer, Monod, and Moule, there can be no lack of rich as well as varied spiritual fare. The veteran conveners, Mr. R. Wilson and Mr. H. F. Bowker, are both here; the latter, I regret to say, is ageing fast. He looks in feeble health, and is suffering from almost total loss of voice power. The ladies' meetings are conducted by Mrs. Bannister, Miss Nugent, and Mrs. Tottenham. There are special meetings during the week for young women, for young men, for ministers, and for those who are attending the Convention for the first time. Of course, the Keswick teaching is confessedly of a definite and somewhat restricted kind, but it seems disproportionate that only two meetings out of so many are fixed for the purpose of pressing on the Christian Church the claims of the great heathen fields. Short missionary prayer-meetings are held, however, in the Drill Hall each morning.

THE KEYNOTE STRUCK.

A very admirable keynote for the Convention was struck by Rev. W. HASLAM in his address at the preliminary meeting for prayer in the tent on Saturday evening. Though the great bulk of the visitors had not then arrived, the attendance was not far short of a thousand, and the engagements of the hour were of a very profitable kind. Mr. Wilson presided, and earnest prayer was offered by Rev. G. C. Grubb, Mr. Henry Edwards, and Rev. W. Haslam. In his address, Mr. Haslam explained briefly the definite scope and aim of the teaching given at Keswick. It is pre-supposed, he said, that those who come to the Convention have already received forgiveness of sins. But that is not sufficient; we must have a risen and living Protector and Commander, as well as a crucified Saviour. By the mouth of the Prophet Isaiah God says to his people, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters." Thirsting implies the possession of life, and the living ones are invited to come and get milk and honey—everything that is sweet and nourishing and reviving to the soul. Let no one suppose he is waiting for God; it is God who is waiting for him. Thank God, many thousands at this Convention in years past have come to Him, have received the fulness of the Holy Ghost, and have gone away to live out this life in mighty power. In a running exposition of Christ's words to Nicodemus, Mr. Haslam drew a distinction between seeing the kingdom of heaven and entering into it. When a man is born again he sees that kingdom with a vision hitherto impossible to him, but there remains that he should enter into the possession of it. In addition to faith there must be a giving up of self for God's use, in a teachable and childlike spirit. God does not save us in order that we may, so to say, "thresh all creation," but that we may become the little children of the kingdom. We have been charged, said Mr. Haslam, with ignoring the sacrifice of Christ. God forbid; that is the foundation of the whole thing, but we must go on to build the superstructure. God Himself is the Master Architect and Builder, and therefore all difficulties are for Him to overcome. We are not to measure them with our own power but with his.

Let the Christian remember, above everything, that his life is not merely a receptive one. God originally created us that we might be fellow-workers with Him. Many come to such meetings as these to draw spiritual water and refreshment for themselves only. They take notes and read and study them afterwards for the quenching of their spiritual thirst. That may be very good, but it will not last. They will have to come again another year to get re-refreshed. What we need is to get Christ Himself who will be in us a perennial well of life springing up and flowing out for the blessing and the refreshment of others. Then we shall not only have an experience to give but a testimony. Testimony is far better than experience; the one is all about ourselves, whereas the other relates to what the Lord hath done for us, and in us and by us. We must be like the woman at the well; she went there for her own refreshment; but when she got a view of Christ, she thought not so much of herself; she went away and testified to others: "Is not this the Christ?" We must ever be, and we ought to be, dissatisfied, till we are satisfying others and glorifying God. We come to God to receive, but this receiving is on purpose that we may give out to others. God's greatest gift to us is not forgiveness, or even the cleansing blood and the keeping power, but Christ Himself. Let us ask and receive that our joy may be full.

As I have said, that appeared to me to be a very sound and admirable keynote, and if it is maintained throughout all the Convention meetings the after results must be of the best and most far-reaching kind.

SUNDAY'S ENGAGEMENTS.

To a congregation that crowded St. John's Church to the doors, Rev. HUBERT BROOKE preached on Sunday morning a very appropriate discourse. He founded his remarks on three Scripture questions, with the corresponding answers, and applied these to different stages of the Christian life. The first reference was to blind Bartimeus, to whom Christ said: "What wilt thou that I should do unto thee?" "That I may receive my sight." When the request was granted, Bartimeus at once began to follow the Lord. Spiritual blindness, even in those who are spiritually alive, prevents them from following the Lord. What wonderful things are revealed to those who have received spiritual sight. Like the two spies, they see the goodliness of the land and the infinite power of God, where others only see the walled cities and the power of the enemy. Like Moses, they see things invisible to others, who care only for wealth and fame and position. Spiritual vision produces blindness to the things of the world. The second question was that put by God to Solomon: "What shall I give to thee?" The wise answer was, as the margin puts it, "Give thy servant a hearing heart...That I may judge the people." God's gifts to those who are his are not for themselves, but for others. There are diversities of gifts, but all are for the common profit. There are many who have heard God's call to repentance and faith, who do not hear his voice of direction and instruction day by day. Christ said: "As I hear I judge." Would that his people only gave those judgments and those decisions that come from hearing the voice of God. The third question was that of Elijah to his son in the faith, "What shall I do for thee?" "Let a double portion of thy spirit be upon me." The double portion of the inheritance was to the firstborn. This is what God would give to his Church—the Church of the firstborn. Peter had one portion of the Spirit which enabled him to see and know Christ as the Son of the living God; but not till the Holy Ghost was fully given did he receive the double portion that fitted him for life and service. This gift of a double portion of the Spirit is the crying need of the Church to-day.

Each of these three cases reveal distinguishing marks in the recipients of God's gift. They have made up their minds what to ask so that as soon as the request was proffered it was granted. How many Christians come to Conventions without knowing exactly what they need, and what they ought to ask of God. Again these men knew what they were going to do with the gifts they got. There are Christians who have no clear idea of how they would use the double portion of the Spirit; is it any wonder that God does not bestow it? Further, all the three had no doubt that God meant to give them what they sought. The gift too was granted in such a way that they knew it. These points were applied by Mr. Brooke with much point and skill to the c umstances of his congregation; and, in closng, he remarked that if any had come to eswick simply to have a time of sweet fellowhip with others, he prayed that God would ive them bitterness, so that it might become ne sweeter afterward.

On Sunday afternoon Mr. Haslam conucted an evangelistic service in the tent, hich was filled with an immense audience. he sermon was from John v. 25: "The hour coming, and now is, when the dead shall ear the voice of the Son of God, and they that ear shall live." It was a splendid, straightitting exposition of the great verities of life nd death: of free and full salvation, and of hat ought to follow it. He divided dead souls to three classes, typified by Jairus' daughter, he widow's son, and Lazarus, all of whom ere raised to life by the voice of the Son of od. The first he likened to those who, in he eye of the world, are very good moral eople, but who are all the time playing a part, nd are not what they seem to be. The second ort are those who are no hypocrites, and make boast of being honest disbelievers in God. he third are those who are so far gone in orruption that they are regarded as hopeless. r. Haslam showed how Christ can speak all hese into life, and how the very worst are not eyond his saving power. Some moving and raphically told narratives, from his own xperience as a mission preacher, clenched the ery exhortations, and surely nothing but the nbelief of those who ought to "roll away the one" can deprive such a powerful message of s legitimate fruit.

The name of Harford-Battersby is still very agrant in Keswick, and certainly must ever main so, while this Convention is held. If he much-loved late vicar of St. John's Church ad done nothing more to serve his generation han the establishment of this annual gather-g, he would have left behind him a worthy emorial. The feelings of esteem that were lt for the father are now extended to the sons, nd it was not surprising that Rev. John Harrd-Battersby should have had a very large ompany to hear him on Sunday evening. His rmon was an intensely practical one, and rectly bore, in many of its points, on the ecial circumstances of the week. From the ords of Paul to the Romans: "For none of s liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himlf," he set forth the radical difference between he self-life of the unconverted man and that fe of service towards God and man which is he ideal and only Christian life. There are any minor matters like those which agitated he Roman Church—abstention from meats, he observance of times and seasons, and suchke—on which no servant of God ought to judge nother; let every man be fully persuaded in s own mind. At the same time, the true rvant of Christ will not permit his Christian berty in these things to become a source of umbling to those whom he regards as weaker the faith. Let us cheerfully imitate the lf-abnegating spirit of the Apostle, which deared that if meat made his brother to offend, would eat no meat while the world stood. hese principles were very plainly and fearssly applied to some of the matters which, this day, may be held to be lawful in themlves, but which it may be the Christian's ivilege entirely to relinquish for the sake of hers.

At eight o'clock, after the church and chapel rvices were over, the tent was again crowded, hen further prayer was made, and Rev. G. C. RUBB gave an address on Philip's special ission in Samaria, and his call of the Spirit the desert to preach Jesus to the Ethiopian nuch. The address was given with all Mr. rubb's characteristic fervour, and was packed ll of telling "points," that kept the rapt tention during a heavy storm of rain that at upon the canvas roof. There was a mesge for almost every class of hearers, and, like r. Haslam's address of the previous evening, was a helpful preparation for the regular ssions of the Convention.

MONDAY, JUNE 22.

Though not in the programme, an early seven o'clock meeting was fixed for this morning; it was well attended, and much enjoyed. It could scarcely be called a prayer-meeting. A very suggestive and helpful word was given by Rev. Hubert Brooke on the blessings enumerated in Deut. xxxiii.

After a considerable downfall of rain, which has freshened the verdure, the clouds have cleared away, and at the moment of writing (Monday afternoon) there is every promise of fair weather. Many of the visitors who arrived in the end of the week are taking advantage of the interval before the opening gathering of the Convention proper to-night, to enjoy some of the scenic charms that are scattered so profusely all around.

OPENING MEETING.

On Monday evening two heavily laden trains brought a large accession of Convention visitors, including many of the speakers; probably, the town was never fuller than it is now. At the opening meetings the tent was crowded from end to end. Mr. BOWKER was in his accustomed seat in the chair; but his duties were performed by Rev. E. H. Hopkins.

According to usage, some preliminary words were given by Mr. Bowker's co-convener, Mr. ROBERT WILSON, who based his brief address on Isa. lxvi., and the story of Pentecost recorded in Acts. What we need, he said, is not more knowledge, but the power of the Holy Spirit to apply the knowledge that He has already given, and that He may make us willing in this day of his power; not more understanding of doctrine, but the submission of ourselves to God, that He may have dominion over us. There is in such a company power enough to shake many nations, if all were humbled before God, were cleansed by Him, and filled with Himself.

The principal address of the evening was by Rev. GEORGE C. GRUBB, on the results of being apart and alone with Christ. The Convention, he said, would be a huge failure, unless, even in the midst of the crowd, we are individually alone with Jesus. From the narrative, in Mark vi., of the disciples going with Jesus to a desert place to rest awhile, he deduced several lessons. If we go apart with Jesus, we shall learn the blessedness of having our own plans broken to pieces, that the Lord's plans for us may be carried out. We shall learn also what it is to have compassion on souls as Jesus had compassion on the multitude. We shall learn, too, the secret of past failure; the disciples could not cast out devils, as recorded in Matt. xvii., because of their "little faith." Mr. Grubb referred to the four other passages in which Christ censured those of "little faith," and applied them to the spiritual life. In Matt. vi. 30, He rebuked those who were over anxious about temporal matters. In Matt. viii. 26, He applies the words to those who were fearful in the storm. In Matt. xiv. 31, the word to Peter was: "O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?" and in Matt. xvi. 8: "O ye of little faith, why reason ye among yourselves?" These points were effectively and practically elaborated. The last thought was that in being apart with Christ we learn the mystery of the death of the cross, and the power and glory of resurrection. It was a weighty and solemn word, fitted to break up the fallow ground and prepare the way for the teaching of more comforting truths. Much prayer has gone up that this Convention may be more fruitful than any that has preceded it.

(To be continued in our next.)

LIVING IN INDIA.—A correspondent writes to contradict the idea expressed in some recent contributions to the missionary discussion of there being only three styles of living in India—that of the natives, the Eurasians, and the Europeans. From an extensive experience of native life in the Madras Presidency he asserts that there is as much variety in social condition and expenditure in India as there is in England.

THE OPEN-AIR MISSION.

THE annual meeting of the West London Auxiliary was held on the 15th instant in Stafford-rooms, Titchborne-street, under the presidency of Sir Robert Phayre. After an interesting report had been read by Mr. Wm. Davis, the hon. sec., addresses were delivered by Mr. Gawin Kirkham, Rev. Sydenham Dixon (Incumbent of Park Chapel, Chelsea), Miss Parker, and others, to a good attendance, largely composed of open-air workers.

AN OPEN-AIR PREACHERS' HOLIDAY.

We have often remarked upon the heartiness of open-air preachers. Whether at work or play they seem wholehearted. This quality certainly was the dominant feature on the 16th inst. when they celebrated their twelfth summer festival in the beautiful and extensive grounds of Trent-park, near Barnet, by invitation of Mr. R. C. L. Bevan. The welcome was given by Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bevan, in the absence of Mr. R. C. L. Bevan. There was no lack of hospitality, dinner and tea being served in a marquee capable of holding the whole party, which numbered nearly 300. The bulk of those present were laymen, the clerical members numbering less than a dozen.

Speech-making is naturally at a discount on these occasions; but Rev. Robert Balgarnie, who was for thirty-three years an open-air preacher at Scarborough, delivered a vigorous and acceptable address after dinner, in which he pointed out the honourable place this mode of evangelising occupies in the Word of God, and in the history of the Church of Christ, and illustrated its value by cases of conversion occurring under his own ministry. After tea, Mr. F. A. Bevan dealt with the advantages and disadvantages of out-door preaching; Mr. Joseph Weatherley and Colonel Puget also spoke.

The day passed all too quickly. Some rambled, others rested. Some leisurely rowed round the lake, while the more active spirits played cricket. Some held a prayer-meeting, and rarely did the sound of sweet hymns cease, save at meal times. An open-air meeting held in the hamlet of East Barnet, on the way to Oakleigh Park Station, in the evening, completed the programme of this most interesting day.

OBITUARY.

REV. W. R. STEVENSON.

REV. WILLIAM RAWSON STEVENSON, M.A., a prominentfigure in the General Baptist denomination, passed away at Bristol on Saturday week. The deceased minister was for nearly twenty-five years pastor of Broad-street Church, Nottingham, and later for nine years of the church in Chelsea-street, New Basford. While at Nottingham he was for a long period one of the tutors in the General Baptist College; latterly, since the death of Professor Goadby, he has been its principal. In 1867 he was president of the General Baptist Association. His removal, at the age of 65, is widely regretted.

MR. JOHN HUTCHISON, MADEIRA.

Mr. John Hutchison, Consul for Hawaii, and Vice-Consul for the United States of America in Madeira, passed away on July 11, at the age of seventy-five. He was a member of the committee of the "Mission to Sailors and Sailors' Rest" at Funchal, conducted by Mr. W. G. Smart, and treasurer of two of the Portuguese Protestant mission schools. Mr. Hutchison was a devout Christian man, and his loss will be deeply felt; he stood firmly by the cause at a time when it was assailed on all hands by the Jesuits and by ungodly men among our own countrymen. Will friends pray that some earnest man may be raised up to take his place?

The Fenaghy Meetings.

[BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

Two years ago a movement for the revival of religion in the province of Ulster was set on foot. The Revs. H. M. Williamson and Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, and Mr. William Young, J.P., of Fenaghy, near Ballymena, were the moving spirits; and the first series of open-air and tent meetings was held on the beautiful grounds of Mr. Young's country residence. The success of these meetings led to a repetition of them in the same place on Wednesday and Thursday last week. To say that the recent Convention was successful would be to say but little. The wide-spread interest awakened, the thousands attending, and the blessing, in every kind of loving way and form, poured down on us by our gracious heavenly Father, were, as the Rev. John McNeill phrased it, "extraordinary and abnormal." The Lord Himself had evidently taken the matter into his own loving hands, and He carried it through in his own inimitable way. Humanly speaking, it ought to have rained, but it didn't; there ought to have been some accident in the crowded special trains, or among the vast multitude surging out of the grounds into the narrow country road among the carriages and cars that blocked up the way, but not a scratch was heard of. It was the doing of the Lord, and it was marvellous in our eyes, He gave us the blessing; to Him be all the praise!

The Belfast and Ballymena papers have vied with each other in the length and heartiness of their notices. They put the numbers present on the second and last day at from ten to twelve thousand, and remark that they came not only from County Antrim, but from the adjoining County of Derry. Three special trains were run each day from Belfast. Each was heavily freighted at the starting point, and fresh numbers crowded in at the intermediate stations. Cullybackey was reached each day by the last of the specials shortly after eleven o'clock, and there were cars and waggons galore to convey the passengers at cheap rates to the place of meeting. "The extensive and well-kept grounds of Fenaghy" (I quote from The Ballymena Observer), "which were kindly thrown open for the occasion by Mr. Young, never looked better; the natural beauties of the place, its picturesque glens, river, and wood, being admirably suited for such a vast gathering as the meetings brought together. The arrangements made for the comfort and convenience of the public were in every sense excellent. A substantial backed platform occupied a space at the bottom of a large incline, and from this structure the open-air addresses were delivered, while at various parts of the grounds large marquees were erected. Four of these were used for the purposes of sectional meetings in the interval between the two open-air gatherings, while refreshments were served and religious literature was sold in others. Indeed, even had wet weather unfortunately set in, there was shelter, secure and comfortable, for all the vast throng."

The majority of the speakers were from the other side of the water, and their international diversity was well brought out by Major Whittle, who brought the proceedings to a close with one of those powerful and soul-stirring addresses which this honoured servant of God is enabled to deliver. He said, as he rose, "You have had the Gospel preached to you this afternoon by an Englishman and a Scotchman (Rev. W. Mowll, and Rev. John McNeill); an Irishman is in the chair (Rev. H. M. Williamson); and here am I, an American, to endorse their testimony, and to lift up again before you the same blessed Saviour who has saved our souls.

The great attraction of the gathering was unquestionably the Rev. John McNeill, and his extraordinary power was never more manifest; but the address of all others which we believe God used most to the conversion of the unsaved—and this was the main intention of the meetings—was that delivered on the second morning by Mr. W. R. Lane. It was wonderful how in this meeting our wonder-working God evidently led us, and brought victory out of what seemed to be the only failure of the occasion. There were two open-air evangelistic meetings each day, which all attended, and between them there were four sectional meetings in four of the largest tents, on home missions, foreign missions, and an inquiry meeting and a holiness meeting respectively. All these were well attended, in spite of the crowding wherever Mr. McNeill was to speak, save the foreign missions tent. Although such men as Mr. Reginald Radcliffe and Rev. Mr. Swanson were announced to speak, yet the tent was deserted; and on the second morning it was resolved to accept the situation, and to utilise the services of those brethren in the first evangelistic meeting in the open air. The opening prayer, by Mr. Radcliffe, brought us into the very presence-chamber of the Eternal, and two striking and convincing statements by him and Rev. W. S. Swanson, on the needs and the neglect of foreign missions, were followed by the remarkable address by Mr. Lane already referred to. Each chairman had to arrest the speakers when they had occupied the time allotted to them, and on the previous day Mr. Lane had, with soldier-like precision and obedience, stopped almost in the middle of a sentence rather than have "that dreadful bell" to ring him down. The audience would fain have had him continue then; but now, when a similar contingency threatened, "Go on!" was shouted from hundreds of voices. The chairman and other friends on the platform, recognising that God was speaking through his servant, gave him a free hand; and well it was that they did so, as Mr. Lane finished up an address every word of which "told" from start to finish, with the story of his own conversion while a private in the Coldstream Guards. This address was on Matt. xxvii. 32: "What shall I do with Jesus?" The brethren on the platform called on Mr. Lane, before prayer was offered up, to appeal to those in the great assemblage who desired the prayers of God's people for their immediate conversion to stand up. In this he displayed singular tact and wisdom. In fact, God was guiding and arranging everything. Forty or fifty must have risen, and it was touching to see every age and class represented by these anxious ones. Little children and white-headed men and women rose simultaneously. Mr. Lane then commended them to God in an earnest prayer, and, for nearly an hour after, they were dealt with in one of the large tents by the many willing Christian workers present. I know not how many passed from death unto life, but the tent was well filled with human beings, and I had the joy of pointing three to the blessed Lord and Saviour.

After Major Whittle's concluding address in the afternoon, there was another tent meeting for personal dealing, which was also largely attended. In addition to those already named, the other speakers were Revs. Geo. Shaw, J. Shillidy, J. Cargin, John Riddell, Dr. Stuart, Dr. Johnston, James Robertson, C. Davey, R. C. Johnston, F. S. Gardiner, and D. Watts. The laymen were represented by Lord Radstock, General Hatt-Noble, Dr. Moxey, and Messrs. James Barton, W. M. Oatts, S. G. Montgomery, and B. D. Wise. Such a sight as that vast assemblage seated at the four open-air meetings, on the grassy amphitheatre in front of the wooden platform, few if any of us ever saw before. The effect of these remarkable gatherings must be very far-reaching, and the results will never be fully realised here. "The day will declare it."

CAIRO SCHOOLS AND MEDICAL MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—Having read the notice with regard to our work here, which recently appeared in THE CHRISTIAN, I am anxious that it should be clearly made known that the Mission will be carried on exactly as hitherto, by Miss E. J. Whately and myself.

Through the blessing of God these schools have been the means of doing much good. The pupils enjoy the advantage of a sound education, and the careful religious training they receive is such that it influences their after life, making them anxious to avoid what is evil and to keep in the straight path.

In the large school for boys on the Mission premises there is an average attendance of 400. After prayer, a portion of the Bible is read and explained to the scholars in Arabic, for our principal aim is to impart to all a thorough knowledge of Scripture truth. Besides Arabic their own language, the boys are taught English and French, and are instructed in most subjects which comprise the usual European school education.

In the large school for native girls we have over 200 pupils, most of whom are Copts and Moslems. During the morning they are instructed in Arabic, both reading and writing, and the majority of them also learn English and French. Of an afternoon they are taught plain needlework, and also the beautiful Egyptian embroidery in gold, silver, and coloured silks.

Another branch of the Mission is our Levantine school, where there are upwards of forty pupils of the higher class, who receive a superior European education, including music and other accomplishments. In the branch school for boys which we recently started at the village of Ghizeh, there is already a fair attendance of scholars.

A very important feature is the Medical Mission, where patients are treated free of charge. Many of the sick arrive from a distance, and an average of 7000 fresh cases annually come before our notice. Our physician, Dr. Azonry, is a skilful oculist, and he daily relieves numbers of poor people suffering from that dreadful plague of the country, ophthalmia. The Scriptures are read to the patients awaiting their turn to be attended to in the ante-room of the dispensary. As a rule they listen with great attention.

The visits to the Nile villages, in which our late beloved friend took such delight, and in which she may almost be said to have laid down her life this year, will, by God's blessing, be continued; and it is my earnest prayer that our labours may be attended with the same success as hitherto.—Yours sincerely,

(MRS.) F. SHAKOOR.

JEWS IN PARIS.—Mr. Solomon Feingold, Jewish missionary in Paris, writes to say that his work is marked by tokens of encouragement. Many Jews visiting the Exhibition find their way to the Mission Room, and the Scriptures concerning the true Messiah are expounded to them. Some Rabbis, says Mr. Feingold, have become convinced of the truth of the New Testament.

TO CHRISTIAN YOUNG MEN.—Arrangements are being made which will enable young men to camp together at the seaside for a few days or weeks during August and September at a small and inclusive charge for board and lodging, and combining for the purpose of evangelistic and temperance work on Sunday and on several evenings of the week. It is believed that there are many young men ready and willing to avail themselves of such an opportunity of engaging in work of this character if facilities were offered that within their means. For further particulars write to Mr. W. G. Horncastle, Portway, West Ham Park, Essex.

SS DANIELL AND THE SOLDIERS.

RING the training season numbers of Militia iments come up to Aldershot, and this year special work which Miss Daniell carries on hem has attained larger proportions than . For over nine weeks three large marquees e pitched close to different regiments, and t after night were filled by the men, who, ther with many of their officers, heartily ed the kindness shown.

There's no end to the good that tent's done ur regiment; I shall write and tell Miss iell so," said one man to Miss Daniell's fatigable missionary, who toiled literally and night in their service.

ach tent had its full complement of lamps,
es, bagatelle boards, games, papers, books, azines, and large bound volumes of The strated London News and Graphic, which e immensely popular; savings bank deposits
e taken, school sometimes held, and a lady in each tent every evening ready to write ers, and serve out the paper and stamps, which

e never had to write our letters on the sand, e twelfth part of the space of a bell-tent, can lly conceive the attraction of a comfortable
-lighted tent, with ink, pens, paper, and lopes, to be had for the asking, and a good dy table, with abundant space for that dis-tion of arms and legs which, amongst the ducated, seems necessary for the successful mplishment of a letter. At all events the tia made good use of their privileges. Three s a day the post-orderly came in for letters,
I heard one day that in one tent alone letters had gone by one post. In one e the sale of temperance refreshments was ved, and the pleasant clatter of cups and ers, and the popping of ginger-beer bottles up a subdued accompaniment to all other ds.

ut here, as elsewhere throughout her work,
one main object for which Miss Daniell her helpers have toiled, has been the ation of souls. Each tent had its harium and store of Bibles and hymn-books, every evening, its meeting. Hundreds of in this way heard the simple Gospel of ation. Some of the bolder would come ard to the camp chairs in the front, others
d stay singing or listening at the tables, no doubt many a man who still held his or newspaper before him was listening
. All behaved admirably.

e opportunity for personal dealing came wards, as the tents gradually emptied, one could go round to those who sat apart talk to them. Many were under impres-
, and it was believed that several went e again rich for time and for eternity in Saviour they had found.

aid that there had been no crime whatever the regiment had been in Aldershot, and runkenness, except a case which had been ted that morning. The testimony of her was to the same effect. "You know nearly all the men that attend your tent ust the very men who in Woolwich last used to be in the public-houses, and some e lowest, too."

ho would not thank God for these results, feel them well worth all the labour and nse? The cost has been heavy, and would serious drain on the already over-strained rces of the Mission. The hire of tents was t £4 10s. a week, and each needed a man
ke charge. Besides, there was lighting, age of tents, tables, stores, &c. So that bly the whole expense will not be under d now, though the Militia have gone, two of the tents are having a longer lease of life—one being pitched for the Cavalry Brigade at Farnborough, the other at the Guard's encampment at Pirbright. Being told by a Guardsman that at the latter place only one afternoon out-door service was held, and that the last Militia were leaving on the Saturday morning, Miss Daniell wrote to the Colonel commanding at Pirbright, offering to bring over a tent. He immediately telegraphed himself: "Delighted; will render you all the assistance in my power. Have chosen ground for the tent," or words to that effect.

In the afternoon, Miss Daniell and a friend went over, and found a capital piece of ground prepared within the lines, almost between them and the canteen. I quote from Miss Daniell's own words:—

"We had a delightful time with the Militia the last evening. Found the tent already full, and more and more came in till it was quite crowded. W. says they flocked in as soon as ever it was open. They are simply delighted. The one cry is from all sides: 'Oh, if you only had had this before, what a lot of them would have been saved from the canteen!' or similar expressions. W. heard one man say on Sunday evening: 'Well, I've done with the canteen.' On Sunday I believe nearly every man joined in the singing at the meeting, and last night they crowded round for the hymns. We are having a second tent put up this morning. If I am permitted, and can manage it as to workers, I shall keep the tents up some weeks. But that will be all shown day by day."

What a delightful preparation this is for the London work, which necessarily is mostly amongst the Guards. The new building in James-street, Buckingham-gate, is progressing rapidly. The slates, we hear, are to be on this week, and the architect expects the builders to be out by Michaelmas. The furnishing and final touches will take some time, but probably by Christmas or the New Year the building, so long needed and waited for, will be ready for opening. May it be said of hundreds: "Lo, this man was born there!" C.

Evangelistic Notes.

Evangelistic Mission.—Workers connected with this Mission are holding services daily on Yarmouth sands. Large numbers of children and adults gather to listen to the singing of the hymns and to the simple Gospel addresses.

Dr. Pentecost addressed immense open-air gatherings of people in the Queen's-park, Edinburgh, on the last two Sabbath afternoons. He spoke from a waggonette, and his powerfully-convincing addresses were well heard.

Campbeltown, Argyllshire.—A series of special religious services has been conducted for the benefit of the large number of the people of Glasgow who visit Campbeltown in the Fair holidays. These services were held in the open air, and in the hall of the Y.M.C.A. Several ministers of the town, several missionaries, and a number of Christian workers from Glasgow took part in the effort. Large meetings were held, and the audiences were most attentive. The gentlemen expressed thanks for the answer given. We have reason to believe that the meetings, writes a correspondent, resulted in the conversion of some, and we know in the comfort and encouragement of many visitors, who say they found them a time of refreshing.

North Camp, Aldershot.—Mr. T. Wales, of the Evangelisation Society, during May, June, and July, has been conducting a mission in a tent here. A large number of the militia who have been to the camp for the annual training have been attracted to the tent, especially on Sundays, when there has been an attendance of 200 to 280. God has honoured the Word preached by the conversion of several, while others have been taught the way of the Lord more perfectly. August and September Mr. Wales will be with the tent at Bourne and Wrecclesham villages, in the immediate locality of Farnham, Surrey. I shall be glad to correspond with any Christian, with a view of establishing an unsectarian work in the North Camp, Aldershot.

MRS. MARY CLEMENT LEAVITT.

THE World's Organiser of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union was accorded a very hearty reception on her arrival in England, at a representative gathering of workers in the teetotal movement, convened by the British Women's Temperance Association, in the library of the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, on Monday evening. Mrs. Bright Lucas occupied the chair, and first greeted Mrs. Leavitt in the name of the British Women's Temperance Association, of which she is the president. Then followed brief addresses of welcome to Mrs. Leavitt by some fourteen ladies and gentlemen, representing as many different temperance organisations in Great Britain and Ireland.

Mrs. LEAVITT gave some account of her tour round the world during the last six years. In this time she has travelled 62,000 miles, and held 1300 meetings, large and small. In some towns which she visited there was not a Christian minister who would help her to organise meetings, and often she had to suffer much discouragement; but the presence of the Lord has been with her all along, and in many places where she commenced with an audience of a dozen people, she finished up with the most commodious hall that could be obtained. Large numbers of total abstinence pledges have been taken, numerous branches of the W.C.T.U., and also of the White Cross Society, have been formed, and many souls have been led to the Saviour. Mrs. Leavitt, after touching upon the condition of some of the countries which she visited, concluded her interesting address by an earnest call to renewed effort to stop this great iniquity

AMERICAN WORK AND WORKERS.

AT the noon prayer-meeting in Aldersgate-street, on Thursday, last week, Mr. M. H. HODDER had a very pleasant report to give of his experiences and observations on his recent visit to the United States. He said he had found great joy in fellowship with the Christians in America, as well as on the voyage out and back. A visit to the Philadelphia Convention was a very happy and profitable time, though the hot atmosphere was rather trying. In New York he went to hear Mr. D. L. Moody, at Dr. W. M. Taylor's Church in Broadway. The place was packed, and the words of the evangelist were as full of power and blessing as ever. At Boston he was greatly charmed with the simple earnestness of Dr. A. J. Gordon. A bright feature of the prayer-meetings in America is the fact that they are open. At a church meeting he was much interested by the testimony of several who were admitted by baptism. In one case those so admitted were father, mother, a son of eighteen, and another of eleven; and the simple witness of the last was as touching as any. A Sunday was spent at New London, in the State of Connecticut, with Mr. John Harris, a great friend of the Y.M.C.A. He has lately given an excellent building to the Association.

From Boston Mr. Hodder went to Canada for some time. In Toronto he found Mr. Arthur Burson doing a splendid evangelistic work, mainly in connection with the friends of the Episcopal Church. The Christians of Toronto generally are very much alive. At Montreal he was glad to find that a site had been secured for a new Y.M.C.A. building, opposite the Windsor, one of the largest hotels in America, built on one of the finest sites in the city. At St. John's and Halifax a good work is being done in hearty co-operation with the ministers.

A couple of happy days were spent at Northfield, where Mr. Hodder enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. Sankey. Mr. Moody's new church is a great acquisition, and the evangelist himself is seen at his very best in his native place.

EVANGELICAL SCHOOLS AT PISA.

REV. T. W. H. JACOB (formerly English chaplain at Turin), who has lately had the privilege of visiting and thoroughly inspecting the schools carried on by Miss Carruthers, at Pisa, sends to us some details of his visit. After describing what he saw in the various classes, he says:—

"Here was a glorious sight! More than 640 children being trained in clear Gospel truth. Here, in Italy, the land of darkness and superstition, is this Christian lady working alone, in feeble and delicate health (the last eight weeks actually confined to her room), yet standing firm and steadfast to the glorious Gospel, and in the strength of the Lord propagating its blessed truths. She does this not only by means of the schools, but by Bible and tract distribution work among the factory girls, Bible-classes, and night-schools. She has gained such a power over the hearts of the people that the very place is called 'Inghilterra' (or England) by the parish priest himself.

"Should any readers feel moved to help this effort, they may communicate with Mrs. Filby, 10, Chapel Field Gardens, Norwich. Above all, pray for this servant of God, and her work for Him. For over twenty years she has laboured in it. Hundreds of Protestant children have gone forth from these schools, to carry the good seed throughout the land. Who can tell what a share the present 600 may have in the evangelisation of Italy?"

JEWS IN NEW YORK.

ONE of the most interesting mission enterprises in New York City is the work among the Jews, which has its head-quarters at 17, St. Mark's-place, near the Cooper Union. Here is located the only Hebrew Christian Church in the country. It has a pleasant chapel, reading-room, &c., under the charge of Rev. Jacob Freshman and his wife. Mr. Freshman is a converted Hungarian Jew, a man of culture and piety, and ardently devoted to the work of evangelising his own nation. There are branches of the work in several other cities.

As Mr. Freshman is at present in London, some of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN may have an opportunity of meeting this dear brother whom God has greatly blessed in leading the children of Abraham to Christ.

The Jews in New York city have forty-nine synagogues, and constitute a larger population than in Jerusalem itself, numbering nearly 90,000. They form an influential element, many of them being bankers, merchants, editors, and politicians. Although comprising ten per cent. of the population, they contribute less than one per cent. to the criminal classes. In religion, many belong to the Reform party, or, in other words, are rationalists in their interpretation of the Old Testament. The Hebrew Standard, published in New York, lately said: "Judaism in this city has sunk down more and more to the level of superstition. The principles of high morality, of sublime humanity, which are its essence, its soul, are being lost sight of, and we have on one side Jews who worship the letter and know not the God above us, and on the other side Jews who worship themselves and have no God at all."

There have been some remarkable cases of conversion, and several young men, including a former Rabbi, are studying for the Christian ministry. The work is one of peculiar difficulty, goes on slowly, and encounters bitter prejudice; but it evidently has God's seal upon it. No evangelistic work has richer promises, or is more directly connected with the final glory of Christ. Labour for the salvation of Israel has a most important bearing upon the salvation of the Gentiles; "for if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the diminishing of them the riches of the Gentiles, how much more their fulness." No more profitable investment can be made by those who have the means than by helping in this work of bringing Israel to the knowledge of the truth. The Jews are still "beloved for the fathers' sakes"; they are still the people of God's election in things spiritual; and, when "the veil is taken away," and they see in Jesus "Him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write," they will become the most efficient helpers in the work of evangelising the nations, whether in this age, or in the age to come.

Letters to the Editor.

VIVISECTION AND CRUELTY.

SIR,—I trust you will allow me to say a few words in reply to the letter of Mr. Albert Carless in defence of vivisection, which appeared in your issue of July 5.

Mr. Carless endeavours to prove that vivisection is not morally wrong or opposed to the teaching of Scripture, by adducing the permission given to offer animals in sacrifice for sin, and, above all, by pointing to the vicarious sufferings of the Lord Jesus for the guilt of man. A moment's reflection will show us that these instances are wholly irrelevant. God's tender mercies are over all his creatures—the ox that treadeth out the corn, and which was not to be muzzled, or the ass that falls into a ditch, which it was no breach of the sacred obligation of the Sabbath to rescue. And He, the merciful Lawgiver, who alone had the power to allow exemptions from the binding obligations of his laws, distinctly permitted two, and two only, exceptions, viz., for food and for sacrifice. No permission can be found in Scripture to probe into the brains or viscera of God's creatures in search of scientific or any other kind of knowledge. For many centuries, before the Flood, even for food, the lower animals could not be slain; while the command, not the mere permission, to offer animals in sacrifice, was God's special ordinance for a great and special purpose, which it would be presumption in man to strain beyond the limits laid down by Himself.

A fortiori, it appears to me it would be more than presumption to compare the agonies of our Lord upon the cross with the tortures inflicted upon dogs and monkeys by vivisectors, and to endeavour in the former to find a justification for the latter.

Mr. Carless, while condemning any needless infliction of pain, justifies the practice of vivisection by affirming, on the "indubitable authority" of Mr. Erichsen, that but a minute proportion of the cases of vivisection during the past year caused any pain. This is, indeed, a broken reed on which to lean. Mr. Erichsen neither knows, nor professes to know, from his own observation, anything whatever of the experiments performed. He simply reports what the experimenters report to him. He inspects nothing; his title of inspector is simply a mockery, and only tends to mislead a too confiding public. There is no difference in this respect between the present inspector and his predecessor. Let me quote the words of one of the ablest opponents of vivisection in England, Miss Frances Power Cobbe:—

> Over and over again, the two inspectors assure us that, in the year on which they report, the amount of pain inflicted was "wholly insignificant," or "scarcely involved any appreciable suffering"; and they go out of their way to mention trivial experiments on rabbits, mice, and frogs; never once naming such animals as dogs, cats, monkeys, or horses. But turn we now to the scientific papers, and here are samples of the multitudinous recent English vivisections to be found therein:—
> "Monkeys.—Boring holes into the skull, and burning out with a cautery portions of brain.
> "Dogs.—Trephining; scraping out interior of tympanum (middle ear) with sharp spoon; rubbing the cavity with chloride of zinc (which destroys everything with which it comes in contact), and killing animals thirty-eight and twenty days after operation. Thirty-one experiments. Dogs starved for many hours; abdomen cut open; bile ducts dissected out and cut-glass tubes inserted; duct to gall-bladder closed; various drugs placed in intestines. Chloroform not used, but curare. Cutting down through the loins dogs and dissecting out kidneys. Curare used and so chloroform.
>
> "Cats.—Baked until their blood-heat rose to 115·8 d Fahr.; fixed so that they could not move; vagi nerv cut and stimulated; digitalis injected under the ski temperature observed until death resulted."

Well may Miss Cobbe close her powerful lett with the following appeal:—

> We anti-vivisectionists ask for true reports to Parl ment; and we are perfectly satisfied that if but o such true report be ever presented, our Bill for the to prohibition of vivisection will be carried before t close of the session.

Mr. Carless asks: Has knowledge thus obtain been turned to useful account? And answers own question in tones of triumph: "Yes, a thousa times, yes!" I can only say that some of the m eminent men in his own profession very distinc deny these claims of benefit thus produced to m Dr. Hoggan before the Royal Commission sai "The only point on which these people agree, af all their cruel experiments, is that what is app able to the dog is not applicable to man." George Macilwain in his evidence before the sa Commission said: "We are struck by the possibility of applying the experiments to a useful purpose whatever." Dr. Haughton's te mony was to the same effect, and we have further testimony of such eminent surgeons as Wm. Ferguson, Sir Charles Bell, Surgeon-Gene Gordon, Dr. Berdoe, Mr. Lawson Tait, and ma others, that no gains to science have resulted fr vivisection. "O Lord, thou preservest man a beast" (Ps. xxxvi. 6).

THE PRESENT CHRISTIAN SABBAT

SIR,—I do not know whether you have ever co dered the question whether the present Sunda the day originally sanctified by God at the creat You may remember that Archbishop Usher h the view that it is, and I know of nothing in Sc ture to contradict it. Presuming that the creat of the world commenced on Monday, then Sun although the seventh day of creation, would h been the first day of man's week, he having b created on the sixth day. The special reverenc which Sunday has been held by some nations of tends to point out a traditional sanctity for this even after they had left off worshipping the God. If you refer to Exod. xvi. 23, you will according to the new version, that the Jews ha Sabbath appointed them: "And this is that wh the Lord hath spoken; to-morrow is a solemn a holy Sabbath unto the Lord."

It is easy to conceive that the day God wo appoint for the Jews as their most holy day wo not be that which was held by the idolatrous tions around as their most holy day—carrying his Divine plan of keeping them a peculiar peo a separate nation. Later, when our Lord from the tomb and the Jewish dispensation c to an end, the reasons for a separate Sabbath the Jew would also have ceased to exist, and Sabbath sanctified at the creation become a the Sabbath of the Church of God, a day fur sanctified a few weeks later on by the outpou of the Holy Spirit on that day.

This view appears to me much more in acc ance with the unchangeable nature of God than laboured attempts so often made to prove the priety of a change of day. The closer we fo the clear and direct teaching of God's Word safer shall we be. May we never forget G foreknowledge, and that when the Sabbath sanctified at the creation He knew the whole o events of the future. The beautiful harmon God's providence must be viewed as a contin whole.

A HORRIBLE CASE OF CRUELTY to a child was recently tried near Calcutta. The wife, a five years old, was suspended from the roof by her by her husband's mother and father, and then thra with a stick and branded with hot irons. The magistrate, in sentencing the accused, said that thr out a long career he had never met with a case of persistent and fiendish cruelty.

SUNDAY, JULY 28.—Joshua VI.

IE last three verses of the previous chapter properly long to this one. Ver. 1 is merely parenthetic, d "the Lord" who speaks to Joshua (2) is the Captain of the Lord's host," whom Joshua beheld d worshipped (v. 14).

Mark that Joshua's question, "Art Thou for us for our adversaries?" did not get a direct an- er, for it depended on the people's own conduct ether the Lord should be for them or for their emies (see vii. 11, 12, and 2 Chron. xv. 2). Com- re the identification of the most destructive of rael's enemies with the Lord's own armies, in att. xxii. 7.

Observe the parallelism between the Lord's appear- to Moses (Exod. iii.), when about to lead Israel t of Egypt, and his appearing here to Joshua, en about to lead them into Canaan. In both es the shoes were to be put off, "for the place ereon thou standest is holy ground." In each e the Lord appeared in a form suited to express e work that lay before Him. First, as a consuming e that would not consume the bush in which He elt; secondly, as Captain of the Lord's host, dy to put at the disposal of Israel all the power ey needed for victory over their enemies.

As Jericho was the key to the possession of the ole land, and its fall would be the earnest of ure conquest, all was arranged to show forth the ture of this conquest. All was to be the work of e Lord who dwelt between the Cherubim, so t the ark of the covenant, which had already ided the waters of Jordan, was to be carried for en days once round the city, and seven times on e seventh day. He was to do the work. Israel s to exhibit faith by trumpet blast and shout eb. xi. 30), and patience by persevering in the scribed course, which were at last rewarded by e wall falling down flat, and the city being taken. The taking of the city was the occasion of making d to Rahab and all found in her house the enant mercy which had been promised her. So ll it be in the day of the world's judgment to se who are found in Christ.

MONDAY, JULY 29.—Joshua VII.

Israel is now taught the lesson that victory was ured to them only on condition of their acting the Lord commanded. As Asa was taught the ne lesson (2 Chron. xv. 2): "The Lord is with , while ye be with Him...but if ye forsake Him, will forsake you."

Ver. 9.—It was a potent appeal which Joshua ferred before the Lord when, recounting the feat of Israel by the men of Ai, he wound up h: "What wilt Thou do unto thy great name?" at once brings out the discovery of the evil which s the real cause of the defeat.

Ver. 11.—The "accursed" thing, which the Lord rges Israel with having taken, is better rendered R.V., "devoted." See vi. 19. "All the silver l gold, &c., are consecrated unto the Lord: y shall come into the treasury of the Lord." e sin of Achan was, in fact, both theft and sacri- e; it was stealing that which belonged to the rd, and was consecrated to his service. It ung from covetousness, and was carried out by sembling (11), which implied unbelief in the rd's omniscience.

Ver. 26.—The name of the place where Achan's ishment took place, expressing Israel's putting ay the sin that had brought them into trouble, called the valley of Achor, or "troubling." sea ii. 15 seems to intimate that something of a ilar kind will occur when Israel hereafter is ored to God's favour again. Possibly some mn execution of judgment inflicted by Israel lf upon those among them whose sin they dis- er to be the cause of their troubles.

TUESDAY, JULY 30.—Joshua VIII.

Ver. 1, 2.—Now that the evil has been put away, Lord can assure Israel of victory, and can speak t as if already attained; "I have given into hand the king of Ai, and his people, and his , and his land." It is remarkable that the riction as to appropriating the spoil, which had n in force in the case of Jericho (vii. 18, 19), the neglect of which had been the sin of Achan, ow removed: "Only the spoil thereof, and the cattle thereof, shall ye take for a prey unto yourselves." A striking proof that sin is in its essence disobedience to God's commands, whether we recognise the reason for the command or not. Like children, we are apt to say, Why should I do this? and God's answer is that of the parent, "Because I tell you to do it." This is not mere arbitrary dealing, but is based upon the wisdom of God, for He knows, far better than we can do, what is really for our best interests.

Ver. 8.—Though God gave them the victory, He minutely laid down the conditions on which it was to be won. Here again is a test of their obedience. "See, I have commanded thee" (8).

Ver. 30.—We learn from Deut. xxvii. 13 that the curses of the law were to be pronounced on Mount Ebal. Appropriately, therefore, and, as it were, to hold out the only hope of deliverance from the curse of the law was the altar erected on Mount Ebal rather than on Mount Gerizim. "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us."

WEDNESDAY, JULY 31.—Joshua IX.

Ver. 1.—The alarm and consequent confederation of the kings must be connected with the fall of Jericho and Ai, the last six verses of the last chapter being parenthetic.

Ver. 3.—Gibeon is still known as El-Jib, and lies about five miles north of Jerusalem. The name means "built on a hill."

Ver. 14.—Joshua and the men of Israel were deceived by the plausible tale of the Gibeonites, but it was their own fault; they should no more have depended upon their own wisdom, in dealing with crafty foes, than upon their own power in fighting with these foes. They "asked not counsel at the mouth of the Lord."

Ver. 24.—There was a measure of faith in these Gibeonites (as formerly in Rahab, ii. 9, 10), which led to their seeking a league with Israel, even though through deceptive means, and this is so far rewarded that, while the deception was punished by their servile condition, their faith was owned in their being spared, and, to a certain degree, incorporated amongst Israel, and associated in service with God's house. They may, in this respect, be a type of the Gentile remnant now being incorporated with the Israel of God. See Eph. ii. 12, 13, iii. 6. Their league with Israel becomes in the next chapter the occasion of a united attack upon them by five kings, which may typify the hostility of the world and of the powers of the world against those that have become "fellow-citizens of the saints and of the household of God."

THURSDAY, AUGUST 1.—Joshua X.

Ver. 4.—The great object of the alliance of the five kings was to "smite Gibeon: for it hath made peace with Joshua and with the children of Israel." They do not attack Joshua and Israel, for they are afraid of them; but they attack those of their own country who have made peace with them. So do Satan and "the rulers of the darkness of this world" attack "those who have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

Ver. 6.—The Gibeonites wisely do not attempt to meet this combination of their enemies in their own strength, but "sent unto Joshua...saying, Slack not thy hand from thy servants; come up to us quickly, and save us, and help us: for all the kings of the Amorites...are gathered together against us." Would that Gentile Christians were as prompt to call upon their Joshua, when they see the forces of the world arrayed against them.

Ver. 7.—Joshua promptly responds to the call of his new allies. He does not taunt them with the deception by which they had got Israel's oath confirming their league with them, but he "ascends from Gilgal, and all the people of war with him, and all the mighty men of valour."

Ver. 8.—The Lord Himself confirms Joshua's zeal in responding to the cry of the Gibeonites, and from this verse to the end of the chapter (36 verses) is one uninterrupted career of victory. There is no such record of continuous victory in the whole of the Bible. Then it was that—

> "The unchanging sun,
> His daily course refused to run,
> The pale moon hurrying to the west
> Paused at a mortal's call."

"There was no day like that before it or after it, that the Lord hearkened unto the voice of a man: for the Lord fought for Israel" (14). But Israel was not so much fighting for themselves as for the Gibeonites, who had appealed to them for help. What encouragement to believers to call in Jesus (the true Joshua) to their help. "Come up to us quickly, and save us, and help us."

FRIDAY, AUGUST 2.—Joshua XI.

This chapter records another confederation of the kings in the north of Canaan to oppose the advance of Joshua and Israel. They call in to their help "the Canaanite on the east and on the west," as well as "the Amorite, and the Hittite, and the Perizzite, and the Jebusite," the result being an assemblage of "much people, even as the sand that is upon the sea shore in multitude, with horses and chariots very many."

Ver. 6.—No doubt Joshua's heart failed him at the sight of such a multitude; for the Lord's word to him was: "Be not afraid because of them." Then follows a promise of complete victory on the morrow, wrought by the Lord Himself.

Ver. 9.—"Joshua did unto them as the Lord bade him," in destroying their chariots and horses, probably that they might not be used by Israel for their own warfare. See Deut. xvii. 16; Isa. xxxi. 1.

Ver. 18.—The "long time" that Joshua "made war with all those kings" seems to have been not less than five, and more probably seven, years. See xiv. 10.

Ver. 21.—The Anakim, who in the days of Israel's unbelief (Deut. i. 28) had been their special dread, now yield to Joshua, who "destroyed them utterly with their cities," except a few who remained in Gaza, Gath, and Ashdod, to be as it were witnesses of what God had done for Israel.

Ver. 23.—This verse describes generally the conquest of Canaan, and the subsequent cessation of war; though there were many places out of which the inhabitants had not yet been driven.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 3.—Joshua XII.

This chapter may be called the specification of Israel's victories, or, at least, of the kings whom they subdued at their first conquest of the land. First are given the two on "the other side Jordan toward the rising of the sun," Sihon, king of the Amorites, and Og, king of Bashan, whose territory was given to the two tribes and a half, who took their portion on that side of Jordan.

Ver. 7.—Thirty-one kings, "on this side Jordan," are mentioned by name and their capitals. It sounds strange in the light of subsequent history to find that one of these was "the king of Jerusalem" (10). And yet it was only four hundred years afterwards that "the Jebusites, the inhabitants of the land," were driven out by David (2 Sam. v. 6). So slack was Israel to go in and possess the land which God gave unto them.

In like manner, it is one thing to rejoice in the victory which our Joshua—the Lord Jesus—has once for all won for his people, and to read of it in such words as Col. ii. 15: "Having spoiled principalities and powers, He made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in (the cross)"; but it is another thing so to follow up this victory as to make it our own by faith, and to be able to rejoice over our enemies put under our feet (x. 24), and to experience the exceeding great and precious promises given to us in Christ Jesus as actually ours in possession. May God give us grace to go in and possess the land.

Mr. Geo. Evens and wife have concluded a successful mission at Blackley, and are now conducting services at Miles' Platting Mission-hall.

Lichfield House, Royal Parade, Eastbourne.—Most of the lads who avail themselves of this Christian Holiday Home for business youths are received on payment of a very small fee, the remainder of the cost of maintenance being defrayed by the help of friends. Funds are at present greatly needed. During the holiday season many applications for admission are being received, and some have had to be refused.—(MISS) M. KENNEDY, Superintendent.

Gospel Literature for our Soldiers.—May I again ask the help of your readers to enable us to put into the hands of soldiers who leave this station for service in India a little Gospel book and a penny Testament. The 18th Hussars and two drafts of infantry are soon to leave this station for India, and I shall be happy to receive parcels of Gospel books and Testaments for them. Carriage should be prepaid.—HENRY HULL, Miss Papillon's Soldiers' Institute, Sandgate, Kent.

Home for Christian Governesses and others of small means, needing sea air and rest for a week or two. For particulars enclose stamped addressed envelope to the Matron, 2, Merton-villas, Holland-road, Clacton-on-Sea, Essex. Help is much needed towards the extra furnishing of this house, which is much larger than the former little cottage, and much nearer the beach; greatly appreciated and recommended by former visitors. Contributions will be thankfully received by Miss Smith, Little Heath, Potter's Bar.

Sunday Afternoon, August 4.

SAUL CHOSEN OF THE LORD.—1 SAM. ix. 15—27.

GOLDEN TEXT: PROV. viii. 15.

NOTE the incidents leading up to these verses:—The loss of Kish's asses; Saul and the servant sent to search for them; after two or three days drawing near to Ramah, where Samuel lived; through the advice of the servant, and by direction of some maidens, meeting Samuel as he was about to go up to sacrifice. All these are more than mere incidents. As the whole narrative shows, they are links in the chain of Divine providence, insignificant in themselves, yet each one necessary in bringing about the purpose of God. Who would have thought that the loss of a man's asses would have anything to do with the choice of Israel's king? No one knows what momentous issues may be decided by the most trifling event.

Ver. 15—17 are a parenthesis, and are introduced to explain Samuel's strange reception of Saul." The Lord had told Samuel in his ear" (15), or had uncovered his ear, as we might do in whispering a secret to another. "The Lord said to him" (17), even while Saul was before him. How intimate was Samuel's communion with God. He was permitted to hear God's whispered secrets, and was so conscious of God's presence that intercourse with others did not disturb his communion. In this feature lay the secret of his success as judge and leader of Israel. Does not our success as teachers depend upon the same condition? Does God whisper any secrets to us? Can find the answer in Ps. xxv. 14; John. xv. 14, 15. The message God had given to Samuel (16) seems almost to contradict the teaching of viii. 7. But though the people had practically rejected Him, He had not rejected them. Not judgment alone, but mercy prompted Him to hear "their cry," and to send them a man to be their ruler and deliverer. By choosing Saul, and anointing him, He identifies Himself with him, and practically pledges Himself to give victory by him, so long as he and they are faithful to God (xii. 14). He evidently consulted their preference in the choice He made. Saul was a man after their heart. See ver. 2, and x. 23, 24.

Ver. 18—21.—Picture the meeting of the old and faithful prophet with the young man, tall and handsome and kingly, to whom he was to give place. Saul did not know Samuel (18), nor does he seem to have heard of him (6, 7). His ignorance surprises us. Had he occupied such an obscure position that news of the stirring events of Samuel's leadership had never reached him? Explain it as we will, it is not a promising feature in Saul. If he knew so little of God's prophet, he probably knew little of God, and Israel cannot be delivered by a king who does not know and obey God. Samuel's message (19, 20) surprised Saul. He not only knew about the loss of Kish's asses, but knew also that they were found. But Saul also heard that the whole desire of Israel was towards him. This was more surprising still. His only thought when he left home was for the asses; the idea of being chosen king never entered his mind. If he did not know Samuel, is it not likely that he did not even know of the people's determination to have a king? There could not be a more remarkable illustration of the providence of God than this. God makes a search for asses to end in finding a throne. There are similarly remarkable experiences in every life. The Rev. F. W. Robertson intended entering the army; but the daughter of a neighbour was ill, and was kept awake by the barking of Mr. Robertson's dog. This led to an interview with his neighbour, and with a gentleman who was staying there at the time, between whom and Mr. Robertson a warm friendship began, and whose counsel led him to abandon the army for the Church. The course of his life was changed, as he says, through the barking of his dog. The God of Providence "wings an angel and guides a sparrow." Saul's reference to the smallness of his tribe (21) is explained by Jud. xx. 46, xxi. 1—3.

Ver. 22—27.—Here were further surprises for Saul. He was not only admitted to "the parlour," or guest-chamber, but was given the chief seat among the guests; and the best piece had been reserved for him (23, 24) by a previous arrangement. His purely accidental visit, as he thought it, had been expected and provided for by Samuel. "The housetop" had probably been used for sleeping, and here Saul and Samuel communed together (25), probably on the subject of the kingdom. When the servant "passed on" (27) and left them alone, then followed the anointing, chap. x.

LESSON OUTLINE.

(1) Saul chosen king.—He must leave the obscure life he had lived and occupy the throne. The kingdom was to be under his rule, and the enemies of the kingdom were to be subdued by him. Is there no parallel to this in our lives? Every Christian enters the kingdom of God, not only to be a subject in it, but to share in the reign of the King. Over what are young people to rule? Over self, over sin, over bad temper, pride, envy, &c. If these are not subject to us, we are subject to them.

(2) Saul and Samuel.—By means of fellowship with Samuel, a man of God, and a successful leader, Saul had his opportunity of learning how to rule aright. He did not make good use of Samuel's teaching, but followed his own counsel more than once, until at last he felt most terribly the need of Samuel (1 Chron. x. 13, 14). God provides someone to be to us what Samuel was to Saul; parent, or teacher, or minister, or friend. Don't be impatient of instruction.

(3) The Spirit of God on Saul.—This was foretold by Samuel (x. 6), and fulfilled (10, 11). The anointing with oil was symbolic of this. It does not mean conversion, but enduement of power for the duties of his new position. The Spirit came on him. Similarly the Spirit of God comes upon those who have entered the kingdom of God. It is not by hard struggling, but by the Spirit that we overcome. We can only reign over sin and self by his power.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

FRANCE.—The Synod of the First Circuit, comprising all the congregations and mission stations of the Reformed Church of France, from Dunkirk and Boulogne as far as Sédan and Nancy, was held at Lille the first week of this month. Amongst the many important matters brought forward, after the reading of the report by the president, Pastor Ollier, the discouraging effects on the statistics of the Protestant population in consequence of mixed marriages were discussed. It was estimated that three-fourths of the marriages of Protestants are made with Roman Catholics. The result is so damaging to the Protestant cause, that several pastors have resolved to decline to perform the marriage ceremony when it has already been celebrated by the priest.

THE "PILGRIM'S PROGRESS" FOR ABYSSINIA.—Though the Crischona Mission was closed some years ago in Abyssinia, owing to the troubles that arose, the missionaries have not ceased to hope that the work will be resumed. Meantime, they have done what they could to send out such literature as was possible; and now one of their pupils, Gebra-Georges, a young man studying in Dr. Comandi's institution at Florence, has translated the "Pilgrim's Progress" into Amharic, the language of Abyssinia. The translation will be carefully revised and printed at Crischona in the native type. The Religious Tract Society is bearing half the cost, and the work will be ready in the autumn. This will make the eighty-fourth language into which Bunyan's book has been translated.

GREENLAND.—The willingness with which converted pagans assume responsibilities in connection with the work of God is illustrated by the experience of the Moravian missionary Brodbeck, in Greenland. The question of supporting the station being discussed, the office-bearers of the church agreed that it was alike necessary and possible for the natives to contribute. They were in favour of a fixed tax, and by the scale that was adopted with sincere readiness, yearly sums, ranging in value from five shillings to a sovereign of English money, were levied, according to the sex and earnings (by hunting or fishing) of the church members. On being submitted to the church, the proposal was loyally accepted, and in a few days fifty crowns (equal in value to £50) was handed in, some contributors willingly paying double tax.

NYASSALAND.—The Scotch missionaries in Nyassaland will soon have an enemy to contend with whom they may consider even more formidable than Arab slavers and Portuguese obstructionists. The country explored by Livingstone, and which has for twenty years been the almost exclusive field of work of Scotch missionaries, is about to be flooded with emissaries of Catholicism. A most imposing function was held at Algiers the other day, when, in the presence of over a hundred ecclesiastics and amid a crowd of the laity, with gorgeous processions and magnificent music (in which the Portuguese National Hymn was prominent), six missionaries were consecrated for Nyassaland. It is certainly hard on the Scotch missionaries that they should be subjected to this new trial, and it is certainly high time that the claims of Portugal to this region should be disposed of once for all one way or the other.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Book World.

A New Missionary Book.

TWO KINGS OF UGANDA. By Rev. R. P. A Sampson Low & Co. In this goodly volume have the latest chapter in the missionary hist of Central Africa. Many of the stirring event the past few years, connected with the lamen death of Bishop Hannington, and the cruel fat the brave boy martyrs of Uganda, are related their saddening, but intensely interesting det It seems to add another element of sorrow to event to know that the Bishop's death was result of a mistaken idea of his mission: K Mwanga having been persuaded that he was so how mixed up with the political action of Germans, and was to help in annexing the coun The character and career of King Mtesa and degenerate successor Mwanga are graphically p trayed, and a flood of light is thrown on the ditions of tribal, court, and social life in Afri centre; and altogether Mr. Ashe tells his story w Recent critics of Missions would do well to st this book, if only to show them that there are the heathen field courageous servants of God, are not afraid to take their lives in their hands, face the hazards of aggressive work among a c and superstitious people. The fidelity of young converts who sealed their faith with t blood, adds a fresh lustre to the annals of Ch tianity, and indicates a type of heroism that is too common in more enlightened countries.

TO THE LIONS. By Professor A. J. Chu Seeley & Co. This tale of the early Christian well fitted to take its place beside Mr. As narrative in showing what the grace of God enable his faithful disciples to do and to suffer his sake. It is told with much literary power beauty, whilst the known ability and eruditio the author are a guarantee that his picture witness-bearing in those far back times is a cor one. Though it is an old story, its lessons and spirations are for to-day. There are a numbe telling illustrations, and the book is beautifully up, as all Messrs. Seeley's books are.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THROUGH CLOUD AND SUNSHINE. By E. Sargent. Elliot Stock. These poems of the Ch tian life are not marred by any obscurities thought or diction, and keep well on the plan common experience. Cheerful and confident h is the prevailing strain in the song, though m notes are not wanting. The "Sunday-sch hymns" somewhat lack the element of simplic and are better suited for the elders.

NATURE'S SERIAL STORY, by the late Edw P. Roe (Sampson Low & Co.), is a sort of b which is far from being as common as it mi well be. Interwoven in the story are charac which are made to open up their stores of ac mulated knowledge for the benefit of the rea who is at the same time fascinated by the sim city and charm of the story itself. The boys girls who read the book will rejoice at being pleasantly kidnapped into the possession of m wholesome truths from the great open book nature.

AMID DEVONIA'S ALPS (Simpkin, Marshall & is an account of wanderings and adventures on D moor, written with the full appreciation of one candidly confesses his belief that "the lover of wild and sublime in nature, cannot possibly in our island a grander field wherein to gratify taste." Mr. Wm. Crossing, the author, constit himself an excellent and pleasant companion the tourist. He does not produce an ordin matter-of-fact guide, but something infinitely be in the shape of a chatty account of how an ar admirer of the wild moors, the weird tors, and desolate swamps, in his wanderings, makes the m of his time in his search for the most beaut and enjoyable scenery.

THE MARTYR ISLANDS OF THE NEW HEBRIDES ADJACENT GROUPS, by Robert Young, is a brief but pendious sketch in outline of missionary effort an these islands of the far south, where much Go testimony has been sealed with human blood. A lis New Hebrides living missionaries is appended. (niven & Wallace.)

DAILY THOUGHTS FOR MORNING AND EVENING little collection of meditations on Bible texts exten over a month, which has been written by two mem of the Y.W.C.A. for those of their sisters who have leisure for much reading. The literary style is im ture. The thoughts are simple, often crude, but are practical, and convey many a good lesson. (Mar Bros.)

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Hon. and Rev. E. Carr Glyn, vicar of Kensington, as established a Sunday-school for the children of the pper classes in his parish.

The Bishop of Chichester has licensed a clergyman n his diocese to give evangelistic addresses morning nd evening in a pavilion situated on a pier at one of he fashionable watering-places on the Sussex coast.

The Bishop of Manchester, in his recent visitation to he clergy of his diocese, emphatically declared that the issionary impulse is a necessary consequence of true onversion, and that wherever such an impulse exists it ust seek satisfaction. He added that there has never een a time of signal religious revival without a great utbreak of lay teaching.

The Bishop of Liverpool preached, on Sunday last, to crowded congregation at St. Mary's, Islington, from cts xxiv. 24, 25. His subject was Paul's preaching efore Felix and Drusilla. Dr. Ryle described the reacher, his hearers, the sermon, and the results, with reat power and vividness of illustration. The deepest tention was manifested by the large congregation.

An address on behalf of the hospitals, which was elivered from the lectern of the church of Farlam, umberland, by Rev. Edwin Dalton, a Primitive Metho- st minister, has been the subject of correspondence etween the Bishop of Carlisle and the vicar of the arish (Rev. C. F. Gunton). The bishop says that in his pinion a great irregularity was committed, and such a ing must not happen again. This view is, however, sputed.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. W. A. Blake, of Southport, has accepted the astorate of Upper Clapton Congregational Church, hich has been vacant since the death of Rev. H. J. amble.

Memorial stones of a new Congregational Church in ulwich Grove, S.E., were laid last Friday week. The ew building is designed to accommodate 550 persons. he pastor is Rev. H. J. Haffer.

Rev. J. Ossian Davies has been in South Wales. On nday week he preached the anniversary sermons for ichmond Church, Cardiff, and on Monday delivered his ew lecture on Robert Moffat. He also lectured last eek at Haverfordwest.

A twenty-two days' evangelistic mission was con- uded at Needham Market on Sunday week. The vangelist was Mr. H. J. Clatworthy, of Weston-super- are, who was assisted by Rev. W. H. Bradford (pastor the Congregational Church) and Rev. Samuel Fisher f London). The services were very largely attended, d it is believed much good has been done.

METHODIST.

Rev. H S. B. Yates, of Birmingham, is nominated to cceed Rev. Edward Smith in the superintendence of e Clerkenwell branch of the London Wesleyan Mis- on; Mr. Smith to Birmingham; Rev. J. H. Hopkins, Dulwich, to the charge of the new mission centre in uthwark.

On the Saturday of their Conference week, some 300 inisters and others attending the United Methodist ree Churches' Conference at Redruth held a service at and's End, during which they sang the hymn begin- ng, "Lo, on a narrow neck of land," on the very spot here it was composed by Charles Wesley.

In the Mission which they are about to commence in ondon, the Primitive Methodists are going to employ elve evangelists—men and women. The agents are t to remain long in one place, it being thought that equent change will secure freshness. Existing chapels, veral of which are poorly attended, will be utilised as llying places for the Mission.

The Council of the London Wesleyan Mission Bands' ion have decided upon a new departure. On the ugust Bank Holiday, instead of holding special ser- ces in London, they will take the town of Luton by orm. The ministers and office-bearers in the two uton Circuits have entered heartily into the proposal, d made arrangements for all the meetings.

The high spiritual fervour of the recent Primitive ethodist Conference at Bradford has been carried to any a distant centre. Mr. R. Dunn, of Belfast, has en stirring the heart of the Irish churches by an count of the interesting debates, and the quickening iritual power of the Conference. Rev. J. Gair and e friends at Sheffield are forming a "League of In- ease," to labour and pray for an increase of soul-saving rk during this year.

An interesting mission, under the superintendence of v. T. E. Brigden, has been developed by the Wesleyans Westminster, by combining aggressive and pastoral rk. By an ingenious alteration in the chapel, seats ve been retained for 1350, and a cheerful mission-hall d two inquiry-rooms added. Lay missionaries have en engaged, and various services, adapted to the needs the neighbourhood, organised. The chapel stands the border of the notorious "Devil's Acre."

The Birmingham Wesleyan Mission North (under e superintendence of Rev. J. G. Mantle) is being rried on with undiminished vigour. There are nine mpanies of workers, six or seven in each company, o hold outdoor meetings four times every week. The ople listen eagerly; the police invariably protect e workers, and the presence of God is vouchsafed in a narkable degree. Many pledges are taken in the streets d sometimes earnest seekers after Christ follow the ssion band to the chapel, to which building it always rches in full force before dispersing.

Rev. Thomas Champness has now eighty-five men and women employed as agents of the Joyful News Mission. It is hoped that the hundred may shortly be completed. The circulation of Joyful News is about 50,000 a week. Should the Wesleyan Conference, which commenced its sittings at Sheffield on Tuesday, agree to release Mr. Champness from a circuit appointment, he will be wholly dependent on the profits arising from the sale of Joyful News. He hopes that it may advance to a circulation of 100,000.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. John McNeill and his office-bearers have decided to replace the old pulpit in Regent-square Church by a platform, which will be ready and in its place when Mr. McNeill returns from his holiday at the beginning of September.

The English Presbyterian missionaries in China, after seventeen years' persistent effort, have secured an entrance into the important city of Chang-pu, and arrangements have been made for building a church there, the cost of which, about £600, is to be entirely met by Rev. A. Gregory, one of the missionaries to occupy the new station.

Mrs. Barbour, of Bonskeid, has generously offered to pay the salary of a second missionary for Singapore to assist Rev. J. A. B. Cook, who is returning thither in October, but whose health is not very good. It has also been arranged to provide an assistant for Dr. Grant, of the medical mission at Chin-chew, China, and Dr. B. L. Paton, a member of Highbury congregation, has offered his services for that work.

BAPTIST.

Twenty-eight out of thirty-four Baptist Associations have passed resolutions in favour of the amalgamation of the General and Particular Baptists.

A new chapel situated on the Forty Feet Bank—a fen district—near Chatteris, Cambs., was lately opened by Revs. J. T. Wigner (President of the Baptist Union) and T. Graham Tarn (Cambridge). The chapel will accommodate some 120 persons.

Rev. J. T. Brown, of Northampton, speaking at the annual meeting of the church at Hardingstone, lamented the looseness which makes pleasure the great thing in church life. He specially condemned the innovations frequently introduced to retain senior scholars, and urged that the whole Church needed a Puritan reformation.

At the annual meeting of the church at Melbourne Hall, Leicester, last week, all the reports showed that the work of God is still on the advance. The congregations and all branches of the work are well sustained under the ministry of the new pastor, Rev. C. B. Sawday. The church is specially interested in missionary work. A very valuable worker has gone to North Africa. The Young Men's Society in connection with the school hopes to fully support a missionary on the Congo, and a Bible-woman is being sustained amongst the zenanas in India.

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon had very large congregations, during his visit to Guernsey, the week before last, to help to consolidate and impart a stimulus to the Baptist cause started there by Rev. F. T. Snell. His visit to the island lasted only three days, and in that short space he preached no less than six times. So great was the desire of the people to hear the pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, that admission to the buildings in which he preached could only be obtained by ticket, and nine thousand applications for tickets were made. At each of the services in the large Wesleyan Chapel about 1000 persons were present, and hundreds had to be turned away.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Rev. C. A. Salmond, of Rothesay, is proposed as the pastor of South Morningside Free Church, Edinburgh.

Rev. John Knox, Baptist minister at Lochgilphead, is conducting open-air services at the pier on the Sunday evenings, in which effort he is ably seconded by earnest laymen.

The foundation-stone was laid a few days ago of the Beach Mission Church at Broughty Ferry, which is to seat 400 persons. Carried on for some years on an undenominational basis, this station came under the care of the Church of Scotland about two years ago. Rev. A. Armit has been the missionary since December, 1887.

Large numbers of persons attending Pleasance Church and Mission, Edinburgh, have of late become deeply interested in religious matters. Kitchen meetings are conducted by the workers gathered round Rev. D. M'Queen, the pastor, and many have been converted through their instrumentality. These workers go everywhere; no door is passed.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

One of the Methodist mission tents is now pitched at Banbridge, and is well attended night after night.

Mrs. Caldwell, of America, has concluded a mission in the Methodist Church in Stewartstown, co. Tyrone. Many young people have been led to Christ, and others led to seek the higher life. Mrs. Caldwell was helped by the minister, Rev. John Elliott, and the good work is going on.

By kind permission of the Major-General commanding the Curragh Brigade, an open-air temperance meeting was held in the camp the other day, under the presidency of Captain Moncrieff. Striking addresses were delivered by various speakers, and there was a large audience, representing every corps stationed at the camp.

The Wesleyans in Belfast are about to start a movement similar to the missions in London, Manchester, Birmingham, &c. Rev. R. Crawford Johnson is to be the evangelist. A new town, it is said, is added every year to Belfast. The working class population is, to a considerable extent, nominally Protestant, but multitudes go to no place of worship.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. Canon Howe, vicar of Knowle, near Birmingham. —Rev. Geo. R. Moore, Presbyterian Minister of Saintfield, Ireland, at Howth.—Mrs. McMullen, wife of Rev. Wallace McMullen, Vice-President of the Irish Methodist Conference.—Mr. Thomas Sharland, senior officebearer in Tamworth-street Wesleyan Chapel, Croydon. —At Clapham, London, Rev. C. F. Vardy, who entered the Congregational ministry in 1839.—Mr. Henry Hodge, J.P., a leading Primitive Methodist at Hull, and general missionary treasurer of the Connexion.—Rev. Miles Atkinson, for the past thirty-five years vicar of Harewood, Leeds.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The temperance party in Scotland is hotly opposed to the clause in the Local Government Bill which would hand over the proceeds of drink licences o County Councils.

Sergeant Reid, of Glasgow, the winner of the Queen's Prize at Wimbledon, and Major Pearse, of Devon, whose score was only one point less, are both total abstainers.

The National Temperance League are arranging for a congress at Birmingham in October, on the lines of that held at Liverpool in 1884. Distinguished support has already been secured.

A successful camp-meeting has been held in Hyde Park in connection with the Middlesex £1000 Mission Fund, Good Templars. Numerous telling addresses were given. A number signed the pledge.

The Ten o'Clock Closing Act (Scotland) has wrought great good, but needs to be strictly enforced. In several cases lately the magistrates have held that it was enough if drink were not sold after ten o'clock, as consumers should be allowed a reasonable time after to consume it on the premises! It is obvious this opens the door to endless evasion.

Mr. Burdett's Hospital Annual shows inexplicable discrepancies in the expenditure on alcohol in the different London Hospitals. Some spend so little and others so much that it is evident both cannot be right. If the smaller outlay produced worse results, it would prove it a mistake. But, on the contrary, as shown in the Temperance Hospital, the best results, medically and surgically, are obtainable when alcohol is dispensed with entirely.

Lord Wolseley, at a recent meeting, after congratulating Rev. J. G. Gregson upon the success of his advocacy of temperance principles amongst our army in India, said that the amount of crime in the army in India corresponded with the quantity of liquor consumed; if we wished to have soldiers who were moral and good, that wish could only be accomplished by regulations enforcing abstinence from all alcoholic liquors. We used to educate our soldiers to drink by serving round to them spirits with their rations, but that regulation had been abolished; he was glad to tell them that since its abolition drunkenness and its concomitant crime had become yearly less amongst the rank and file of the British Army.

FOREIGN.

During his visit to India, Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., established forty-four temperance societies. Every centre of population there now has one except Delhi.

In New Zealand ladies are so active in the temperance cause that they are collecting money to support an American organiser for two years in connection with the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

In the Manchester Examiner and Times' American letter it is stated that the water supply of New York is, by the Municipal Council, purposely allowed to remain impure that people may be driven to the public-houses for drink. The majority of the Council are said to be drinksellers.

The steamship Nithsdale is, says an American contemporary, loading at Charlestown, a large cargo for the west coast of Africa. It includes 1,120 packages of New England rum; 700 hogsheads already have been loaded, some tobacco, and a few barrels of flour. The paper further states that "the Liberian Government wanted the Nithsdale to carry over four missionaries, but did not furnish any passage money, so the agents refused to carry them."

The defeat of Constitutional Prohibition in Pennsylvania by more than 150,000 majority (says Rev. Joseph Cook) is one more proof that the liquor traffic is now the most dangerous political power in the republic. The whisky syndicates controlled and used the machinery of both the national political parties. The result ought to be a revolt of temperance Republicans and all honest voters from every political organisation dominated by the saloon. The subserviency of large portions of the secular press to the dram-shop oligarchy is one of the most ominous signs of the times.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

MR. GEORGE HATTON writes from 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.:—The work recently commenced among women promises to assume considerable proportions. We have secured premises at 25, Drury-lane, which we have opened as a Night Refuge for destitute women. Tickets of admission to this Shelter, by the kind permission of Mr. James Monro, C.B., Chief Commissioner of Police, will be distributed by the constables on the beat.

One of the old gin-palaces of the Seven Dials has been purchased, and will be used as a probationary home for lost women; while a third house has been taken at 32, Leighton-road, Kentish Town, N.W., where the more hopeful cases can be accommodated, and the women taught laundry work and other useful service.

During the winter my health was greatly improved, and I was able to take part in the work of the Mission; but in the spring I had a severe relapse, and was again compelled to seek rest away from home.

I most heartily thank all our subscribers for the generous and ready aid they have rendered during the past year, and feel sure that their continued sympathy will again encourage our workers in their arduous tasks.

Personalia.

Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, of Auckland has resigned his charge in that New Zealand city, and is not at present seeking another pastorate.

Ben Hogan, the well-known American evangelist, is now paying a visit to this country. He has had a very remarkable experience, and since he entered Christ's service, he has been much owned of God. We bespeak for him a hearty welcome, and many open doors of service in Great Britain.

Rev. Newman Hall celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination to the ministry on Sunday week. Referring in his sermon to the scope of preaching, he said there is a good deal too much lecturing in pulpits. He stood there to preach, and did not pretend to sit in the professor's chair and lecture. That is not the duty of the pulpit, but a perversion of the pulpit. The duty of him who occupies the pulpit is to proclaim Christ to the world.

The Late Mrs. Hayes.—The death of Mrs. Hayes, wife of the ex-President of the United States, will be regretted by those who had the moral welfare of the United States at heart. During her husband's administration Mrs. Hayes carried her religious and temperance principles into practice in regard to what may be called the State duties of the President's wife. Such an example of conscientiousness and rectitude in high places was a power for good.—Montreal Witness.

Rev. John Barton, vicar of Holy Trinity Church, Cambridge, who has had over fifteen years' experience of mission work in India, a short time since expressed his willingness to go out to Tinnevelly for eighteen months, and to place his services at the disposal of the Mission there. The committee have gladly availed themselves of his offer, and he will sail for India early in October. During his absence, Rev. J. Ireland Jones, of Ceylon, will have charge of his parish at Cambridge. Besides helping the aged Bishop Sargent in the administration of the diocese, it is hoped that Mr. Barton will be able to do much to stimulate the spiritual life of the Christian population.

Rabbi Lichenstein, according to the report of Rev. Andrew Moody to the Free Church of Scotland, sustained heavy loss through the reverses of a relative. He was obliged to quit the house in which he lived, and which he had regarded as his property. He was able to take another, however, so that his enemies had not the satisfaction of reducing him to destitution, and setting him out on the street. Some kind gifts which arrived from England, sent by friends, who were not aware of his distress, came to him in his time of need. He has borne his trials with admirable and Christian resignation. He still clings tenaciously to the idea that his testimony has greater weight because he is not baptized.

THE SABBATH IN FRANCE.—"Société Française pour l'Observation du Dimanche," recently issued a complete list of Protestant Services in Paris, also an address to the merchants and traders of France, urging them to close their manufactories and shops on Sundays, and to abstain from employing workmen or others on the Day of Rest. About 300 French traders have given their adhesion to the Society. Besides this, the Society is lending Prize Essays on the Sabbath, written by French working men. A request has been made to the Paris City Mission (whose agents all help in this good work), for a special missionary for Paris, who shall visit the shops, and ateliers of manufacturers, in order to obtain more signatures, with an engagement to abstain from the employment of all unnecessary Sunday labour.

AN ACCOUNT OF MISSIONARY SUCCESS IN FORMOSA.

PUBLISHED IN LONDON IN 1650, AND NOW REPRINTED WITH COPIOUS NOTES OF RECENT WORK IN THE ISLAND.

BY THE

Rev. WILLIAM CAMPBELL, F.R.G.S.,
English Presbyterian Mission, Taiwanfoo.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"Very interesting account of missionary enterprise."
Saturday Review.

"A very interesting and valuable contribution to the literature of issions."—British Weekly.

"It ought to possess great attraction to all friends of Protestant ission work."—Bookseller.

"The copious appendices include a long and most interesting count of Mr. Campbell's own experience of the island. The work s much of the interest of a book of travel."—Scotsman.

"Will be read with no little interest by all who are concerned in e spread of the Gospel."—Glasgow Herald.

"There is much information on the present condition of the origines of Formosa to be gathered from it, and many of the ories Mr. Campbell tells of these strange people or peoples are of ry considerable interest to the general public."
London and China Telegraph.

"There is an unostentatious charm about the style in which these o volumes are written which carries the reader from page to page th a growing sympathy for such faithful service, and any library ll be the richer by the possession of so valuable a work."
Illustrated Missionary News.

"This is a work of sterling interest. . . . The story of recent deavour is one of encouraging success, it being quite delightful read that the Formosans have now themselves undertaken ission work in the Pescadore Group. Portraits of worthies of the st and heroes of the present add to the attractiveness of this rring chapter of missionary history."—Christian.

THE CATACOMBS AT ROME:

THEIR CONTENTS AND TEACHINGS.

A Vindication of Pure and Primitive CHRISTIANITY; and an Exposure of the Corruptions of ROMANISM: Derived from the Sepulchral Remains of the EARLY CHRISTIANS at ROME.

By BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.A.S.,
Chamberlain of the City of London.

WITH MANY ILLUSTRATIONS.

Tinted Covers, 2s. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition:

Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"There is a great wealth of information in this well-condensed, well-written book. Think of 587 miles of passages in the Catacombs! How much must be there yet undiscovered! How much that is instructive, both as to ancient heathenism and early Christianity! Mr. Scott here gives materials for capital lectures which, while they would please, would also edify and impress an audience. His stories of the follies of Rome ought to be told by a thousand tongues, for they reveal not only the idolatry of Papacy, but the stupid blundering of the makers of saints, and the certifiers of their relics. The Catacombs have been a hiding place for truths as well as for martyrs; and the sermons in stones, which have been there preserved, preach very forcibly against certain of the errors of the apostate Church. Half-a-crown will bring a large return if spent upon this book, if the reader becomes a lecturer, borrowing the diagrams to illustrate his theme."—Sword and Trowel, June, 1889.

"A new edition of a deservedly popular work. It contains a very interesting description of the CATACOMBS; but a great deal beside—Chapters on Paganism, Primitive Christianity, and Romanism. Preachers will find many good 'illustrations' here."
Local Preacher's Treasury, March, 1889.

"Here is a slashing book, which leaves no need for a second stroke. The first two chapters give an unvarnished description of the utterly abandoned degradation of paganism, morally and socially, when Christ came on the scene, and also of the most horrible and brutal persecution to death of the early Christians by heathen Rome. The next chapter paints on this black ground the contrastive, fair, and lovely picture of the New Testament Christianity. In the two following chapters we have a most fascinating delineation of the Catacombs, showing that the ways and words of these primitive Christians were in perfect accord with the precepts and practices of Christ and his apostles. These sermons in stones (the monumental inscriptions in the Catacombs) are then used to prove in a relentless and unchallengeable fashion the wholesale departures from primitive Christianity by the modern Church of Rome. The verdict of the book is this—Romanism is baptized paganism. And we entirely endorse the judgment. In these days when Romanism is being stealthily spread among us, this book ought to be scattered in thousands all over the land."—Presbyterian Messenger.

TRACTS by D. L. MOODY.

Small 8vo., 16 pages. Suitable for either Giving or Lending.

The same pointed style of speech, the same "hard hitting," the same directness of appeal, will be found in these Tracts, as were so manifest in MR. MOODY'S Platform Addresses. There are very many passages in these Tractates that will make the ears tingle, and force conviction to the conscience as powerfully and as effectually as the most stirring utterances from pulpit or from platform.

LOT: A Glance at a Wasted Life.

"Lot was one of those men determined to die rich. . . There is many a man determined to be rich, even though he has to take his children into temptation."—Extract.

SMALL BOOKS by D. L. MOODY

Suitable for Giving Away, or for enclosing in Letters.

A Series of Booklets written in Mr. MOODY'S racy and idiomatic language; and pressing the truth upon the heart and consciences of men and women in a striking and powerful manner. Their wide circulation cannot fail to be productive of great and lasting good.

GOOD NEWS.

"My friends, there is one spot on earth where the fear of death, of sin, and of judgment need never trouble us; the only safe spot on earth where the sinner can stand—Calvary."

WORKS by Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

THE SHEPHERD PSALM: JUST OUT.

MEDITATIONS on the 23rd PSALM.

"The Lord is my Shepherd: I shall not want."

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

(OF REGENT'S PARK CHAPEL).

In a Pocket Volume, Cloth boards, 1s.;
Superior Edition—Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 1s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

"The Psalm of Psalms."
The Shepherd-Lord.
Pastures of Tender Grass and Waters of Rest.
"He Restoreth my Soul."
The Shepherd's Leading.
The Valley of Shadow.
Comfort through the Rod and the Staff
"The Banquet."
"Thou anointest my head with oil."
The Overflowing Cup.
The Celestial Escort.
"The House of the Lord for ever."

. . . "And all this is the Psalm before us. It is an oasis in the desert; it is a bower on a hill of arduous climbing; it is a grotto in a scorching noon; it is a sequestered arbour for calm and heavenly meditation; it is one of the most holy places in the temple of Scripture. Come hither, weary ones, restless ones, heavy-laden ones; sit down in this cool and calm resort, whilst the music of its rhythm charms away the thoughts that break your peace. How safe and blest are you, to whom the Lord is Shepherd!"

Extract from First Chapter.

"Mr. Meyer always displays the force of a vital personality in his exposition of Scripture. It is this which attracts crowds to listen to his spoken addresses; and these never lose their force by being put into print. In the unfolding of the Shepherd Psalm he tells the story of its influence upon his own heart and life, and indicates subtle beauties which may have escaped the reader's notice. . . .

"This exposition is the work of a poet; it gives the precious fruit of searching, spiritual insight, and cannot fail to bring comfort to many a troubled heart, for it assures us that there is no want to the man who lives under the shepherd-care of God. It is needless to add that the little volume is studded with gems of thought."—Christian Leader, July 11, 1889.

THE PRESENT TENSES of the BLESSED LIFE.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Cloth Boards, 1s.;
Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

"The Author has learnt the secret of living in the will of God; and he is doing his best to teach this secret to others. It is the very book to put into the hands of a humble Christian seeking a higher, calmer, and steadier life."—Irish Congregational Magazine.

14th Thousand.

CHRISTIAN LIVING.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Cloth Boards, 1s.;
Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

"Mr. Meyer writes with all the warmth of one who tastes, handles, and feels the Word of Life. In this book he stretches out a loving hand to his fellows in the Christian course, eager to help them in the pathway of holiness."—Footsteps of Truth.

ABRAHAM: or, THE OBEDIENCE OF FAITH.

6th Thousand. Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.; Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

With Nine Illustrations, Specially Engraved for this Work.

"This book is beautifully illustrated, and so tastefully bound as to be a most acceptable gift book. . . . Our teachers may learn from it how to draw out the spiritual lessons of the sacred Word."—Gospel Magazine.

"The studies in the lives and times of Biblical characters which the Rev. F. B. Meyer has from time to time issued during the last few years have been marked by great care in preparation and a suggestiveness that has made them very acceptable to preachers and teachers. This is no less true of his latest work, 'Abraham, or, The Obedience of Faith.'"—The Quiver.

"Mr. Meyer is a meditative writer, keen to observe the spiritual suggestions of Bible narratives. He works along the lines made familiar by the works of Dr. Macduff, but there are signs of wider reading, and a stronger and more independent mind. This book is beautifully illustrated, and so tastefully bound as to be a most acceptable gift book. But the contents are such that no Christian can rise from its perusal without feeling consciously strengthened in God, and inspired afresh for the godly life."

ELIJAH: and the SECRET OF HIS POWER.

With Nine Original Illustrations.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.
Presentation Edition:
Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"The lessons to be learnt from the life of this prophet are well drawn out and emphasised in the pages before us. . . . Mr. Meyer's language is clear, forcible, descriptive, and interesting; his doctrine is always pure and elevating."—The Rock.

"This is a most stimulating book. It sparkles with heavenly light, and glows with heavenly fire from beginning to end. We honestly and heartily recommend it."

Presbyterian Messenger.

ISRAEL: A PRINCE WITH GOD.

THE STORY OF JACOB RETOLD.

With full-page Illustrations of the River Jordan and Jacob's Well.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.
Presentation Edition:
Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"Exceedingly good. Not only spiritual, as everything from our brother, Mr. Meyer, would be—but also thoughtful, fresh, suggestive, and thoroughly practical."

Sword and Trowel.

"We have had considerable pleasure in reading this book on the life of Jacob. Mr. Meyer has great descriptive power. He can tell a narrative well. The subject in his hand glows with life. . . . . The volume is prettily got up, and well bound."—Baptist Messenger.

THE ENGLISH EVANGELIST.

By Rev. J. MACPHERSON.

With Life-like Portrait.

Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

Cheap Edition: Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.

"The early career of this Lancashire lad is well told; but the author naturally hastens to give an account of Henry's conversion and prompt consecration to the work of Christ. The book is brimful of interest, and abounds in telling anecdotes."—Lay Preacher.

PASTOR BLUMHARDT AND HIS WORK.

By Rev. W. GUEST,

Author of "Stephen Grellet," &c.

A descriptive account of the remarkable work of Faith Healing carried on first at Möttlingen, and subsequently at Bad Boll. With Introduction by Rev. C. H. Blumhardt. With Portrait.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s.

"This book contains some most remarkable things, it being the history of a most remarkable man, full of zeal, full of love, full of faith, full of the spirit of prayer, and living in close communion with his God: he was an immense power through the Spirit in the towns and villages of his native land. It will be read with considerable interest; and the Christian reader will be compelled to exclaim, 'What hath God wrought!'"—Baptist Messenger.

DOROTHEA TRUDEL: OR, THE PRAYER OF FAITH.

With Engraved Portrait.

Presentation Edition:

Cloth boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

"Dorothea Trüdel appears to have been a simple-minded woman, of remarkable devotedness and faith. She became deeply penetrated with the striking passage in the Epistle of James, 'The prayer of faith shall save the sick.' Led by circumstances to minister to the afflicted, she carried into practical action the settled conviction of her heart; and in hundreds of cases soul and body were alike healed without other visible means."—Record.

Presentation Edition:

Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"A handbook of Evidences of Christianity by which the author found his way out of the deep darkness of doubt into the full light of day, and found that the Bible was the Book of God and Christ the Son of God. May it help many out of Doubting Castle!"

Methodist Times.

"Too often, treatises on the Christian Evidences are so learned and scholastic that they are of use to students only. Here, however, is a book of such a plain, practical, common-sense stamp that it cannot fail to be highly popular."—Footsteps of Truth.

"Written in a clear, logical, and devout style. We hope some who are in the dark may read and be brought into light. It has the true ring of the old Gospel, and should produce lasting good on some of the young men of our congregation who are becoming bewildered by the Babel of tongues ever and anon pretending to have discovered some new thing calculated to throw suspicion and doubt on the old."—Baptist Messenger.

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CHRONIC BRONCHIAL AFFECTION AND CONGESTION OF THE LUNGS.—CASE of MISS E. A. W., of TORQUAY.

This patient consulted me last December. Of consumptive family. Had been subject to colds for years, with attacks of inflammation and congestion of the lungs. The cough at this time was exceedingly troublesome, there was heavy expectoration, mingled with blood, and causing much exhaustion, severe pains, paroxysms of short breathing, secretions unhealthy, swelling of the feet and ankles.

Advice and medicine were sent. The patient gradually improved after the first six weeks. Writing on March 12, she says:—"I am thankful I am still improving. The pains are nearly gone. Your liniment much relieves me. My cough and expectoration are less. I am hoping to get quite well." She now asks for advice upon some other matters—spasms in the stomach and faintness after eating, for which a prescription was sent her.

Writing on April 24 last, she says:—"I cannot thank you enough for the great benefit I have received from your advice and medicine. I am better and stronger than I have been for years. I thank God for having restored me to health again."

The address of this patient can only be given on private application to me.

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

WORKS by Rev. Dr. PENTECOST.

"It is well known in Boston that whenever Mr. Moody was obliged to be absent from the great assemblies or the inquiry-rooms of the Boston Tabernacle, in the winter of 1876, Dr. Pentecost was the only man who could fill the gap.

"I heard Dr. Pentecost several times in those days, and rejoiced greatly in his remarkable endowments, and their employment in the service of Biblical truth."—JOSEPH COOK.

"IN THE VOLUME OF THE BOOK:"

OR, THE PROFIT AND PLEASURE OF BIBLE STUDY.

NINTH EDITION.

With Introductions by

Revs. JOSEPH COOK and J. H. VINCENT, D.D.

Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth limp, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"This is an almost unique book; and it will, we are sure, be widely read by Bible Students. Dr. Pentecost has said and written many good things in his time; but we doubt if anything of more abiding value than this volume has yet issued from his laboratory."
Night and Day.

"We have read this work with unusual pleasure. It is full of healthy thinking. It contains a large amount of information; abounds with wise counsels; is tersely and racily written; and is certain to captivate every reader who has even the least desire to be instructed in the many matters with which, in the preparation of it, the author had to deal."—Baptist Magazine.

OUT OF EGYPT.

9th Thousand.

A SERIES OF ADDRESSES AND BIBLE READINGS ON THE EXODUS OF ISRAEL, AND ITS SPIRITUAL LESSONS.

Tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth limp, 2s. 6d.; Cloth boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"Bright and manly in utterance scriptural in teaching; enriched everywhere with suitable anecdote and apt illustration—this volume is a most welcome and practical commentary on the portion of the Word with which it deals."—British Messenger.

"Will be found full of helpful and suggestive thoughts, both for the private reader and the teacher."
Christian Progress.

"Most profitable and spiritual. We wish a large circulation to these valuable Papers; and would recommend them as a useful present to the many young Christians entering upon the Divine life—that they may be kept from the worldly spirit of the Church of God in these last days."—Footsteps of Truth.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Captain W. E. Smith, hon. sec. of the Evangelisation Society, London.

With reference to the remarkable meeting on the morning of the second day at Fernaghy, noticed in our last, a correspondent writes that one of the ministers remarked to him how very striking it was that the power so manifestly fell after the claims of the heathen were brought to the front in the great open-air gathering. Our friend adds: "I firmly believe that the Lord purposes very abundantly to answer prayer then and there made on behalf of multitudes in the uttermost parts who were then sitting in gross darkness."

Probably many who were present on that occasion will read these lines. They and others, who, though not present, recognise the hand of God as they read the report, are asked to watch with expectant faith for the answers, which will surely come. "What a blessing if beloved ministers and our many evangelists would henceforth give the heathen a fairer place, which is the place God has given them. I write this as one who has been so lacking myself. I think some feel most heartily with us on this point."

The wanton and profane quotation of Holy Writ as an easy method of raising a cheap laugh would appear to be on the increase among certain newspapers and public speakers, and it is a habit which cannot be too severely reprehended. An evening newspaper often parodies the words of Scripture in a way that must shock a large number of its readers, whilst members of Parliament, who ought to know better, are also very frequent offenders in this respect, and it is much to be regretted that their audiences should make such references possible by accepting them as a substitute for wit.

We commend to the notice of our readers the letter on p. 18, by Mrs. Fagg, entitled "The Colonies and their Vices." We are glad to see from colonial contemporaries that our outspoken brother, Mr. Henry Varley, is fearlessly fighting for the cause of Social Purity in Melbourne and other towns. Mr. Varley's lectures and writings have been the means of arousing the people of Melbourne to thought and action in regard to the degrading vices which are a scandal to the city and colony, and as a consequence of the agitation now going forward, a Bill, introduced by the Government, is before the Legislature of Victoria, similar in its provisions to the Criminal Law Amendment Act of this country. Large meetings have been held in support of this much-needed legislation, and Parliament is being strongly urged to pass a Bill with stringent provisions for the prosecution of offenders against public morality. Until Mr. Varley raised his voice upon the subject scarcely anything had been done in this direction. We trust that the fire which he has kindled will not be allowed to die out, and that his efforts will be crowned with success.

The Pope is once more holding out his oft-repeated threat of leaving Rome, where he alleges that he holds an impossible position, and, according to the Rome correspondent of The Times, the matter is exciting some attention there. It is said to have been discussed at a recent secret consistory, and preparations are, it is stated, being made in Spain for the contingency of his removal thither. It may be doubted whether such a menace is to be taken seriously, for a removal is most likely to involve the loss of what little prestige is left to him. On the other hand, however, it may be noted that Rev. James Neil, the well-known writer and speaker, in his "Palestine Re-peopled," states that in the opinion of the Jesuits the removal of the seat of apostasy to Jerusalem is the only step to revive its waning influence. He further quotes from a work written by one Abbé Michon, in which such a departure is advocated as likely to further "the grand scheme for the union of the churches." Again, the construction of the railway from Jerusalem to Jaffa, to which we lately alluded, may be destined to play an important part in the development of this phase of Eastern events.

It is somewhat noteworthy that none of the ultra-Roman Catholic countries are at all anxious to have the Pope as a resident, temporary or otherwise, should he decide upon leaving Rome. Austria has already made a strong expression of opinion in regard to the proposed departure; and the Government of the country in which it was stated that an asylum has been offered to him—Spain—has stated its refusal to entertain the idea of giving him an asylum. Altogether the attitude of these countries is anything but complimentary to the head of the Romish system, and it would seem to suggest that they have seen rather too much of it.

The struggle in Canada against the special privileges claimed and enjoyed by the Papal hierarchy in the province of Quebec is extending. The Acts which will incorporate the Jesuits are awakening vigorous opposition, and the organisation called the Equal Rights Association, is spreading in Ontario, in city, town, and hamlet. Meanwhile the Roman Catholics are combining, placing in the front official politicians, boasting that they number in Quebec two millions of persons, that they are French and not English, that they have hundreds of thousands of sympathisers in the American Republic, and that their creed is Catholicism first, and "the union of the people with the clergy." Whatever trust there may be in Romanists on this side the Atlantic, a very different sentiment is growing up on the other.

From not a few of our English pulpits protests have been made against the one-sided, worldly view of English life which alone has been presented to the Shah during his stay in this country. He has been satiated with amusements, and initiated in gambling; but he has now left our shores without having been inside either a church, a prison, or a hospital, from all three of which there was much for him to learn. The prison system in Persia is as bad as it well can be, both as to material and moral arrangements, and the sick are not cared for at all. Moreover, a great opportunity has been neglected in withholding from the Shah the knowledge of the way of salvation through Christ; and a judicious exposition of the truths of religion might have led to all-important results, and the possibility of spreading the light throughout his dominions.

But the sternest rebuke of all comes from the minister of the Mohammedan congregation in Liverpool, who in the course of his sermon pointed out that there were two great vices from which Mohammedans were singularly free: the vices of drinking and gambling. Up to the time of his visit to England, the Shah, as a faithful follower of the Prophet, had never betted. But while here the Prince of Wales had initiated him into the mysteries of that vice—a proceeding against which the minister warmly protested. No wonder that Mohammedans are not converted when such a spurious form of Christianity is set before them. We are glad to note that the Society of Friends took advantage of the Shah's visit to Bradford to present him with a copy of the Word of God.

It is a painful fact that the number of suicides in France has, during the last fifteen years, increased over fifteen per cent. The last record for twelve months records 8202 as the number for the period. The largest cause is stated to have been insanity, but it must not be overlooked that intemperance was at the root of the larger proportion of these cases. The consumption of alcohol has increased threefold in France during the last fifty years, and insanity fourfold, and a statistician has affirmed that when a man or woman takes to absinthe drinking, he or she is "sure to commit either a crime, or to destroy himself or herself."

Rev. S. A. Barnett, of St. Jude's, Whitechapel, writes to The Times, pointing out that the district in which the atrocities have taken place, in which scenes of brutality and degradation are enacted every night, is comparatively small, forming a black spot of three or four acres, in the midst of a neighbourhood which does not deserve its evil reputation. He emphasises the fact that the blame is primarily to be laid at the doors of the owners of houses, where "men and women live like beasts, where crime is protected, and where children or country people are led on to ruin." There is but too much truth in this charge. An instance of the way in which the criminal apathy of unscrupulous landlords blocks the way to improvement was furnished the other day at one of the Metropolitan police courts. The owner and occupier of a house were summoned by the sanitary inspector for overcrowding. It appeared in evidence that the tenant and his wife, a married daughter, and two children, lived and slept in one wretched dirty room, 12 ft. by 10 ft. in width, and that there were eight rooms in the house, all let out in similar tenements. No notice had been taken of previous warnings, and the magistrate very properly censured the owner, and fined him £3. But the question which suggests itself is, Why is not the law more frequently put in force against such property owners?

The Record of last week says:—

It is almost pitiful—a few years ago it might have seemed incredible—that even Convocation should have no better nor more original remedy to suggest for the growing heathenism of great cities than a return to monasticism. It is true that that august body is itself a survival of a remote, not to say a musty, antiquity, and there may be something more overpowering to the intellect than outsiders can understand in the mere fact of belonging to an assembly so utterly out of touch with modern needs and conditions. Itself a kind of ecclesiastical Rip van Winkle, it may be more easily pardoned for borrowing from dreams of its past glories solutions for the necessities of to-day. Some ghosts, surely, of mitred abbots must have wandered about the Committee-room of the Upper House when it gave its sanction to the revival of monastic orders bound by vows.

Sir Arthur Blackwood thus writes in the same journal:—"What! are we to have the land covered with monks again? God forbid. Heartily do I join in urging prayer for deliverance from such a catastrophe!" We rejoice that such protests are in harmony with our expressed views.

It has always been not a gain, but an injury, to make any Church more than Christianity. The rekindling of the fires of sectarianism in parish magazines, with strong articles against Nonconformists, is provoking the Congregationalists to issue a series of counter publications. The action of a clergyman in Kent in refusing to administer the sacrament to the wife of a surgeon, solely because she sometimes attends a Wesleyan chapel, is leading to a litigation, from which pure religion will gain nothing. There are hundreds of parishes which now are proving that religion flourishes where a common faith in Christ promotes unity, and as many where bitter sectarianism is promoting infidelity and Godlessness.

The Sunday Observance Society performed a useful and courageous action in raising their voice, at the half-yearly meeting of the London, Brighton and South Coast Railway, against the system of cheap Sunday excursions, which has latterly been very much increased, chiefly to convenience the National Sunday League. We greatly regret that this effort to preserve the sanctity of the Sabbath did not meet with more success. Much has been made in the daily journals of the supposed philanthropic desire on the part of the directors to benefit those who work hard all the week and need a change on Sunday. Yet the true policy which actuated them was, as was shown at the meeting, purely one of monetary profit. How much of the supposed "philanthropy" would exist if Sunday excursions did not "pay"?

But do not the Company's servants also "work hard all the week and need change on Sunday"? Their hours are inordinately long, and this, with Sunday work added, must render them less fresh and capable of fulfilling their duties, and is a prolific cause of accidents of various kinds. Nor can the employment of extra men at special times meet the case, for neither experienced men worn out with fatigue, nor novices untrained to the work, are fit to be entrusted with the thousands of lives which travellers commit to their care. God has laid down certain principles, the violation of which endangers the lives of the many, though it benefit the pockets of the few. This is a reversal of the often-urged plea for Sunday traffic that "the few (i.e., the employés) must be sacrificed for the sake of the many (i.e., the public)."

It is to be regretted that Lord Meath's Bill for preventing parents from recovering their children after having once consented to their adoption, unless they can satisfy the Justices that they have a legitimate claim, has been nipped in the bud. It is only too common for disreputable and unscrupulous parents to allow their children to be rescued from the streets and trained, and then claim them again, only to send them into the streets to beg or steal. The result of Dr. Barnardo's recent case proves the necessity for some such measure. The Lord Chancellor, who opposed Lord Meath's Bill, on the ground that it was ill-constructed and dangerous in principle, has undertaken to introduce a measure giving poor-law guardians power to prevent this reclaiming of children by vicious parents: but this does not go far enough: no enactment will be satisfactory which does not extend such preventive power to others besides poor-law guardians, e.g., to the managers of boys' and girls' homes.

THE YOUNG MEN OF INDIA.—Mr. David McConaughy, secretary of the Y.M.C.A. of Philadelphia, has accepted a hearty invitation to take charge of work amongst young men in the city and in the presidency of Madras. He leaves for India at the beginning of October, and, before doing so, hopes to visit the colleges and leading associations in the Eastern States. Before reaching England he has promised to spend a few days in Ireland, and then to devote himself to the work in England and Scotland of fostering missionary interests amongst young men, collegiate and others.

MR. D. C. JOSEPH'S Evangelical Mission to Israel in Jerusalem is still enjoying God's blessing in many ways. Its pressing need is the practical sympathy of more British friends, so that agencies for good may develop as opportunity affords. The report for the past two years, just issued, shows that the Gospel seed has taken root and brought forth fruit in a cheering manner. Among men and women alike good work is in progress, but through lack of support the Mission's efforts are sadly hampered. Communications for Mr. Joseph may be sent to Mr. R. Morgan, 138, Clifden-road, Clapton, London, E.

AMERICA AND CANADA.—Mr. Robert Burn gave an account of his recent trip in America and Canada, to a numerous audience, in the Lecture Hall, at 186, Aldersgate-street, on Tuesday evening last week. Some beautiful views of the cities visited were exhibited by the oxy-hydrogen light; as, also, pictures of some of the elegant American Y.M.C.A. buildings. Amidst the natural wonders Niagara, of course, bore the palm. The visit had been an occasion of unqualified enjoyment and profit. Amongst other impressions the lecturer had been much struck with the development of association work on that side of the Atlantic; with the spiritual fervour of the secretaries and workers; with the wise purposes the gymnasiums were made to subserve; with the extended interests which Association men were taking in the salvation of the young men of the world. Short addresses were also given by Mr. George Williams, who presided, and by Mr. H. B. Chamberlain, of Denver, Colorado. A collection was taken for a new Association building at Johnstown, Pennsylvania.

Dr. Barnardo's Case.

On another page we have reprinted from The Record an article on "The Queen v. Dr. Barnardo," which very fairly reviews the case, and which Dr. Barnardo commends to all who are interested in the rescue of little children. The English Churchman also deals with the matter in a like spirit.

The inconvenience to which Dr. Barnardo's Homes and similar institutions are being put by applications for the surrender of children who have been rescued from destitution or from grave moral peril, is one more manifestation of the Roman Catholic activity which is making itself felt on every hand.

In the August number of Night and Day Dr. Barnardo gives a full and succinct narrative of the circumstances before and after the reception of the child concerning whom there has been all this ado. It is quite true that the Appeal Court has confirmed the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, but with the very important and significant difference which is thus stated in the current issue of Night and Day:—

The Appeal Court confirmed the judgment of the Court below; that is, they, too, held I was in contempt because I had not produced the body of the child in Court on April 30. But, strange to say, that they held my contempt rested upon altogether different grounds. Mr. Justice Mathew had said that my return was "evasive and illusory," and he gave his reasons. The Appeal Court said in effect: "WE DO NOT BELIEVE YOUR RETURN WAS EITHER EVASIVE OR ILLUSORY. We are satisfied that you did not know that an application was going to be made to the Court for M. T., and we do not believe that you sent this child away to avoid the process of the Court and its jurisdiction. Moreover, WE BELIEVE THAT YOUR LETTERS WERE bonâ fide, and not intended to convey one meaning while professedly they conveyed another, although we think they were not the best letters to attain the object you had in view."

The law, as laid down by the Appeal Court, amounts to this:—If he had sent the child away before the mother's letter reached him, Dr. Barnardo would have been acting legally; but when once the mother had made a formal demand for the child, he had no legal right to detain her. We should have thought that the mother, having given a written agreement to Dr. Barnardo to detain the child for two years, she could not demand it before the end of that time. But it appears that the law does not recognise such an agreement as binding.

None of the institutions, of which Dr. Barnardo's is the largest in the world, could ever have existed unless there had been men and women whose love for helpless and suffering children had eaten them up. And even if in one case this zeal for other people's oppressed and imperilled little ones have led Dr. Barnardo (to whom his country owes a debt it never can repay) beyond the exact limits of a law which confessedly needs to be reconsidered, are we to play into the hands of the Romish conspiracy which seeks, not the welfare of the children, but its own aggrandisement?

We beg our readers to commit to memory the whole story, as it is told in Night and Day, and then tell it everywhere, that Christian sympathy may be drawn forth, and that these and other institutions may be sustained as they ought to be by the disciples of Him who said: "It is not the will of your Father, which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish."

The Good Tidings of the Reign of God.

II.—THE HEIR.

The trial of the usurper on the throne was in the fulness of time exhaustively complete, and the time had come for the Heir of all things to assert his claim; in the spiritual realm to deliver men from the power of darkness, and translate them into the Kingdom of the Son of his love; and in the outward realm to release his people from the Roman yoke. He had come into the world—the great mystery of godliness—God manifested in flesh. As became a King, his way was prepared by his herald and forerunner, John, who preached, "Repent; for the Kingdom of the Heavens is at hand;" and Jerusalem, and all Judea, except the Pharisees, were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins. Then Jesus also was baptized, confessing the people's sins; was declared by the Father as his beloved and well-pleasing Son, and doubly authenticated by the dove-like Spirit; by the same Spirit He was impelled into the wilderness to be tested by and to defeat the devil; was testified by John to be the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world; and then He came preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom of God, and saying: "The time is fulfilled, and the Kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye and believe the Gospel"="The Reign of God is at hand: repent ye and believe the good tidings."

The benevolent and beneficent character of God, the Great King, was made manifest by the Son of his love healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people (Matt. iv. 23; ix. 35).

Jesus sent forth the twelve and then the seventy to preach the same Good Tidings of the Reign of God, and gave them power against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease; and gave them power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy.

After his resurrection, as a King He spake to them: "All power is given unto Me in heaven and on earth. Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age." This was in perfect accord with what He had said to the four disciples on the Mount of Olives: "And these Good Tidings of the Reign shall be preached in all the world, for a testimony unto all the nations; and then shall the end come."

The Gospel of the Kingdom—the Good Tidings of the Reign of God—is the full-orbed Gospel of the Grace of God. And under whatsoever aspect it is presented, whether as the Gospel of God; the Gospel of Christ; the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God; the everlasting Gospel—it is still and always the Good Tidings of the Reign of God, as displacing the usurpation and tyranny of Satan, and as bringing in everlasting righteousness, and peace, and joy.

Only from the point of view of the Reign of God can the manifold truths of Scripture be brought into line, and harmonised; and many errors, growing out of half truths disproportionately magnified, could not co-exist with the preaching of the Kingdom of God.

If we remembered that the Kingdom is transferred to resurrection ground, and that only by being born again can we see or enter into the Kingdom of God, how could we fail to distinguish between the Fatherhood of God in Adam, and the Fatherhood of God in Christ? how could we fall into the modern error of the universal Fatherhood of God?

How could we inscribe on our banners the name of any ism, whether it derived its designation from a nation, a man, a doctrine, or a form of Church government, if we realised aright that we are ambassadors of the King, and preachers of the Good Tidings of the Glory of the blessed God?

If we remembered that "God hath chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the Kingdom which He hath promised to them that love Him," how could we have respect to the man in gay clothing, and say unto him, "Sit thou here in a good place," and say to the poor, "Stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool"?

If we thought of ourselves as in the Kingdom of our Father, how could we regard the normal Christian life as anything lower than loving loyalty and affectionate obedience?

The Kingdom of God is the only platform large enough to include Christians of all qualities and powers. "Birds of a feather flock together," and men alike in mind and thought will, by a natural law, come into association with each other; but there will be no rivalry where the purpose is the same. A thousand questions would be answered, a thousand difficulties would be solved, if the Kingdom of God, in which we all believe, were definitely understood, and the phrase, which is often so indefinitely used, were studied, until, like Calais on Queen Mary's heart, the Kingdom of God were engraved on ours.

LONDON ADULT SCHOOL UNION.

The committee of the London Adult School Union has issued an appeal to Christians of all denominations, calling for the establishment of more adult schools in the Metropolis. After referring to the very important work done by these institutions in midland and northern towns, the circular shows that the adult school may be made the link whereby working men become connected with Christian organisations. At the present time there are about twenty adult schools in London, mostly for men, with an average attendance of about 1000. The first was probably the one in Bunhill Fields, and the circumstances under which it was started are very interesting, as indicating the generous and hearty way in which the men themselves take up the work. It seems that in 1879 a few members of the Hull Adult School started a subscription to pay the expenses of two of their number to visit London, in order to start a school similar to that from which they had themselves derived so many benefits.

The schools in London are held in various districts, and among the most recent are one at Lower Sydenham and one at Stratford. The Committee has a strong conviction that adult schools are needed in all parts of London, and it invites all who are not satisfied with the present condition, religious and moral, of the working men, to visit one of the principal schools—at Bunhill Fields, Putney, Wandsworth, Penge, Regent's Park, or Croydon—with a view to establishing others. Persons desirous of further information, or willing to arrange for deputations to explain the work at public meetings, may write to the Hon. Sec. of the Union, Mr. Joseph Butler, Thornham, St. Andrew's-road, Stoke Newington, N.

The Leper Movement.

There is a great danger of our being carried away by mere sentiment over the noble heroism of the late Father Damien, and there is a danger that in our desire to perpetuate his memory we may rest satisfied with the national and philanthropic scheme of the Prince of Wales. That scheme is a noble one, and deserving of support, but it is not missionary, it seeks to do nothing for the souls of the lepers. I have often said that, of all the hopeless beings on the face of God'sfair earth, the leper, without Christ and the consolations of his Gospel, is the most hopeless; and Christians should see to it that whatever they do for the body of the suffering leper they should not neglect his soul.

The legislation for lepers on the part of the Government of India is likely considerably to increase the work of the Mission to Lepers, while the move on the part of the Prince of Wales' Committee may take from its revenue. For years Protestant missionaries have been labouring amongst the outcast lepers of India, and there is scarcely any department of missionary work which has been so singularly owned by God. This blessing continues up to the present time. In the asylum at Purulia, in sixteen and a half months after its foundation, sixty-eight baptisms have taken place; indeed, the work of God has been so very remarkable that the Local Board of the German Mission there has written home to the Mission to Lepers, requesting them to appoint a permanent native pastor for the institution.

An especially interesting feature of the work of the Mission to Lepers is that of endeavouring to save the little children from falling victims to the disease of their parents. It has been found that the parents are willing to separate from their little ones, in order to save them. The Mission to Lepers is anxious to enlarge its operations by establishing Homes for these children. In short, there is a large and increasingly interesting field of work rapidly opening up before this Society, which may be said to be as yet in its infancy.

Wellesley C. Bailey.

17, Glengyle-terrace, Edinburgh.

A GREAT TEMPERANCE FETE is to be held in Brockwall Park, Herne Hill, S.E., on Monday next (Bank Holiday). There will be numerous attractions, and public temperance meetings are to be held at three and half-past six, among the speakers announced being Mr. W. Johnston, M.P., Mr. Handel Cossham, M.P., Revs. E. L. Roxby, Canon Leigh, Walter Hobbs, A. W. Jephson, and others. The grounds will be opened at eleven o'clock, and remain open until eight. Some ten to fifteen thousand people are expected to be present, and Christian workers are invited to come and leaven the crowds with Christian leaflets, tracts &c., and to hold small quiet camp meetings.

"FLIGHTS OF BIRDS."—Amongst the prettiest and most novel of wall decorations may be classed the "flights of birds," made and sold on behalf of the "Fund for the Assistance of Ladies in reduced circumstances," under the care of Miss Smallwood, 2, Severn Villas, Bewdley. These consist of hand painted birds in attitudes of flight, cut out of stiff paper; each set contains eight pieces, at 1s. and 2s., according to size. They are well executed, and the artistic effect is very pleasing. "Flights" may be had of swallows, herons, chaffinches, and butterflies, and "groups" of owls, at 2s. each set. The "Fund" is one well worthy of support, and we hope that some of our readers will not only take the value of their money in "birds" (and very good value it is), but also interest themselves in the other branches of this well-deserving charity. Miss Smallwood will find a ready outlet for any help, pecuniary or artistic, which may be offered her on this behalf.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

Another "Keswick," to use the conventional expression, has come and gone, and is acknowledged by all to have been one of unusual power and blessing. It began at a very high pitch, and rose to the close. And this was not apparently due to the influence of any one man, but to the gracious work of the Holy Spirit, co-operating with and working through all the speakers.

The weather was certainly unfavourable: on some days something more than showery. Pastor Theodore Monod began one of his addresses by asking the people what they thought of the weather, an inquiry which was evidently felt to be capable of but one answer. But the remarkable thing at Keswick is, that weather never seems to affect the audiences; and delicate ladies, as well as invalids, will come through a very "spate," inhaling the hot damp air of the tent for days together, with no apparent detriment.

It certainly is a memorable thing to see that spacious tent crowded morning, noon, and night, with 2500 people, filling up every corner, and in most cases occupied in diligently taking notes. It is as keen an audience as a speaker might wish to address. At the announcement of a new point, hundreds of heads will be bowed over the notebooks; and, as the references are mentioned, there is the rustle of thousands of leaves, whilst the pages of the Bibles are turned. At night the tent is beautifully lighted, and, as the spectator looks down upon it from the neighbouring hills, and catches the strains of sweet hymns arising on the evening breeze, it is altogether a scene of fairy-like beauty.

The usual speakers occupied the platform, over which was a huge sounding-board, bearing on its forefront the appropriate words: "All one in Christ." The preponderance, no doubt, belonged to the evangelical party of the Church of England; but other bodies of Christians were represented, and there was nothing to distinguish the one from the other. The most perfect unanimity of feeling and action prevailed throughout. Indeed the meetings were a living fulfilment of the Lord's intercessory prayer for the unity of his Church. One of Rev. Hubert Brooke's most relished allusions in one of his memorable Bible-readings was to the absurdity of the finger-joints on one hand finding fault with those that sprang from an entirely different joint on the other. Applause is seldom, if ever, heard in the tent, but there was a very close approach to it when a well-known London layman announced as his farewell text the words: "Let us not judge one another any more." Surely it is the true way of securing a manifestation of unity to begin with the recognition of a common life. The chair was occupied at most of the meetings by the venerable president, Mr. Bowker, but his functions were performed for him by Rev. Evan Hopkins and different friends, and when he was absent, by Mr. Wilson. Much sympathy was expressed for the veteran leader, who on several occasions was very deeply overcome with uncontrollable emotion, and for Mr. Webb-Peploe, who was unable to be present. Revs. Handley Moule and Hubert Brooke added immensely to the interest and instruction of the Convention by their masterly Bible-readings and addresses, which were constantly referred to afterwards. Such men as these are of priceless worth at such a season.

The teaching has been of a very high order, carefully avoiding complicity with unscriptural perfectionism, but laying great stress on the keeping power of the Saviour; on the duty of doing his will in commonplace and ordinary duties; and on the necessity of receiving the fulness of the Holy Ghost by faith. There has been an unusual weight of testimony in respect to the indwelling and inworking of the Holy Spirit. And it was evident that many realised in this a distinct advance in their spiritual experience.

The attendance of ministers of all denominations, and especially of the clergy, was very large. As many as 250 must have met in the church on one of the mornings, at the invitation of the vicar, to hear a deeply spiritual address by Mr. Moule on the Saviour knocking at the closed door, and to partake together of the Communion. Separate meetings were also held to explain the whole movement to them, and to answer their difficulties.

Two remarkable meetings were held on behalf of missionary enterprise; one on Wednesday afternoon, to launch the new scheme for the maintenance of Keswick missionaries; and the other on Saturday morning, when brief addresses were delivered by some of the ninety-five missionaries that were present from all parts of the world, and so much money was handed in that Mr. Eugene Stock suggested that the people might have, as of old, to be restrained from giving. It is intended to commission Rev. George Grubb to go out with his nephew to heathen countries, beginning with Ceylon, with the view of quickening the religious life of missionaries themselves, though they will be largely at their own charges. Two bright and earnest young men are going out to China, to work in unevangelised districts in alliance with existing societies, though amenable for special direction from home.

The little town and the neighbouring hamlets have been crowded with Convention people, and late into the evening the streets have been filled with the sounds of Christian hymns, whilst open-air services have been held for the townsfolk in the Market-place. The very lake has been the temple of worship, as boat after boat in the intervals of the meetings has borne its living freights, expressing their gladness in hymns and spiritual songs. There is great joy in the place, and many lingered over the Lord's Day, as if unwilling to tear themselves from the scene of so many memories, and so much hallowed fellowship. Rev. H. C. G. Moule's morning sermon, in St. John's Church, to a crowded congregation, was an admirable pendant to the Conference teaching. Rev. F. B. Meyer was announced to preach in the Congregational Church, but at the morning hour that building was found quite inadequate, and, with the kind sanction of the conveners, an adjournment was made to the tent, where over a thousand people heard Mr. Meyer, and where he again preached in the evening.

The seed so liberally sown must now be rescattered broadcast over the world, by life and speech, and letter, and printed report. Who can estimate the untold blessing which must result? May these waves of holy influence spread over the great world of men and hasten the coming again of the longed-for and waited-for King of Glory.

A contemporary, in its report of the Convention, says: "The theology is of the most orthodox type in every particular, and the speakers, and the hearers, too, happily seem never to have been troubled with a single intellectual doubt or difficulty. It is a good thing, in an age like this, when unbelief is so prevalent, to come among those who know nothing, and will know nothing, of that great troubler, Doubt." Probably the clearness with which the truth is expounded is due to the fact that many of the speakers have had doubts, but have mastered them. At any rate, the multitude that attends the Convention desires something better than to follow modern theological speculations, and to indulge in doubts. These speculations are perpetually jostling out one another, and it would be a most grievous experience to have fears, after eighteen Christian centuries, about those essential truths of our religion which this Convention meets to enforce.

[From our Special Correspondent.]

My report last week told of the opening meeting on the Monday evening, when Rev. G. C. Grubb delivered a telling message to a crowded and receptive congregation. On the four succeeding days there was a steady stream of meetings from the early prayer-meeting at 7 o'clock to the after-meeting at the close of the great evening assembly. On the whole the weather has been propitious and the occasional rains have not greatly interfered with the comfort of the throngs of hearers. The spiritual blessing has been less intermittent even than the showers. From varied lips and minds, but from one fount of truth, lit up by the one Spirit, there has come a constant flow of refreshing and vivifying teaching, as to the privilege and duty of the believer with respect to life and godliness. In accordance with the Apostolic counsel for the Christian, the speakers have touched but lightly on the foundation verities; but have gone far beyond first principles to their application in daily walk and work. Some of the utterances on the first day were very searching indeed.

Leaving for the moment the more subsidiary occasions I may summarise in brief the expositions and exhortations at the general meetings in the tent.

TUESDAY'S ADDRESSES.

At eleven o'clock to-day, Mr. Robert Wilson presided, and the first speaker was

Rev. Evan H. Hopkins.

His clear and Scriptural utterances, given without any rhetorical embellishments, are always valuable, and are much appreciated. He chose for his thesis the closing words of the disciples' prayer: "Thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory." The truest life and the highest practical walk, he said, find their fitting expression in that single sentence: "Thine is the glory." But we cannot give God the glory, unless we first say from the heart, "Thine is the power." If we think that some of the power is inherent in ourselves, we shall find it impossible to ascribe all the glory to God; self-complacency will creep in. But, again, in order to say: "Thine is the power," we must be brought to see and to recognise that: "Thine is the kingdom."

The Jews having rejected their Messiah, God's visible and manifested kingdom on earth has been postponed, and we now see it as a spiritual kingdom, a kingdom in mystery. If we accept the blessings of the Gospel, we enter into the kingdom of Christ now. In a spiritual sense, the kingdom comprises the whole domain of thought, of desire, of emotion: the realm of the affections and the will: the place where our energies are put forth and our character is developed. The question for us is: Who is the King? The answer is: The one whose will is being done is King. Christ, of course, is the nominal King in every believer's heart; but is He the actual reigning Sovereign? Is Christ on the throne, or is it self? Are we making our own plans and fulfilling our own purposes? Do we say to Christ in the morning of the day: "Let thy will be done"; and do we go away and do our own will? When we really say to God: "Thine is the kingdom," self-will abdicates the throne. This self-dethronement in its beginning must be an immediate and not a gradual thing; so we must say at the very commencement of this Convention: "Come and take possession of me"; not as a formal thing, but in reality. There can be no compromise.

With the kingdom goes the power; and the stability of a government depends on the resources it has to carry its laws into effect. The Christian may have right conceptions of God's will, and yet lack the power to fulfil it. The reason of that is that self is still on the throne. If Christ ceases to occupy the throne, his power goes with Him. Self cannot conquer self. "He is able to subdue all things unto Himself." Set Him on the throne, and all enemies will be brought under his feet. "The power of the Lord was present to heal." Remember that sin is a disease. Sin in a believer paralyses all true life and effort; the most ordinary Christian work is a burden. With Christ will come the healing power. As Christ put his hand on the woman bowed down with a long-standing infirmity and healed her at once, so He will remove your deformities if you put yourselves in his hands. It is "the power of the Lord"; we cannot manufacture it. It is sovereign power, and He will not delegate it to us. But it may flow through us, and out from us to others.

As Christians we too often make a mistake, and fancy we have got a little power, and with that we would supplement Christ's power. Be sure of this, that if we think we have some of the power we will want to take some of the glory. Nothing is more hateful to God than pride in any of his believing children. Is there here any evangelist who is beginning to be intoxicated by his success in winning souls? Is there some sister in whom the pride of self is rising because of the way in which God has used her? Take care. When pride comes in, Christ goes out, and, as I said, his power goes with Him. You will soon learn your own powerlessness if you give way to pride. The Lord keep us low down, that we may have his plenitude of power, and that we may ascribe to Him all the glory.

If any have come here anxious to get power, they may first of all need to be emptied of themselves. Do not be afraid of God's searching hand. He may empty you, but He will never discourage you. He will deepen the vessel, and enlarge its capacity; and He will fill it with his own power. Then blessing will not exalt you, and you will give Him the glory that is his due.

The short address that followed was so suggestive that I send you full notes of it, revised by the speaker.

Pastor Theodore Monod

ON HEARING THE VOICE OF GOD.

We are constantly saying or singing: "O God, hearken unto us." For instance, in the hymn-book I hold in my hand, I find:—

> O help us, Lord, each hour of need,
> Thy heavenly succour give;
> Help us in thought and word and deed,
> Each hour on earth we live.

And this hymn is one of a thousand, expressing the desire that God should hear us and answer us.

I would call your attention to another prayer, a prayer that is not addressed by us to the Lord, but by the Lord to us. We oftentimes complain as though God were slow to hear and to answer us. But God complains that we are slow to hear and to answer Him.

We say: "Oh that I could find the blessing that I seek! then would I be strong; then would I conquer all my enemies; then would I be happy." Whereas God says: "Oh that my people had hearkened unto Me! Oh that Israel had walked in my ways! I should soon have subdued their enemies, and turned my hand against their adversaries." Surely you remember that passage, one of the most touching in the whole Scriptures. We read in the beginning of Ps. lxxxi.: "Sing aloud unto God our strength: make a joyful noise unto the God of Jacob. Take a psalm, and bring hither the timbrel, the pleasant harp with the psaltery. Blow up the trumpet in the new moon, in the time appointed, on our solemn feast day. For this was a statute for Israel, and a law of the God of Jacob. This he ordained in Joseph for a testimony, when he went out through the land of Egypt: where I heard a language that I understood not." Then the Psalmist makes way for God to speak: "I removed his shoulder from the burden: his hands were delivered from the pots" (you remember the grievous labour of the children of Israel in the land of Egypt; how the Egyptians made their lives bitter with hard bondage, so that all their service was "with rigour," Exod. i. 14). The Lord goes on to say: "Thou calledst in trouble, and I delivered thee." Let each one of us open his heart to the voice of God and say whether this does not answer to our own experience, our own history. "I answered thee in the secret place of thunder ...I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt: open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it." Can you imagine anything more touching, any promise more beautiful, more far reaching, more tender? "But my people would not hearken to my voice; and Israel" (not the Philistines, not the children of Ammon, but God's own people) "would none of Me. So I gave them up unto their own hearts' lust: and they walked in their own counsels."

Have you walked in your own counsels? You remember what we read in Isa. liii.: "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way" (to have one's own way is the essence of sin); "and the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all." This has been explained to you, when you were seeking for peace, and you, in turn, have been explaining it to others. And yet, after you had found peace and forgiveness, after you had been led out of the house of bondage, have you never returned to your own counsels, and tried your own paths again? It may be that, in the eyes of the world, your life was a new life. You were not occupied with the same interests; you were living on a higher plane. But in the eyes of God there was a strong similarity between your past and your present life: now, as then, you were walking in your own counsels. Perhaps you were engaged in religious work; but it was of your own devising. You did nothing except what you chose to do—what seemed to you pleasant or proper. Perhaps it even cost you a good deal of trouble, of sacrifice, of money: for all that you were not, and you knew you were not, simply seeking to know and to do the will of the Lord.

God goes on to say: "Oh that my people had hearkened unto Me, and Israel had walked in my ways! I should soon have subdued their enemies, and turned my hand against their adversaries." Just as you might see a little child trying to do some work, to lift some burden, altogether above his strength. Seeing his useless endeavour, you, his father, come to him and say: "Why did you not call me? I would soon have moved it for you, I would have done it in a moment with ease and with pleasure." Likewise that victory for which we have been struggling in vain would have been ours at once, had we but hearkened unto God and suffered Him to turn his hand against our adversaries.

Observe, whenever we return to our own counsels, then we return to bondage. We lose our inward liberty; and, instead of our subduing our enemies, we are again subdued by them, and, of course, our life becomes irksome We do not then experience that Christ's yoke is easy and that his burden is light. And why? Simply because it is no longer his yoke we are bearing, but our own. We endeavour, very likely, to find peace by attempting more work, or some other work; or we have recourse to further books and pamphlets, meetings, conventions, explanations and exhortations. Still, that does not help us; and nothing will, unless we return to God and listen to Him. "Oh that my people had hearkened unto my voice!"

He is seeking after us; He speaks to us; He has never ceased to speak to us. He speaks to us through his Word, in the Scriptures; through his Son; through his Spirit; through our own conscience; through his providence—now in joy, now in sorrow. Do we hearken to his voice? Do we answer his voice? Do we know his voice? My brethren, we must be careful. If we let God speak, and do not answer, we may become so hardened that we shall become altogether deaf; that we shall be among those of whom it is said: "They have ears and hear not." There are many who, when you speak to them of the things of God, and when God Himself speaks to them, make no reply: there is no responsive echo in their soul. They do not know what we are talking about; they are strangers to the world in which we live. Others will say they thought they had some knowledge of it years ago; but they have found out that it was all imagination—all mysticism; they have got far beyond that. In fact, they are now unable, as well as unwilling, to hear the voice of God. We must not trifle with the voice of God. It is "a still small voice"; it may also be—if it must be—a voice of thunder. But God's voice is one to which we are bound to listen and to respond.

It appears to me that, at the beginning of this Convention, it is of the utmost importance for each one of us to say to himself, not so much, "I have come here to ask for a blessing," or "to find an experience," or "to take a step forward"; but "I have come here to hearken to the voice of God." You remember the words of Christ, when sitting at a Pharisee's table: "Simon, I have somewhat to say unto thee." He now calls each one of us by name, and says: "I have somewhat to say unto thee." Perhaps it is not what we expect to hear. Perhaps some think they need a great lift, who rather need to have a great breaking down. Perhaps some think they need to be further broken down, who need to be comforted and lifted up. God knows. The question is: Are you ready to listen? Will you listen? There are so many things that can prevent us from hearing the voice of God. If we keep at a distance—if we will not draw nigh to Him, we cannot hear his voice. Then our ears may need to be unstopped. We may have become dull and hard of hearing. What then? We must come to Christ, and tell Him. Do you remember how often He healed the deaf? Let us look at one of the most remarkable instances, that of the man who was both deaf and dumb—as is usually the case. We are told in Mark vii. 32 that they brought to Christ "one who was deaf and had an impediment in his speech." He could not speak because he could not hear. So it is with a great many persons—they have never a word for God, because they do not hear the voice of God. If they heard the voice of God, it would be easy for them, when occasion offers, and God opens the way, to say a word for Him. "They beseech Him to put his hand upon him." Christ not only put his fingers into the man's ears, He also touched his tongue. "Straightway his ears were opened and the string of his tongue was loosed, and he spake plain." The people "were beyond measure astonished, saying, He hath done all things well; He maketh both the deaf to hear and the dumb to speak."

Now let us draw nigh to Him, asking Him to give us an opened ear to hear his voice. Perhaps some are prevented from hearing his voice because of there being such a noisy rumour in their inner man. It is like trying to hear the voice of a friend in the midst of the market-place. What can we do, then? Still ask Him to enable us to hear his voice. And just as soon as we hear his voice, we will cease to hear other voices. Or if they still come to us, merely as a sound or noise, they will have no interest for us. You remember why the sheep of the Lord's flock do not follow a stranger, but only their Shepherd; it is because "they know his voice; and a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him, for they know not the voice of strangers." Let us study to know God's voice; let us follow it alone; as to any other voice, let it suffice that it is not his, for us not to follow it.

This applies especially to us who may be called to take an active part in such meetings as these. I would venture to say to my fathers and brethren on this platform: What we want is simply to make the voice of God to be heard by the people. God uses us as the means of speaking to them. But what shall we say to them? How far are we acquainted with this multitude? And what a little time we have at our disposal! How shall we make our several addresses to fit in with one another, and to have an influence, not only, in a general way, for good, but directly and definitely for God? I know of only one way: if we would be speakers, we must first be hearers. We must, each one of us, ask God for his message—his personal message to our own hearts, and then for the message He would have us to deliver to the people. Then there will be one work being done in the hands of God—God speaking to each one, and sending each one with his special message. God knows the circumstances; He knows the need; He knows the heart of every one of our hearers; and if our only aim is to be his mouth-pieces, if we first say to Him: "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth," others also will hear his voice through our lips, and these meetings will be greatly blessed.

Another great crowd filled the tent in the evening, when the speakers were Rev. H. C. G. Moule and Rev. C. A. Fox.

Rev. Handley C. G. Moule

ON GOD'S TESTING.

Three passages formed the groundwork of a very calm, powerful, and well-balanced address—1 Cor. iii. 13: "The fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is"; Isa. i. 25: "I will turn my hand upon thee, and purely purge away thy dross, and take away all thy tin"; Ps. lxxxi. 14: "I should soon have subdued their enemies, and turned my hand against their adversaries." Mr. Moule reiterated Mr. Hopkins's remark that God never discourages the soul that for any real purpose comes to Him. His rebukes and chastenings of the believer are all "at home," within the safe doors which are red with the blood of sprinkling and of propitiation. As children convinced of the intention of the Father, let us listen to what He says, and welcome what He does.

In the first of these passages we have a very solemn promise and prospect for the future, which refers impartially to every one of us. Every Christian's work, that which we have built on the true foundation, is one day to be tested by fire, and made manifest of what sort it is. For each one of us, even the most devoted and most richly blessed, there shall be such a scrutiny and such a manifestation of the results of that scrutiny that it has to be imaged out by these words: "The fire shall declare of what sort it is." Let us, as Christian workers, carry this thought with us into our work, that whatever be the Lord's mercies to us, and whatever He be pleased to do through us, as sure as suns rise and set that work will be made manifest of what sort it is. This thought will take a great deal of the wind out of the sails of self-applause. And let us trust Him that in judgment He will remember mercy.

In the passage from Isaiah we have somewhat similar imagery, but in a different connection. The Lord is there speaking, in the first instance, to his ancient Zion, and, therefore, also to the true Zion, the Israel of God. And as to the community, so it is to the individual; there is a wonderful solidarity between the Church and the member. Let us, therefore, take this as a message from the all-seeing, living, and loving Lord to each one of us here who is of his true Israel: "I will turn my hand upon thee, and will purely purge away thy dross, and take away all thy tin"; or, as the Revised Version has it, somewhat more clearly, "all thine alloy." The reference is to a community or an individual that knows and belongs to God, but into whose work or service there has come something that is compared to dross or alloy in metal. The "dross" suggests to us that which is obviously repulsive, as well as being refuse; and the "alloy," or "tin," those more specious and more subtle ingredients of evil that enter into a Christian's work and life—not the lamentable inconsistencies so much as that more interior and hidden evil, of self-complacency, and self-motives, which can plainly be discovered when we use God's tests.

Here we have a double fact of deepest solemnity and of most delightful encouragement. And it is not, as in the case of the testing by fire, a prospect for the dim and mysterious future, but for the living and breathing present. It is something which may take place, and may be taking place at this hour, in the deepest and closest sense. But is there not also the most delightful encouragement in such a promise. Have we not often tried when unsuccessful in effort to turn our own hands upon ourselves in order to do this work which here God undertakes to do? We have tried to make "a clean sweep" with our own indignation and resolve against self? But here God undertakes to do it Himself, and there is something wonderfully cheering in the recollection that it is a work which God pledges Himself to be intending to do, and prepared to do. If we ask Him to do it, it is a prayer which we may be assured is in the line of his own will and purpose, and in which petition shall meet performance.

Then let us remember that it is done not only by his hand of power, but his wise and tender hand. David said, in a time of great straits, that it was better to fall into the hand of the Lord than into the hand of man; and he was right. It is for purposes of blessing that we ask for and welcome this disciplinary teaching of the Lord. What a labyrinth it is on which God's hand is to be turned, and from which the dross and the alloy is to be burned. As Christian workers, we all know the tremendous facility with which the "I" in some shape or another can come into our work; whether it be in the spiritual vanity to which success is such a fierce temptation or the spiritual mortification which is but the other side of the face of vanity to which we are tempted when we see another more successful than ourselves. Perhaps an elder Christian looks askance at the energy and buoyancy and prosperity of a younger one: while on the part of the younger there is readiness to censure and judge and criticise the elders in Christ. There is the refined and subtle species of spiritual pharisaism which says: "Let me stand by myself; for I am holier than thou." Surely we will welcome the Lord's hand upon us to purge out this dross and take away this alloy. Let us ask for this with great desire, and pray that God may increasingly teach us what are the ingredients of this alloy. If we thus humble ourselves under his mighty hand, He will exalt us in due time, with that blessed and paradoxical exaltation which will put us very much higher than we were without the teaching, though it leave us very much lower in our own eyes.

Then there is that wonderful verse in Ps. lxxxi. In a friend's Bible there is a marginal note at the last verse of this Psalm: "Read it all in the present tense." We were reminded this morning by Pastor Monod that this passage in the Psalm is the Lord's unutterable, heart-moving regret, if I may reverently use the words, over what might have been, if his people had hearkened to his voice. Shall we now spare Him that regret? Shall we say, with deep self-abasement: "Lord, Thou shalt not regret this any more in me. By thy grace, I will hearken unto thy voice; I will do thy bidding"? It is terrible to think of the thoughts that we have allowed ourselves to have about our work for God sometimes. Perhaps I am a pastor with a growing congregation; a missionary with a growing influence; an author or a teacher with growing acceptance; a visitor finding myself more welcome among the poor. And I have caught myself saying and thinking things, and putting thoughts about these things into the minds of other people, which are infinitely disgraceful in God's holy sight. I bring my work, my reputation, to be cast into the fire, and for thy hand to be unsparingly turned upon it all, that Thou mayest have thy way and thy will. If it be better for me, let me fill any little space, or no space, and be forgotten, and let others do a thousand times better the work that I thought I was necessary for. But have thy will in me, and do not have these regrets over me, O Lord, any more.

And then, may we not also humbly read the present tenses of the promise for the future: "I will turn my hand upon their adversaries, and they shall have rest and peace. Their enemies shall be driven outside the city, and the hand that was turned upon them shall be turned against the foe."

Rev. Charles A. Fox

followed with a very inspiring and striking message from the three references in the Old Testament to the Valley of Achor. In Josh. vii. 26 it is a place of sin and shame; in Isa. lxv. 10 it is a place of rest and security; in Hosea ii. 15 it is a place of song and fruitfulness.

In the narrative in Joshua, four leading principles arise out of the familiar incident. After the victory at Jericho, the host went up against Ai, a very little place, and were defeated. What was the cause? They did not obey God's command recorded in the previous chapter, to keep themselves from the accursed thing. We see here that one sin can make the whole of Israel accursed. So we learn that there is no neutral ground between the accursed thing and the consecrated thing. There is not in our lives any colourless region where we may act as we please and be outside of consecration for a season, and also out of the curse. So the thing that is harmless, nay, even good in itself — the Babylonish garment, the wedge of gold—if it be not consecrated, is accursed. Here is a danger to the Christian Church to-day. Let us search out with the candle of the Lord the accursed things which, if there were any neutral ground, would be harmless. Another important principle is this, that outward failure betrays inward unfaithfulness. This hidden sin of Achan brought about the defeat of the whole camp of Israel. How often we must have experienced the truth of this principle as Christians. We have gone out to our work as at other times, but the Lord has permitted us to fall shamefully, and we have come back a broken and emptied thing. It may have been but some little unfaithfulness that brought it about—some discourtesy, rudeness, uncharitableness, hastiness, or self-assertion; the claiming that we had done what someone else has done. Then we read in the same chapter that Joshua humbled himself after this failure at Ai. There must be humiliation before revelation. The very best and holiest of men must humble themselves, if not for their own sins, for the sins of their people. Following this there will be discovery and revelation of the evil, as it was at Ai. Another important principle is that God brings out the disobedience, in a person or in a people, that it may be seen, confessed, and put away. What happened to Achan? He and his family were stoned and burnt with fire. O Spirit of burning, come on us to-day.

In the second passage, Isa. lxv. 10, we read that "Sharon shall be a fold of flocks, and the valley of Achor a place for the herds to lie down in." The valley of sin and shame becomes the valley of rest and security: so it is in our spiritual experience. And this change is brought about by the expiatory work of the Lord Jesus Christ. A verse or two before in this chapter, we read of the cluster of the vine that was not to be destroyed, because of the blessing in it. Christ is, as it were, the whole blessed vine, with the fruits of the Spirit clustering round his holy person. Here, instead of Achan, the sinful one, being put to death, it is the Righteous One, whose sacrifice was being consumed as He exclaimed in his awful isolation: "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" Thus, while one man's disobedience brought shame and disaster on the whole of Israel, one Man's obedience hath brought deliverance and glory to the whole believing human race. And now we may lie down and rest in the green pastures and by the still waters, because He hath rescued and redeemed our souls.

After some weighty words as to the need of more of the spirit of restfulness in the Lord's work, instead of the hurry and the rushing from one place to another at railway speed, Mr. Fox passed to the third passage, Hosea ii. 15, where the Valley of Achor is given for a door of hope. He expounded the previous part of the chapter, which describes the unfaithfulness of the Church, consequent on lapses into idle and selfish habits. After setting forth all this, the Lord used the remarkable word: "Therefore I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness, and speak comfortably to her." Is it not worth belonging to such a Lord, who makes all the darkness, and the sorrow, and the shame of the past the ground of leading his people into the enjoyment of the richest favour and blessing, and of putting a new song into our mouth. Let our song and our service here be but a preparation for the song of Moses and the Lamb that we shall sing amidst the hallelujahs of heaven.

Nearly everybody remained for an after-meeting, during which Mr. Hopkins brought the audience, simply and clearly, to the testing point of decision as to whether they desired to enter into the experience of a full, continuous trust in Christ for keeping and guidance. A number indicated this desire, and they, as well as others, were earnestly commended to God in prayer. It was with very subdued and chastened feelings that the great gathering dispersed to converse or meditate on the many moving words of exhortation they had heard.

WEDNESDAY'S ADDRESSES.

Rev. Dr. Elder Cumming, of Glasgow, spoke this forenoon on "The Apostolic Benediction" (2 Cor. xiii. 26). Here there are three distinct blessings invoked from the three persons of the Trinity. They are not what might be called external gifts bestowed on us by God, but rather qualities, or parts of the Divine character, of which we are made partakers. They are, indeed, different aspects of holiness. First, there is "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ"—his own grace. We know how that was manifested in his emptying of Himself, in his becoming poor that we might be made rich. In the Christian there must be this death to self, and, of course, there is involved in it the resurrection life of Jesus. "The love of God the Father" seems to mean the indwelling in the soul of God as the God of love. When the Father is thus manifesting Himself in the believer's life, the glory of God will be his supreme object. "The communion of the Holy Ghost" does not merely mean a common thought or mode of thinking. The Greek word koinonia signifies a partnership in or with. So the Spirit, dwelling in the believer, makes him to will and to do of his good pleasure. He so fills that central portion of our being that his thoughts and motions become ours. We bring forth the fruits of the Spirit; we have the Spirit's appreciation of Christ and his insight into God's will through the Word.

There is one general condition of the reception of these blessings—our consent, acceptance, and welcome of them, and all that they involve, not knowing what it may cost us. As to the special conditions of the communion of the Holy Spirit, we may note these—thanking Him for what He has already done, yielding to his slightest touch, and accepting by faith all that He would be to us and in us. The indwelling of Christ comes in response to the opening of the believer's heart at the Saviour's knock. Then instant, absolute, utter obedience to the voice of the indwelling Saviour ensures the manifestation in us of God as the God of love.

These three great blessings do not come to all in the same order; this varies with almost every Christian. The deepening and the widening of our blessed partnership with the Spirit goes on from year to year in different ways in different men. We must not insist on any definite order, and we must not be surprised if we find it to vary. Neither do these blessings come to all in the same proportion. According as one or other of these becomes the leading feature of the life, so does the Christian's character develop. Remember that God gives us that on which we set our hearts.

Rev. W. Haslam

ON THE ASCENDED LIFE.

The speaker remarked at the outset how the teaching at Keswick had progressed without any pre-consultation from year to year on the part of the speakers and the conveners. At first it was sanctification by faith that came to the front. Then there was the doctrine of the cleansing through the blood of Christ. Now it is the resurrection life of the believer that is most largely insisted on; that our business is to realise, by the power of the Holy Ghost, our oneness with Christ, with the risen and living Saviour. As the time is getting short, the Lord is stirring up his people to work, so that the way of his coming may be prepared. Satan indeed is active, but God is also working, and giving us the glorious hope of our Master's speedy coming again. If God's love is shed abroad in our hearts, we are constrained to go and make others to be sharers in that great love. We only want all these blessings that we may become more efficient servants of Christ. I find all up and down the country, said Mr. Haslam, a longing and a panting to be wholly God's; there never was such a day as that in which we are living. Faith will soon be lost in sight; hope will one day have its full fruition; but love will go on for ever. Surely this panting desire will spread. Let our hearts be open to receive the power of God. It matters not where we work, at home or abroad. We cannot all go abroad; some must stay at home. Our young friend, Stanley Smith, was brought to God in my church before he went to Cambridge. When he went to China he gave us a parting kick because we stayed at home. I said to him: "If we had all gone abroad where would you have been?" I am young enough to go abroad, if the Lord wants me. I do not want to stay at home. Let us give ourselves entirely to Him; not like a friend of mine who had a very nice front garden, for the world to see, but whose back garden was a mass of weeds and rubbish. Too many Christians are like that. But if we are wholly God's, no matter where He sends us, He will go with us. There are three things that indicate an effectual call—first, the call to go; then the desire to go; and lastly the way prepared, so that all hindrances are removed, and we go with a glad and willing heart.

Rev. J. B. Figgis.

AN ELIM AT KESWICK.

Among the arrivals this afternoon was Rev. J. B. Figgis, who had been sojourning in the North of Scotland. He could not have been very fresh in body or in spirit after the long journey, but it had been arranged for him to speak at the evening meeting, and he took his place accordingly by the chairman's side. He chose as the text of his address Exod. xv. 27: "They came to Elim where were twelve wells of water, and threescore and ten palm trees, and they encamped there by the waters." What is Elim, he said, but another name for Keswick—with the whisper among its woods, the music of the waters, and this encampment where we are assembled. Is not this Keswick blessing an Elim—an oasis in the desert of unbelief; a spot of peace in a world of unrest? Best of all, we may carry our Keswick with us—like that rock in the wilderness, it may go with us when we go, for that Rock is Christ, and its waters are the Spirit of Christ.

This Elim was the place of palms and of wells. The palm was of unspeakable value to the Arab. He would have suffered from sunstroke many a time but for its spreading branches. He would have been famished but for its bread fruit. From its boughs he would build his tent. There is only one in the whole universe who can be likened to the palm—the Lord of life Himself, perfect in his humanity, infinite in his divinity; the sacrifice for our sin; the comforter in our sorrow; a brother born for adversity. We must not be content with any one aspect of the work of Christ, however precious or important it may seem. Are there not those before whom Christ in all his fulness has been set forth, but they have rested simply in his sacrifice, forgetting that in Him, like the palm, there is all manner of precious things. He can supply all our need, and can satisfy all our desire.

But all the palms in the world would not have made an Elim without the wells of water; just as all the wells in the world would not have made an Elim without the palms. So the spiritual enjoyment and ecstasy into which we may work ourselves would not avail without the objective truth of the facts of the life, the death, and the rising again of Jesus Christ. And all these objective truths would be of comparatively little value unless there were for us the living wells of water. In applying this, Mr. Figgis referred (as several speakers at the Convention did) to Rev. Andrew Murray's last book, "The Spirit of Christ," and the chapter on "Waiting for the Spirit." There Mr. Murray reminds us that we cannot wait for the Spirit effectually, unless we have the Spirit already within us. "To him that hath shall be given." At the same time the fact of our having the Spirit already is no reason why we should not seek and wait for more. Rivers have their dry season, but there comes now and then a "spate." The salmon waits for it, knowing that it is its only chance of getting up from the great sea into the high parts of the stream. So let us wait for more of the Spirit of Christ. Are we willing for Him to come? Are we ready for the inrush of the waters? As Mr. Spurgeon said at the last Mildmay Conference, it is a great thing to invite the Holy Ghost to make our hearts his home. We are asking One to come in who may burn the house down, for our God is a consuming fire, and anything that can burn will burn. If we are filled with this abundance of living water, what can we do better than to abide in Christ—to encamp by these twelve wells of water? We want to produce all the fruits of the Spirit; then we must "grow up" into Christ and He must grow up into us. We must not only get the blessing but keep it. Can we keep it? In the same address referred to, Mr. Spurgeon said he saw no reason why the child of God should not continue for twenty or fifty years in unclouded communion with his Lord and Saviour. Oh that it may be so with us, as we encamp by the waters of Elim.

Rev. F. B. Meyer

ON STEPPING OUT.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, referring to Matt. xiv. 22—29, called attention to the power of unconscious influence. It was when Peter saw Jesus walking that he became anxious to exchange the toiling at the oar for the apparent ease of his progress. So unhappy and disheartened believers are made to long for the new and blessed life as much by the evident joy and power beheld in others, as by anything they say.

Two questions always arise: (1) Is it true? "Lord, if it be Thou." There is an "if" in the beginning of all true faith. (2) Is it for me? "Bid me come." The very desire to come is proof enough. The birds seek not food that is not to be found in the air or on the fields. Man cannot be the sport of abortive desires. And He who permits us to yearn for victory and peace must be able to do exceeding abundantly above all, and to satisfy the longing soul. Christ always exceeds our loftiest expectations. Never can a soul want to step out into a more blessed experience but it will find the Lord beforehand with it, saying, Come. He says of us as to Nathanael: "Thou shalt see greater things than these." Life is a perpetual stepping out into new and blessed experiences at the invitation of Jesus.

But there must be a definite leaving of the boat. There is a boat for us all, our cherished plans, our efforts, our self-will, our weights, and sins. We cannot have the boat and Jesus. We must choose. The young eagle must leave its eyrie to learn to fly. The one question is: Will Jesus be as good as the boat, and better? If so, step right away. As soon as you dare this, you are caught by his outstretched hands of mercy, which take you up and bear you forward. Only reckon on his faithfulness, looking to Him and away from winds and waves.

THURSDAY'S ADDRESSES.

This forenoon the first address was by Rev. W. Haslam, whose text was "Behold I stand at the door and knock." He distinguished between this door and the one mentioned in John x., where Christ says: "I am the door." If we have entered in at that door, and are dwelling in Christ, then He comes to the door of our heart and desires to dwell in us. Christ wants admission there. When He enters in He anoints his people and gives them victory, so that they make a name for Himself. There is not much consecutive or logical thought in Mr. Haslam's addresses, but they are very rousing and fervid and stimulating.

A helpful Bible-reading by Pastor Monod, on Josh. iii., the Bible and Prayer Union chapter for the day, followed as the second address of the morning. As a previous address by the Pastor is given in our present issue, we may defer our notes of this.

In the evening a striking address was given by

Rev. F. B. Meyer

ON THE DEATH OF ABRAHAM,

from the words: "Abraham gave up the ghost, and died in a good old age: an old man and full." He preferred, he said, to dispense with the words in italics, "of years," and allow the Hebrew text to stand in its rugged strength: "Abraham died an old man and full." Let us put the question to ourselves: If I were to die to-night, could this epitaph be written on my gravestone? Is it a true description of my inner life, that it is "full." If not, why not? In Eph. iii. 19 we will find the secret of living a full life: "Filled with all the fulness of God." If it were possible for the Ephesians to be thus filled, surely it is possible for us.

By the shores of the Mediterranean I noticed the great fact that there is no tide, but one constant abiding fulness, reaching up to all the strands, and rocks, and caves around it. At the Straits of Gibraltar I ceased to wonder that the inland sea was always full, when I saw that there was a constant communication with the mighty Atlantic. So, directly any human soul understands that it may live moment by moment with every aperture of its being thrown wide open to the Spirit of God, that man cannot help being filled, as he is thus in contact with the infinite ocean of Deity.

Let us consider this as a chain of seven links, with the staple at one end reaching to the infinity of God's love, and the staple at the other end reaching to the infinity of God's power. This staple is spoken of in vv. 14, 15: "The Father...of whom every family (as the R. V. renders it) in all the earth is named." As though all love in the hearts of all fathers and of all mothers and of all children is but a borrowed spark from the great sun of the love of God. If you could put into a single receptacle all the love that ever beat in human hearts, that God had put in families, it would be, as compared with his great love, but a drop in the multitude of the ocean waves. The other staple of God's power may be found in ver. 20: "Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us." How much may a man not ask? How much more may he not think? After all, our words bear a small proportion to the greatness of our thoughts. God does abundantly more than either. Far beyond what the holiest martyr, the noblest saint, can ask for or think, God can do. With this infinite love and power, what is there to prevent us from being filled and kept full of the glorious life of the eternal God.

Notice the first link: the indwelling Spirit in the inner man (16). The Spirit is in every Christian for character, though He may not be on all Christians equally for service: He is in us, but He is continually pleading for more room. It is not that we want more of the Spirit, but that He wants more of us. He wants to fill every apartment of the soul and every department of the life—the heart life, the home life, the business life, the life of Christian service. The second link: "Strengthened with might." If the Spirit is in us, we are strong, though we may not feel strong. Samson was probably not stronger or more athletic naturally than other men. He was most likely an ordinary man, and his strength came from the Spirit of God within him. We are told that at one time he wist not that his strength had gone from him, so that he did not seem to feel his strength. If we allow the Spirit to dwell in us, we do not know how strong we are. The sign of our spiritual strength is that we feel weak. Paul gloried in his infirmities, that the power of Christ might rest on him. Those of us who are profoundly conscious of our weakness are to be congratulated; for, in proportion as we realise this, we will get supplies of God's power in the soul.

The third link is faith: "Christ dwelling in your heart by faith." Faith is receptivity—an open window, an empty hand. When this faith is buoyant, the life of Christ becomes consciously the tenant of the soul. "I am come that they might have life more abundantly." A fourth link is the mortification of the deeds of the body. If we bear about in our body the dying of the Lord Jesus, his life will work in us: "Not I, but Christ liveth in me." We must say, "Not I" to every manifestation of the self-life. If we were as merciless and unsparing critics of self as we are of others, if we showed no quarter to self, then the life of Jesus would become a permanent reality. Another link: We must be "rooted and grounded in love." We are not merely to love outwardly and ostentatiously, but in the deepest depths of our being. If we want to know something of the length and breadth and depth and height of Christ's love, we must go a long way into the wilderness after some wandering sheep; we must go down to the deepest place of degradation to find jewels for his crown, and to climb the almost inaccessible cliffs of self-sacrifice for others. Yet another link: To comprehend this love "with all saints." No one body of Christians can exhaust it. We must get together in conventions like this, so that we may help each other to different views of this wonderful truth. Love is the king of all. When it fills the heart, it opens the soul to the fulness of God. Let us let it in, and let us begin to act it out, in some little deed of kindness we might not otherwise do, but because of love to Christ. There is not one of us here who cannot live a sweet, saintly, and useful life when the glorious Son of God thus fills our soul.

Rev. G. C. Grubb

ON TWO WRONG SUPPOSITIONS,

which are to be found in the Gospels. These, he said, if entertained would destroy all the fulness of blessing that Mr. Meyer had been speaking about. The first is stated in Luke ii. 44: "They [Joseph and Mary], supposing Him [Jesus] to have been in the company, went a day's journey, and they sought Him among their kinsfolk and acquaintance. And when they found Him not, they turned back again to Jerusalem seeking Him." Learn here that it is a very great mistake to suppose that Jesus is in your company unless you verify his presence. After a graphic sketch of the anxious search of Joseph and Mary for their missing child, Jesus, the speaker proceeded to ask how it was that they so lightly lose the presence of Jesus. Perhaps, in the first place, there was a hurried departure from Jerusalem in the morning, when they started back. This had its obvious application in the neglect of morning communion with the Master because of haste. Perhaps, also, they were so busied with conversation with their kinsfolk and acquaintance. Those were stirring political times, and possibly the Lord's parents were discussing them. Is it not the case that many believers in our day are in danger of losing the presence of the Master through engrossment in politics, or in the inordinate study of the newspaper? Many a time, said Mr. Grubb, he had been pained by seeing in the houses of Christians nothing else in the way of literature but The Nineteenth Century and Punch, and the like.

The second supposition was that given in John xx. 15: "She supposing Him to be the gardener, said to Him," &c. It is a very dangerous mistake to stereotype the manifestations of the risen Christ. Mary did not understand the literality of Christ's words, just as many Christians nowadays spiritualise so much of the truth of God that is to be taken as meaning what it says. Mary was occupied with the crucified Saviour; but He wanted to reveal Himself to her as the risen Lord. Christian, one word from the risen Jesus will transform your whole being. It was the risen and ascending Christ who promised the disciples the baptism of the Holy Ghost. What are the effects that always follow that baptism?

The first is a fiery tongue. That little member that used to say sharp and cutting things against your neighbours and brothers in Christ now tells out the praises of Jesus, shows forth his salvation, and talks of his wondrous works. Another mark is a fiery love. The disciples after Pentecost were of one heart and soul, and had all things in common. They loved one another so intensely that they could not keep back from one another anything they had. Cold-hearted commentators nowadays blame the early disciples for their insane folly in getting rid of their possessions, but we dare not blame the Lord God, the Holy Ghost.

Yet another mark of this baptism is great boldness and plainness of speech in witnessing for Christ. We shall not be entertaining and expressing doubts as to the authenticity of the Scriptures, but we shall say: "I know, I feel it is true, for God has done it for me." What wonderful things are known by the man who is baptized of the Holy Ghost. Another mark is Divine wisdom. We read in Acts vi. 10: "They were not able to resist the wisdom and the spirit by which he [Stephen] spake." The church in these days is seeking for more intellectualism and superior education. It will be nothing but a huge and awful failure. Nothing but the sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God will hew the Agag of unbelief to pieces. Still another mark is joy under persecution. "They departed from the presence of the council rejoicing to be counted worthy to suffer shame for his name." And lastly they were filled with joy and with the Holy Ghost. What a wonderful thing it is to have received the baptism of the Spirit.

What were the effects on others? The first was that multitudes came together. What has brought so many to Keswick? Because it has been noised abroad throughout England that people have been transformed there, through the power of the Holy Ghost. Then a great many were converted. God loves to save souls in shoals, and He is ready to do it still. But some will mock. Brother, because your sermon is mocked at, that is no proof that you have not spoken in the power of the Holy Ghost.

THE AFTER-MEETING

that followed was perhaps the most striking of any during the Convention. Rev. E. H. Hopkins was greatly guided in its conduct, and his words were wise and appropriate. Love, he said, seeks not limits but outlets. Recurring to Mr. Meyer's remark about the Mediterranean, he said there was not only a constant inflow from the Atlantic, but there was, in an undercurrent, a constant outflow. All the lakes that have no outlets sooner or later become salt lakes. The law of perpetual freshness is in being a channel of blessing to others. If we do not confess the blessing we have got, we may probably lose it, while confession will bring us a still greater blessing. In response to successive invitations, many rose to indicate that they had experienced spiritual blessing; others that they greatly desired such a blessing; also, many workers stood to express their desire for further endowment of Holy Ghost power for service.

Considerations of space compel us to postpone our notes of the Friday addresses, and of the Bible-readings, as well as some account of the many subsidiary gatherings. We subjoin, however, a brief report of the remarkable on the evening of Wednesday.

The reproach that these Christian conventions have had in them too much of the self-regarding element is being fast rolled away at Keswick, at any rate. The two outstanding landmarks, so to speak, of the Convention this year were the two great missionary gatherings on Wednesday and Saturday. On the afternoon of the former day the great canvas marquee was crammed from side to side with an eager company, which, for the time, forgot about self and home and fatherland, and fixed its gaze on the spreading wastes of heathendom that are yet, in this late day of the Christian era, lying in the grip of the wicked one.

THE KESWICK MISSION FUND.

Mr. Robert Wilson, who presided, made the following statement:—

"The fund raised last year for the Keswick Mission amounted to a little over £900. The best mode of carrying out the work has had most prayerful attention on the part of many connected with the Convention. It was thought that much good would result from a visitation of existing mission stations, and an effort to promote the advance in spiritual life of those in connection with them, on undenominational lines. Our brother, Rev. George C. Grubb, has accepted the office of missioner, and is expecting to set out, with another Christian brother, for Ceylon in the middle of October. They will, we trust, be sent forth by the Spirit of God, and guided as to further fields of service for the Master. Other places want his aid, and are ready warmly to welcome him.

"Considerable attention has been given to an extension of an existing mission near Acre, in Palestine, but the valued lady who volunteered for this post has since been provided for at her father's expense, so she does not need pecuniary aid from the Keswick Fund, though she goes out in full sympathy with the Convention. This change has been too recent to allow of further definite steps being taken as yet in this direction. While it alters the proposal, it has added a valuable worker to the mission field in Palestine, and stimulated further effort.

"The subject of a pioneer mission in China, in districts not yet evangelised, has had much attention, the desire being rather to send out evangelists two and two to proclaim the Gospel than to establish fresh mission stations and churches. We think this will be in conformity with the constitution of the Keswick Convention, and would, in great measure, provide a lay agency on undenominational lines. The converts would be advised to connect themselves with the nearest existing mission station of an evangelical character. This is the apparent present leading of the Spirit of God; though your representatives do not wish in any way to bind themselves, but to be able as the work proceeds to follow his guiding hand. Mr. Millard, who has had considerable experience in China, has offered himself, and will be ready, God willing, to go out, with a true-hearted brother, to commence this evangelistic mission early in October.

"The fields are very wide and white to harvest, and we see no reason why such an organisation should not be indefinitely increased in China or other countries, so far as the funds provided will warrant it. We would say, in conclusion, that we have but one desire—to follow the Master's teaching, and to work in perfect harmony and sympathy with all existing evangelical missions."

Mr. Wilson called on Rev. G. C. Grubb to supplement his statement with some further remarks. In doing so, Mr. Grubb explained that Mr. Bowker had, some months ago, asked him to undertake this visitation work as a missioner from the Keswick Convention. After much prayer and consideration, he accepted the proposal. Since then, however, he had received two sums of £50 each, and one of £60 towards this work, and he was led to feel that he must go out, looking to God, through his servants, for the needed support, and that he would not be a burden on the Keswick Fund. As a companion he would probably have his nephew, Mr. Oswald Richardson. He earnestly entreated the prayers of the Keswick Convention for this superhuman work. They desired to go forth in the spirit of burning love to all sections of the Church of God, and would take care that Mr. Bowker and Mr. Wilson should be fully informed of any tokens of encouragement that God would give. They hoped to start in October, and first to visit Ceylon, afterwards going to New Zealand and other countries, as God would guide them. He said they had already received more invitations than they could probably accept during the term of their natural life. Then Mr. Grubb gave a burning exhortation to zeal for Christ and his heathen, based on the story of the woman pouring the precious ointment from the alabaster box.

He was followed by Mr. Millard, a young man of excellent parts and most fervid spirit. He launched at once into an intensely earnest and telling appeal on behalf of the millions who are sitting in heathen darkness, while we at Keswick and in Great Britain are revelling in the full blaze of Gospel light and privilege. His words were especially directed to parents who are withholding their sons and daughters from blessed and honoured service as missionaries. He pointed out how they did not object to the breaking of the alabaster box—the scattering of their precious children—if they were going abroad to gain wealth, or fame, or a good position. Surely as Christians they could not refrain from gladly giving of their best for his service. He bore very emphatic personal testimony to the keeping power of God in the midst of heathen and evil surroundings, and told how he had been manifestly led of God to devote himself as a lay worker to this work which had been laid before him by Mr. Bowker.

Rev. R. W. Stewart, of Foo Chow, gave vent in prayer to the feelings of the meeting, that had been roused to a high pitch of interest by Mr. Millard's words. Then a young friend on the platform, who is probably going abroad as a missionary, spoke briefly; after which Dr. Grattan Guinness again prayed.

Mr. Eugene Stock said there were upwards of ninety missionaries present at Keswick, an unprecedented thing in the annals of the Convention. As there was no time for these to speak, it was deemed best that their names should be read to the meeting. This Mr. Stock proceeded to do, so far as those present were connected with Church Missionary and kindred Societies. As the names were read out, each person stood up.

EURASIAN CHILDREN IN JAPAN.

Dear Sir,—Please accept my thanks for the kindness you have shown in publishing my letter on behalf of the Eurasian children of Japan, and for the excellent woodcut which drew attention to it.

We have hitherto failed to rescue the poor "doomed" child, but a lady missionary, who has been working for us in the matter, is still holding on tenaciously to the hope that by and by we may succeed. It is entirely in her hands, so far as we are concerned.

I hope our plea for these little ones will be largely responded to.—Yours sincerely, (Rev.) Francis Staniland.

THE GERMAN BIBLE.—The Committee for the Revision of Luther's Translation of the Bible has reassembled at Halle, to continue its important work. In the autumn it will report upon the book of Job to the general conference. Hence it will be seen that the theologians several years ago charged with this delicate task are only advancing with a wise slowness.

DEACONESS WORK ON THE CONTINENT.—Under the auspices of the well-known Kaiserswerth deaconess organisation, workers are maintained in 2200 stations. A few days ago, at the annual meeting of the Institute of Deaconesses at Paris, it was stated that the workers last year exceeded sixty in number. At Saint-Loup, canton Vaud, four more deaconesses have been set apart. The Continental churches are realising in an increasing degree the great importance of the work, and a steady supply of recruits is regarded as one of the pressing needs of the day.

THE REFORMED CHURCH OF PARIS, as is well known, includes an "advanced" or "liberal" party, with whom soundness of doctrinal teaching is a matter of comparative indifference. For some time weakness has been apparent in the ranks of this section, and the influence of the evangelicals has been correspondingly increasing. That "liberalism" in religion has but a small hold upon French Protestants is shown by the fact that the funds of the party showed, at the close of last year, a deficit of 29,900 francs, which had to be raised by a few wealthy adherents.

XIX.—THE CROWN OF PEACE.

I was pressed in spirit one morning to go to a certain cottage. At the time this impulse came to me, I was much engaged and interested in a profitable book I was reading. Besides this, I thought this call could not be of God, for the young woman who lived in that place was a determined opposer of the truth. At times she was rude, and even violent towards those who professed to believe it; particularly since her husband had been converted.

However, the pressure was so urgent that I could not attend to my book any longer. I therefore put on my hat and set off for the cottage. On my way there I thought to myself: There must be some reason for all this woman's opposition. Yet I felt somewhat hopeless as to my errand; for she had said so often: "The like of you ain't a-going to convert me."

I found her at home, sitting by the fire, with some needlework in her hands. "Good morning," I said, pleasantly; "you are settled to work, I see."

"Yes," she answered, without asking me to be seated; "and I have a lot more to do besides this."

I asked her whether she was at the meeting the previous evening.

"Yes," she said, "I was there; but I don't go a bit with that there singing, and praying, and all that."

"Is it not well to see people happy and rejoicing?" I asked.

"I do not belave them, I tell you," she answered. "I knows them better than you do."

I said: "If you know better than we do, you should do better, and show us how to improve ourselves." As the conversation went on, she became short and uneasy, and began to poke the fire, and to sweep the hearth. She made such a noise with her violent efforts that I was obliged to wait. Besides this, the dust she raised was making me sneeze.

"Do sit down," I said, as I stood by, "you have done up the hearth very well." She sat down, but began at once to rock the cradle vigorously. I quietly suggested that the baby was asleep, and did not need rocking.

"I don't care for any more talk," she said; "I've had enough of that." This was very evident; but, nevertheless, I persevered, and said: "Did you hear your husband praying last night in the meeting? He prayed for you, if I remember right; and didn't you hear him sing? The Lord has given you a new husband. Now, is it not better for you to go to heaven with him than to go to hell by yourself? He is not going that way at all."

"Oh," she answered, "I knows him well enough. That fit won't last long, I tell you."

"Then," I said, "if that is likely to be the case, there is the greater reason why you should give your heart to God, that you may help him to hold on his way. It is a blessed thing to be on the way to heaven."

Turning round, I observed an elderly woman sitting by the window, a silent listener to the conversation which had taken place. Speaking to her, I said: "Is not that true—it is a blessed thing to be on the way to heaven?"

"Oh, she's no good," said the younger woman, "she ain't going that way. She's a backslider, she is."

"Is that so?" I asked.

"Yes," she replied, "I was happy once; but it is all gone."

"How long were you happy?" I inquired.

"For more than three years; and then I fell into sin, and I have been very miserable ever since."

"Why did you not ask the Lord to forgive you when you fell?"

"That's no use," she said. "I've got a bad habit, and I can't get clear of it anyhow."

"If that is the case, you ought to ask the Lord not only to forgive you your sin, but to deliver you from that bad habit."

"No, sir; it's no use, He won't do it—it cannot be," she said with much emotion.

"Then," I continued, "do you mean to die like that?"

"No," she replied, "I hope not; but I cannot help myself at all."

"Were you at the meeting last night?"

"Yes, I was," she answered; "I like to go to such places, though I never gets any good. I was fine and glad though to hear my boy, Richard, break out in prayer last night, that I was."

"Did you hear him and us all singing?—

Though we're sinners, every one,
Jesus died;
And though our crown of peace is gone,
Jesus died.

You know from experience that Jesus died for sinners, and have found the first line true. Why not go to Him again, and you will find the second line true also? 'Our crown of peace is gone,' that is for backsliders like you; for sinners have no crown of peace. You know you had it once. The remedy for it is the same as the remedy for sinners. 'Jesus died.' 'It is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners'—whether they be saved or unsaved sinners. He can save, and He alone. If you have found Him once, you will find Him again willing and ready as ever.

Though we're sinners, every one,
Jesus died;
And though our crown of peace is gone,
Jesus died.
We may be washed from every stain,
We may be crowned with peace again,
And in that land of pleasure reign:
Jesus died.

"Come," I said, "let us sing this verse." We sang it, and sang it again. Then the elderly woman went down on her knees, and began to beg the Lord to restore her soul, and save her from her backsliding.

"Yes," I said, "the Lord can do that, and He can deliver you from your bad habit, whatever it is, and keep you in the future."

After a little more prayer and thanksgiving, she rose up from her knees, and said: "The Lord has healed my soul. I believe He will keep me, praise God! To think of all the years I have been in darkness and misery, and now the Lord has brought me out. Hallelujah!"

She did rejoice, and so did I. While we were thus engaged, I looked behind me, and there was her daughter-in-law on her knees, with her face buried in her hands.

I immediately went and knelt by her side, and, speaking kindly, asked her if I should pray with her. As she did not refuse, or resist as at other times, I prayed, and then asked her to speak in prayer, that I might see where she was.

It came out that she was very unhappy, that her Dick was "going off to heaven," and leaving her behind.

I said: "I am sure he would like you to come along with him to heaven. Come away, it is better for you to come with him than for him to be lost with you. You would not like him to be lost, would you? Come, yield yourself to God. He cannot save you until you do that—that is all He is waiting for."

"I do give up," she said, bursting into tears. "O Lord, save me. Oh my, how miserable I have been—I did not know what to do. I prayed the Lord to send someone, and when I saw you coming I thought: Here is the answer; and yet I behaved that rude to you. O Lord, save me!"

"Amen and amen," I said, "I am sure He will."

The Lord did save her that morning, and her husband's prayer was answered—for himself, his wife, and his mother also. From this time all these three went forward on their way rejoicing, cheering and encouraging one another.

I returned home, wondering at the way of the Lord, and thanking Him for using me. I could not help adding: "Lord, do not mind my reluctance to leave my book or any other employment, when Thou hast a work for me to do. Constrain and compel me to obey Thee, for that is my will in the matter."

I went despairing of one, and the Lord gave me two souls that morning!

If I had exercised more faith, I might have remembered Richard's prayer in the meeting the night before, and gone away in good faith. After this time I ever had a warmer and a better welcome in that house, and a chair placed for me to sit upon.

AUSTRALIA'S BLACKS.

Dear Sir,—As here in the Australian wilds I come into contact with the wants and woes of the unfortunate aborigines, I feel constrained to plead for them through your columns. Since I returned from the old country in 1885, many and varied have been my experiences as a missionary. The wrongs, the cruelties, the injustice, I have witnessed in relation to the poor blacks during the past three years make up the saddest page of my own history in this great southern land. But I am thankful to say the clouds are lifting, and a far brighter day is in store for the misunderstood and oppressed black of Australia. A comprehensive enactment for their proper treatment has been secured in the great western colony, where such infamous deeds were until recently done without blush or shame. The Imperial Government in granting responsible Government to that colony has done so on the condition that the control of the black population shall rest, not with the colonist, but with the Imperial authorities. This is as it should be.

At present I am in charge of the extensive Temora district, in which many of the poor waifs and strays of black humanity are still to be found. During my sojourn in these parts I have, with God's blessing, done a good deal towards alleviating the black fellows' sorrows. In November and December of last year I journeyed on the Darling and Culgoa rivers, distant in the interior from Sydney between five and six hundred miles. The poor uncared-for beings I gathered together, and travelled with them on foot scores of miles in the scorching heat, which at times registered 121 degrees in the shade. At Quantambone, on the Barwan river, I formed them into a school, where they are at present receiving both secular and spiritual instruction.

Since the beginning of the present year I have been labouring in this south-western portion of the colony, and already, in addition to my work amongst the white settlers, I have been enabled so to influence the Government that they have appointed one of my former assistants at Warangesda to the dual post of teacher and farm manager at the Brungle encampment, where many aborigines are congregated. At present I am striving hard to build a permanent home on a good site of land recently secured for the purpose. In connection with the home it is my earnest intention to establish an aboriginal orphanage, into which may be gathered many of the dark-skinned children of New South Wales, of whom there are no less than 3300, and out of that number only 400 are properly cared for.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Matthews, two most sincere and devoted missionaries amongst the Australian blacks for fifteen years, are now, I trust, pleading black Australia's needs before English audiences. It is my sincere hope and prayer that their advocacy may meet with a response in every way commensurate with the greatness of the object for which they live and labour, viz., the salvation of Australia's heathen.

—Yours in faith and service,

John B. Gribble, Missionary.

MRS. SUSANNA MEREDITH,

The Friend of Female Prisoners.

IF the deeds of men live after them, we may reasonably suppose that a similar fate follows the actions of a good woman. Certainly the noble deeds and gracious spirit of that saintly woman, Elizabeth Fry, still survive in Mrs. Meredith, the prisoner's friend, who, for many years past, has figured in the religious and social world as one of England's truest and most practical philanthropists. In the wretched homes of many poor working women this earnest and faithful follower in the footsteps of Christ is loved and respected with an intensity which might well be envied by many Christian people who are more well-to-do than loyal to their Lord. To rescue the perishing, care for the outcasts of society, and minister to the criminal and the degraded, requires a degree of self-abnegation of which not many persons seem capable. Fortunately, there are always a few brave and true-hearted souls ready to abandon comfort and luxury for the sake of others, and willing to face all the discomforts and dangers of life among the most depraved and abandoned of humanity. Amongst these we may fairly include the subject of our sketch, who for so many years has lived and laboured in the slums of London, caring for those of her sisters who have so graduated in sin as to find themselves at last inside a prison cell.

When it is remembered that the prison authorities state that the general character of the female offenders is much worse than that of the men, some idea may be gathered of the awful need for thorough and sympathetic work on the part of such a woman as Mrs. Meredith. Scarcely a day passes in the Metropolis without numerous committals of women on various charges. Truly there is a tremendous need for deep, solid, and earnest work, among the poor, tempted women of our large cities, and right heartily do we thank God for the noble efforts of Mrs. Meredith and her co-workers.

(From Photograph by Mr. W. Davey, 10, James-street, Harrogate.)

Susanna Meredith was born in Ireland, and appears to have imbibed the spirit of Christian philanthropy in the days of her childhood. Brought up among those whose hearts were stirred by the sufferings and trials of female prisoners, her earliest recollections are of visits to prison-yards, and Bible-readings in prison cells. The sympathies thus created by the hard, degraded faces of the women in prison, grew with her girlhood; and, on arriving at womanhood, she was filled with an intense yearning for these unhappy outcasts of society, which manifested itself in unceasing efforts for their welfare. A happy married life being suddenly cut short by the early death of her husband, Mrs. Meredith, instead of giving way to a sorrowful inertia, sought to assuage her grief by self-sacrifice, the only true antidote to sorrow. So she determined to devote her life's energies to endeavours on behalf of the criminals of her sex.

About the same time another beneficent woman, Mary Carpenter, was enlisting interest in the condition of prisons by drawing attention to the state of Wandsworth Prison, in which women sentenced to penal servitude for periods of three years and upwards were incarcerated. Mrs. Meredith readily assisted her fellow-worker in a common cause, and delivered an earnest and practical speech at the Social Science Congress of 1860, on the sad state of affairs among English prisoners. Pursuing her labours, she at last obtained full permission from the Director-General of the English Convict Prisons to visit the inmates at the gaols already referred to, and every facility was afforded her to help them on their discharge. This relaxation of official regulations was hailed with considerable satisfaction by Mrs. Meredith, who regarded her admission to prisons as the most important opening ever given by the authorities for the benefit of this class of criminals. Free intercourse with them in their cells, at their work, on sick-beds, and even during periods of severe punishment, enabled Mrs. Meredith practically to study the minds and hearts of the poor women, and to learn by experience how best to win back the wayward, soften the hearts of the stubborn, and assist the weak and the tempted.

Every morning, for some years, Mrs. Meredith journeyed from her home in Bayswater to visit and comfort those in prison. Increasingly convinced, by what she daily saw and heard, of the necessity for more definite work, she at last decided to open a sort of refuge for released prisoners, and she accordingly rented two houses adjoining her own residence, which were immediately opened, and the unfortunate female gaol-birds were cordially invited to seek the friendly assistance of a Home. Certain of a welcome, and attracted by a kind word, the women eagerly made for Bayswater on their discharge, and the new refuge speedily became so crowded that the police, who were highly shocked at the invasion of so respectable a neighbourhood by ex-convicts, promptly ordered Mrs. Meredith to "move on." New premises were therefore obtained amidst more "congenial" surroundings on the Surrey side of the Thames, and the now well-known Prison Mission was established at Nine Elms House, which, with the sanction of the Home Office, became the "Discharged Prisoners' Aid," in connection with Her Majesty's convict prisons. Commenced, like many other noble offshoots of Christianity, in a small way, the Prison Mission is now one of the most successful and widely known Christian missions in the kingdom. As her "family" increased, Mrs. Meredith found it necessary to seek the co-operation of others willing to devote their lives to the work of reclamation. The first to volunteer was her sister, Miss Lloyd, who was speedily followed by other ladies; and to-day quite an army of devoted Christian women are spending their lives in the service of London's outcasts. The enthusiasm for work, and the loving sympathy for the weak and the erring, which have characterised Mrs. Meredith during her superintendence, have indeed been contagious. No matter how difficult and painful the obstacles to be surmounted, the prison-gate workers have bravely overcome them; in face of appalling facts, and in spite of all manner of hindrances, they have plodded steadily on, taking the poor creatures one by one, and winning them to a nobler and better life by means of loving and simple preaching of that Gospel which alone can save the lost.

Of a thoroughly practical nature, Mrs. Meredith has throughout her life-work adopted common-sense methods. Believing that sloth is the mother of crime, she has steadily sought to wean the gaol women from their evil ways by inculcating industrious habits. She therefore formed district working classes for women who had spent short terms in prison; next she opened the steam laundry, which gives honest, wholesome, and profitable labour to as many as fifty-six women a day. Others are encouraged to learn needlework, consisting of hassocks, kneelers, bedroom slippers, and ordinary plain work. During last year no fewer than 2508 women were invited to and accepted breakfast at Mercy House; at the laundry 53,928 articles were washed for the sick poor, who have neither space nor appliances to wash in comfort at home, and who gratefully pay the small fee charged, the laundry women receiving a shilling a day, with dinner and tea, and provision for breakfast. Every day three simple services are held at the Mission, Clapham-road, and during dinner a lady reads some pleasant and instructive book. Space will not permit of a detailed description of the many phases of the splendid work instituted under Mrs. Meredith's active guidance. After some years of untiring labour and admirable organisation, the Prison Mission machinery, in addition to the Laundry and Prison Gate Mission, consists of the Princess Mary Village Homes, with the Correctional School for Girls, the Women's Missionary Institute, the Women's Medical Mission for Women and Children, the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, well known to many of our readers as a centre of spiritual activity, and where for six years an annual Conference for the study of Prophetic Scripture has been held, and the Women's Educational Union, with its High School at Byfleet, where an advanced education is combined with religious training. In addition to these, Mrs. Meredith has inaugurated the Christian Women's Union, in which ladies meet to discuss difficulties, and further their work amongst female prisoners. In Open Doors, published monthly, some account is given of the progress of the various agencies.

Not until the glorious reckoning on the Great Day, when Christ Jesus shall claim his own, will it be known how widespread and far-reaching have been the labours of this devoted servant of the Lord. Nurtured in luxury and ease, she willingly gave up all for Him who gave Himself for the world, gladly electing to throw in her lot with the world's unfortunates only that she might win jewels for an eternal crown. Only those who have laboured and lived in the slums, only those who have moved through life in the midst of suffering helplessness, and fought the well-nigh hopeless fight with disease, degradation, and sin, can form an adequate conception of such a work as that which is being achieved by Mrs. Meredith and her co-workers, who in rescuing the perishing have proved again and again that love is stronger than sin, and that the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ is sufficient for the worst of humanity. In such a work the prisoner's friend has learnt that

> It is perfect service rendered, duties done,
> In charity, soft speech, and stainless days:
> These riches shall not fade away in life,
> Nor any death dispraise.

THE COLONIES AND THEIR VICES.

Dear Sir,—I have been deeply interested in the continued efforts of The Christian to keep before the notice of the Anglo-Saxon race the fearful curse that opium has proved on those nations which have had it forced upon them. England sowed that seed, to reap a deadly harvest, the beginning of which is spreading rapidly in Melbourne. Apart from philanthropic effort, not one finger is being raised to stop it.

Having returned from a six weeks' visit to Melbourne and Sydney, I write what I have witnessed. One midnight, in company with two godly men, one a clergyman of the Church of England, the other a minister of a Baptist community, we entered dwelling after dwelling, and, almost without exception, in every house the opium was being smoked, until the lanes and alleys were filled with the fumes. Young English girls were everywhere, and nothing would induce them to leave those haunts. But sadder still was the sight of our young clerks and mechanics, learning to smoke, and becoming habitués; and they argued that opium smoking was better than drink, for it made them kinder and better men. How my mother's heart did ache for them, and how I longed to picture to them the fearful miseries I had witnessed in China, by those who had become victims to the use of the drug.

On we went, into cookshops, gambling-houses, and lodging-houses, until, sick at heart, I begged to go away. The saddest sight among the women was that of a young girl of twenty-one, who had been smoking opium for five years, and was a perfect wreck through it. We had not left this street of horrors before a young man came to tell of three little girls being ruined.

I inquired of some of the Christian Chinese about the opium question, and they detest the drug as much as we do, and are trying their utmost to stop it. Before leaving Melbourne I should like to add that the garb of these Europeans using these dens betoken men of good position in many instances.

When I arrived in Sydney I found matters worse, and opium smoking largely indulged in, one woman consuming as much as 10s. worth in a day.

But the traffic in young girls is terrible. I was asked to visit a poor woman, very ill, with a sad, sad story. I can only give the bare facts. She was a widow with two children, a son and daughter, the daughter was a simple girl. One day her mother said, "I wish you were able to go to service." "I can," she answered. "I saw two advertisements, I'll go and see after them." And on July 20, 1888, at half-past five on a Friday evening she went out. Her mother ran out to stop her, but she had gone out of sight; she did not return. On the following Monday information was laid, and the mother searched everywhere, and put inquiries in all the newspapers under the "missing" column. Night after night did that mother search brothels, parks, &c. The scenes she witnessed at midnight would make one's heart almost cease to beat to think of. The treatment of little girls, as portrayed in "Modern Babylon," was only equalled in many cases.

She went to the neighbouring colonies searching in every possible place. For ten long months that poor mother searched until May 1, 1889, she again advertised, and this time the advertisement was answered to the effect that the girl named was lying dead in a certain hospital, and would be buried by ten o'clock the next morning. I must draw a veil over what the broken-hearted mother saw. The girl was buried, and then the police found out where she had been.

A young man confessed to having found her and taken her to his home, where lived his father and brother! The bundle of clothing, rather, dirty rags, given the mother as the sole remains of her lost and only daughter, I examined, and the thought of the sight makes me sick now.

Only in this week's paper another case of a girl, answering an advertisement and being most brutally handled, is before us. And yet people will send their sons and daughters to these colonies without securing any friend to receive them or look after them.

I must not trespass longer on your space, but just to add, Do go on, and agitate, and agitate, until England shall stop the growth of opium in India. Stop deriving a revenue from her people's ruin, and set a good example to these fast-growing, but young colonies.

A Chinese gentleman has written a telling tract on the opium question. Anyone can obtain a copy by writing to Mr. Quong Tart, King-street Arcade, Sydney, N.S.W. I think the price is 6d.—Yours truly, M. Fagg.

THE LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY, after a protracted interval, has heard from two of their missionaries on Kavala Island, Lake Tanganyika, Central Africa. These are Dr. Mather and Mr. Alex. Carson. The latter states, among other things, that "we have much cause to be thankful for the peace and comfort in which we live here, in what seems to be a time of trouble to those near the coast."

THE ART OF SELF-DEFENCE.—"Have you ever studied the art of self-defence?" said a young fellow to a man of magnificent physique and noble bearing. The elder man looked at his questioner with a quiet smile, and then answered thoughtfully, "Yes; I have both studied and practised it." "Ah!" said the other, eagerly, "whose system did you adopt—Sutton's or Sayers'?" "Solomon's," was the reply; "and as I have now been in training for some time on his principles, I can confidently recommend his system." Somewhat abashed, the youth stammered out: "Solomon's! And what is the special point of his system of training?" "Briefly this," replied the other: "A soft answer turneth away wrath." For a moment the young man felt an inclination to laugh, and looked at his friend anxiously, to see whether he was serious. But a glance at the accomplished athlete was enough; and soon a very different set of feelings came over the youth, as his muscular companion added, "Try it!"—The Quiver.

For the Young.

THE SHELTERING ROSE.

BY EVA TRAVERS EVERED POOLE.

H, how hot and blinding the July sunshine emed! One longed to get out of the glare of e close, shadeless streets into the fair country, ith its cooling streams and sheltering trees. ut this was not possible for many.

Down one of the closest and dirtiest of our ondon streets a lady walked. She was think- g very deeply, for her eyes were cast on the ound, and her forehead was puckered into a ttle frown, evidently caused by perplexity. lose behind her trotted a little lad about eight ears old, carrying a basket. He looked hot id tired, too, poor little man, in spite of his hite sailor suit, and sturdy attempts to take ith his short, fat legs the same big steps as nt Dorothy.

Heville's eyes were very dark, and as sharp possible. He saw everything, so Aunt Doro- y often said, and I suppose it was because of is that he noticed to-day something Aunt orothy did not, until his sudden exclamation artled her: "Oh! O—h! a poor little butter- !"

Yes, there it lay upon a heap of unsavoury fuse thrown out into the road. A real butter- , and a white butterfly too, although its iled and broken wings told a sad story. Aunt orothy and her young charge stooped to look it.

"Is it dead, Auntie?" asked Heville, half lding his breath between pity and hope.

"I don't know—I think not," answered the dy; and then she bent down and lifted the gile little creature into her soft warm hand.

Heville looked at the crushed butterfly earn- tly, and his eyes filled with tears. He had a ing heart, especially for all God's dumb eation, and he could not bear to think that e little butterfly must die. Aunt Dorothy ld it close to him in her open palm, and gently w off the dust and dirt that clung to its once hite wings. As she did so Heville's eyes over- wed, and one big, bright drop fell on the oken-winged butterfly.

Hastily dashing back the troublesome tears, eville cried, "Auntie, let us carry it home to r garden. See! there is a cool place in basket, and it is empty now. There is thing to hurt the butterfly, and I think it ll live if we only carry it away from this hor- ble street."

Aunt Dorothy laid it tenderly in the bottom Heville's brown basket and together they nt homewards. Home was in a quiet side eet, close to one of the London parks, and ssessed a garden. Only a dozen yards square er all, but it was a garden, and looking, on at July day, as none but a well-kept garden uld look. Passing out into it through the ning-room window, Aunt Dorothy, followed sely by Heville, went straight up to a deep d, full blown rose, and right on its heart, in t light of the glorious sunshine, she laid the le butterfly.

Then she and Heville sat down and watched i They talked together in whispers, as though d voices would frighten away the creature's t lingering spark of life.

As they watched, slowly its life came back in. They saw it quiver and revive, the oping wings half-erect themselves and feebly tter; and then, as though loth to leave its lter, the poor little butterfly nestled closer o the warm, rich heart of the rose, and tly sank to rest.

'Isn't it lovely to see it alive?" exclaimed ville, quite excitedly dancing about. "I e it won't leave its shelter, Auntie. It is e now. It has been so silly to leave the green lds and beautiful flowers, and to wander out this hot city. But for us it would have died. Oh, foolish little butterfly, stay where you are, in the heart of the rose!"

And Heville always fancied the butterfly heard and understood him, for it hovered about the garden and the sheltering rose for several days; when at last he missed it he was only consoled by Aunt Dorothy's suggestion that, possibly, its short term of life being ended, it had lain down to sleep somewhere within the four walls of her tiny garden.

When Sunday came round, and Heville sat on the garden seat by his aunt's side, Bible in hand, ready for their usual half hour's talk, she referred to the white butterfly. Heville was interested at once, and delighted to hear that his aunt had made up a story about it, which she offered to tell him. So laying his head upon her shoulder, the little boy listened to her sweet voice rising and falling like music upon the quiet Sabbath air as it told him a beautiful parable.

"A little soul, fresh from the creating hand of God, fair, and white, and beautiful, wandered away from its happy home. Away, away, tempted by all sorts of foolish hopes and fancies—on, on, it knew not where, until it was sick and weary. The hot, cruel sun of temptation beat upon it, until it panted for breath; rough winds blew it hither and thither, until it was bruised, and broken, and bleeding; and presently, half dead, the soul sank downwards, earthwards, and was lost to all hope. What was to become of it? It lay ready to perish."

"Like the butterfly," murmured Heville, deeply interested, moving his head into an easier position.

"Like the butterfly," echoed his aunt.

"By and by there came One by; his heart was full of pity for all the lost and straying creatures of his hand. He was treading this earth on purpose 'to seek and to save the lost' (Luke xix. 10), and to help those who were 'ready to perish.' His eyes rested on the lost soul lying by the wayside with broken wings, and life nearly gone. And his great heart was moved with a wonderful pity. So He stooped and raised the soul from its terrible position. His tender tears washed away its sin-stain and its soil. His strong hand held it safely, and He carried it home. Home to a beautiful, safe place, all sunshine and sweetness.

"Then the poor little soul, crushed and broken still, with only the first flutter of a new life thrilling through it, felt itself laid to rest. A voice whispered softly to it, 'I am the Rose of Sharon' (Cant. ii. 1) and the soul sighed for joy, as it knew itself laid for ever on the mighty loving heart of Jesus, ever open to the souls that flee to Him for shelter. Soiled and sinful it knew itself to be, helpless and hopeless; yet because He had suffered it to rest upon his heart, hope revived, and it dared to bask in the sunshine of his tender mercy.

"There it found cleansing, comfort, and life, and as its dying hope revived under his power, it learnt to nestle closer to his great heart of pity day by day, resting there until earth's long night should be over, and heaven's light dawn for evermore.

"I am afraid my parable is far above your understanding, little Heville," said Aunt Dorothy, after a short pause, looking down into the dark eyes that met her own, dreamily and thoughtful beyond their wont. "I forgot I was talking to a very little boy."

"I understand about Jesus and the lost soul, Auntie, altho' I don't know the meaning of half the words you said. But they sounded lovely for all that," cunningly added the little flatterer.

"I am glad you caught a little of my meaning, dear. The story wove itself naturally in my mind after finding that poor little butterfly."

"I understood about Jesus, because I knew for sure and certain He saves just like that," said Heville simply.

And I think Heville was right. He had known, little lad though he was, that his soul had been far away from home and safety, until Jesus met him early on life's way. From that day, two years ago, he had rested in the arms of Jesus, and known himself safe. That was why he could follow Aunt Dorothy's parable better than she supposed.

And what about you, young reader? Has Jesus found you! Have you gone in your soiled and sinful state to Christ, "the Rose of Sharon," and found a shelter there? And are you resting in Him, safe and happy?

Then you, too, like Heville, have read in Aunt Dorothy's parable the story of your own salvation, and, like him, can joyfully say: "I understand it all, and I know for sure and certain that Jesus saves just like that!'

AN OPENING IN SOUTH RUSSIA.

WHILE the steamer, of which my husband has command was at Mariupol, S. Russia, about six weeks ago, there came on board to our Sabbath evening meeting an engineer, who had been superintending the construction of the new harbour at that town.

He was accompanied by a young man who resides in an English colony, about one hundred and twenty miles from Mariupol. This colony contains about three hundred and fifty inhabitants—young and old. They have no pastor or missionary amongst them, and with the exception of a yearly visit from Mr. Hard, of Odessa, they are entirely without the means of grace. Some of the people are longing to have a missionary pastor, who will instruct both young and old in those things pertaining to their eternal salvation.

If there is any one amongst your numerous readers who would feel led to go and labour in that neglected corner of the vineyard, he may obtain all the information from Mr. Thomas Wiskin, Thuzavsky Steel Company, Limited, Thuzova, S. Russia.

JESSIE CLARK.

INTENDING VISITORS TO THE CONTINENT will, writes a correspondent, find Evian les Bains, on the Haute Savoie side of the Lake of Geneva, a delightful place of holiday residence. For the sake of its mineral springs the French frequent it much during the summer. The town is little known to the English, but an important and beneficial influence might be exercised by earnest Christian visitors, who, while seeking rest and renewed vigour would truly live Christ. Service is held every Sunday morning in the French Protestant chapel, and some friends are desiring the fellowship of warm-hearted servants of Christ. Intending Christian visitors may obtain further information from Madame Mansfeld, Hôtel de la Paix, Evian les Bains, France.

FRIEDENHEIM, 133, Mildmay-road, N., was founded to afford to the friendless dying a quiet meeting-place with the Saviour. Lingering sufferers are constantly being discharged from the hospitals to die, and some of these are accommodated in this "Home of Peace," and lovingly told of the Lord of life and glory. Being kept open by the gifts of friends, the little Home has, since 1885, received about a hundred inmates, of the respectable poor class. During last year 29 patients were admitted, of whom sixteen died in the house, and four after leaving it. The care and comfort of the Home, and the blessed tranquillity which, by God's mercy, reigns within its walls, have prolonged and temporarily restored the lives of others who were received in an apparently hopeless state. Copies of the report, and further information, may be obtained from Miss Davidson, at the Home.

Mr. Baldwin in Morocco.

FROM letters received from our dear friend Mr. E. F. Baldwin during the past few months we make the following extracts. We are sure they will elicit loving sympathy and fervent prayer from all who know him, on both sides of the Atlantic:—

In a letter written from Casa Blanca, Morocco, Mr. Baldwin says:—Abraham, who met me here, is a beloved brother, refined, intelligent, devoted, simple, and winning. He goes from here to Morocco to see his mother. After Ramadan (the Moslem fast of a month, soon beginning) he and Musa hope to come to me to Mogador, bringing several native Christians for instruction, with a view to permanent "Matt. x." work. This will probably occupy us during the summer months, when travelling would be oppressive. Also, then Musa and Abraham (both Shluh and Arabic scholars) are to translate parts of the New Testament into Shluh, in Arabic character, the funds for printing which I have promised.

I came here about ten days ago by steamer, travelling deck, with Mr. Martin and two native Christians. I wanted to meet Abraham, and go into the mountains to visit the new flocks—four of them. But Ramadan prevents now, and Abraham must go to his mother, who has been turned out of her home for the name of Christ. God's plan had reference to this place, which has been greatly stirred, hundreds coming in a day, and interest growing into excitement, until, to-day, the Kaid (governor) stationed soldiers in the streets leading to our house, temporarily rented, and prevented anyone from coming. Could you have witnessed the stirring scenes here since we came—the crowds coming all day and every day, the throngs in the street when the doors were shut for us to eat and rest a little, the eager attention—you would see how admirable it is to come down to the level of the people, and give them the Gospel. We are living here in utter simplicity, and yet are in health and need no more than we have. We hope to have a permanent station here. Some have believed, many others, both Jews and Moors, wish to take a stand, but fear to. One of the brightest and most intelligent converts God has given us in Southern Morocco was converted here at once on our arrival, as soon as he heard the word. He wishes to devote himself to "Matt. x." work. Both Jews and Moors here are "more noble" than elsewhere I have been, and for the same reason that the Bereans were. They are singularly free from prejudice. But now, after more than a week of remarkable attention and interest, the door seems suddenly closed.

Another of our earlier converts has been whipped by the Kaid most brutally, being held down with his face on the ground by four men at his hands and feet, while two others applied the scourges. Another soldier stood on the back of his neck to prevent his writhing, and pressed his head into the earth. His body is an awful sight, at which I have wept and shuddered again and again as I have washed his stripes. His wrists and ankles they held and cut with cords, stretching him as they whipped him; and round his neck they twisted the scourges they had used on him, as they took him, half dead, to prison, twisting them until he was nearly choked. He was also injured internally, and seriously, we fear, for he has been spitting blood; and, although I am writing on the eighth day since it occurred, he cannot walk or stand yet without vomiting, suffers much pain and fever, and is still black from the scourging.

We got him out of the prison at once, that same day, by showing his innocence of a charge of theft, which was the ostensible, but not the real, cause of the scourging. A very slight inquiry brought the real thief to light, showing that our poor brother had nothing to do with it. It was only a pretext for scourging him for being a Christian. When the soldiers took him before the Kaid they said, "Here is one of them that goes to the Christians." At once the Kaid said, "Throw him down and scourge him." They taunted him, and said they would put him into a pit, and pour petroleum on him, and set him on fire. When I applied for his release the Kaid refused, and said he would kill him if he wished. But through the American Consular Agent I insisted, and got him. When he was brought out of prison he looked like a corpse; I will never forget the sight. It was heart-sickening. Mr. Sheehan and I supported him between us to the Kaid, for he had to appear before him. While there, when my back was turned for a moment, one of the soldiers struck him on the mouth with his fist until the blood flowed. He lies in one of our rooms here, weak and full of pain, and unable to get into any easy position. But he is full of trust and joy in the Lord. He rejoices in having suffered shame for Jesus' sake.

I have affidavits made before the American Consular Agent proving the man's innocence of any offence; and also have the certificate of the German doctor to the extent of his injuries. It is by no means sure that he will recover.

You may imagine the terror of the poor converts. Some have left the place; others fear to come near us. At the Lord's Supper last night, however, some eight or ten of the converts were present (we had over a score in all), coming in through the darkness. But the work is greatly interfered with here for a time. Still, there is growing blessing in the interior, but with persecution also. I want exceedingly to go to them in the interior, but dare not now, for fear I will bring more trouble on them. Even letters are watched, and apt to be intercepted. So we cannot use the ordinary native courier, but must send, as I am just doing, by special messenger. Abraham writes of just leaving Morocco city to go to a distant place, to baptize twenty men who are awaiting it, having been converted through other converts, whom even Abraham has not yet seen.

LETTER FROM MR. MARTIN.

DEAR SIR,—I am naturally interested in the discussion re "The Question of the Hour—Foreign Missions," for I was the one who accompanied Mr. Baldwin on his first journey.

"Facts are stubborn things." We have proved that God is able and willing to supply the needs and keep in perfect health and happiness those who go out obeying to the letter our Lord's commands, according to Matt. x. Why then such an outcry? We ask money from no one; God will provide! Abraham, a Moor, converted about eight months ago, has returned from a six months' journey on these lines, during which time he has baptized fifty-six Mohammedans, and has translated three of the Gospels into the Shluh language. "Christ is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." Africa is the same as it was 1800 years ago, and remains steeped in darkness. Money, money! is the cry; but Christ tells us to give our money to feed the poor. He Himself undertakes for the missionary. It is said that "The missionary goes far away to the heathen. He goes for life, and goes perhaps among uncivilised savages" [I went among uncivilised savages, the Zulus and Basutos in the Transvaal, before my conversion for my own amusement, and received great hospitality, for it is their custom to entertain strangers gratis, and a house is always reserved for this purpose], "and to climates which are injurious and may be, without the greatest care, fatal to his health."

Why not then go out in faith, claiming such promises as "Behold, I give unto you power to tread upon serpents, and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy, and nothing shall by any means hurt you"? Was not this promise, which is conditional on obedience, given for those called to live and work in deadly climates?

Faith, not money, is the need of the day. Christ's last words were: "These signs shall follow them that believe: in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents, and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them—a valuable promise in this country where the people are continually poisoning each other as well as strangers. The question to ask ourselves is: Are we really believers? for Christ says: "When the Son of Man cometh shall He find faith on the earth." Where are we to draw the line? At what period did supernatural manifestations cease?

Are there now no Christians in the world who have received miraculous answers to prayer?

Mr. Baldwin and I came here a week ago with two native converts. The people are much interested, and hundreds have listened to the glad tidings, but to-day the doors have been closed. There is one applicant for baptism.

Yours faithfully in our Redeemer,

Mogador. THOMAS MARTIN.

[The above was written some months ago, when Mr. Martin was in Morocco. He is at present in England.]

MISSION WORK IN TRAVANCORE.

THE year 1888 will long be memorable to the people of South Travancore for the desolation which the cholera scourge brought to many homes. In the report of the Nagercoil Mission, South Travancore, in connection with the London Missionary Society, we read that on the whole the mortality was less among the Christians than among their idolatrous and improvident neighbours. The Mission has fifty-three congregations, with 6527 adherents. There are sixty-eight schools, with 2860 scholars.

The people contribute cheerfully to the carrying on of the work of God. Not a few of the catechists bear testimony to good work being done by women in their congregations. We quote the following from the report of the catechist at Tamereiculam:—"The deacons have been a great help to me in visiting the sick, and in conducting prayer-meetings in houses. Their good example is followed by many of the church members. Of those, I should make particular mention of an old woman. Having resolved to work for the salvation of sinners and for the glory of God, she regularly visits not less than twenty houses among Christians, and about ten heathen houses, and also holds prayer-meetings there. She has a collection-box, which she takes to the houses and collects whatever the people will drop into it. Mainly through her efforts some Christians who were very irregular in attending Divine worship are now regular. We have also received a few converts from the heathen through her influence. Once I happened to go to a prayer-meeting conducted by her, and to my great astonishment I saw there an old Mohammedan woman, more than sixty years old, kneeling down for prayer with the rest. I was told afterwards that through the influence of the above-said woman she had come to the true knowledge of the Saviour."

Nagercoil is the southernmost Mission District in India, and the oldest in Travancore, having been founded in 1805. The missionary is Rev. A. L. Allan, who superintends four native ministers, and seven other agents.

GOSPEL PURITY ASSOCIATION.—On Sunday afternoon, a meeting of men was held in connection with the Special Evangelical Mission, at the Wesleyan Chapel, Fernhead-road, Queen's Park, W. Mr. Samuel Ford, hon. travelling representative of the Association, delivered an impressive address. Rev. B. Scott, B.A., minister in charge, having spoken a few words on the need of the work, some twenty names were given in to form a branch of the Association in connection with this church.

ɛ subjoined article is quoted from The ord, as the most intelligent and the fairest ch has appeared in any of the papers :—

he name and work of Dr. Barnardo are so l known and highly appreciated by the blic at large that any case relating to his omes" at once commands attention. The rt of Appeal—affirming the decision of the rt below—have decided against the Doctor a case relating to the care and custody of a ld thirteen years of age named Mary Ann , and to avoid any misconception, it is well state the real facts of the case. The girl in stion was found last summer running wild ut the streets of Bristol, and was by bene- ent persons in that city taken to Dr. Bar- do's Home at Ilford, where she was gladly eived. The account of the child's surround- s, as given to Dr. Barnardo, was most piti- e. Her father was dead, and she was pic- ed as living with a mother of bad character, ose so-called husband did all he could to con- minate the child; sent her out to beg in the eets, and beat her mercilessly when she did bring home as much money as he expected. would seem that all these statements were not ly borne out by the actual evidence subse- ntly given in the case; but Dr. Barnardo ieved them, and, as we think, reasonably ieved them. It is impossible to obtain legal of as to the exact circumstances of every waif d stray before assuming the responsibility of or her care. Dr. Barnardo took in the ld, and very prudently and properly obtained formal agreement, signed by the mother, king over the charge of the child to him, d authorising him to maintain her in Eng- nd or to send her to Ontario, in Canada, ere an important branch of the well-known Homes" is situate. So far, everything was ll; but the child was still in England when on cember 14 last the mother made a demand at her child should be returned to her. Dr. rnardo, on receipt of this demand, remem- red all that he had heard of the character of e mother, and the early cruelty shown to e girl, and her vicious surroundings, and to oid any return to such a life he at once nded over the child to a French Canadian dy named Madame Raumont, who took her road. The substantial question before the urts, when shorn of legal technicalities, was ether Dr. Barnardo can be compelled to get e child back, and whether if he now finds impossible to do so, that is to say, if Madame aumont really insists on keeping the child, r. Barnardo can be punished for sending the d abroad after the mother had written to mand her back.

Of the high aims and pure motives that have roughout actuated Dr. Barnardo there can no doubt. While deciding against him, the urt of Appeal, and particularly Lord Esher, ho presided, expressed their unqualified belief his rectitude of purpose. We regret, how- er, to feel that Dr. Barnardo, as the law at esent stands, has placed himself in a position sagreeable to himself, and in conflict with the urts of Law, and that without any corre- onding benefit to the fatherless girl, whose elfare it has throughout been his sole object promote. Under our law no such thing as gal adoption is known. This is not so in every untry, but with us a parent cannot irrevocably ve up to another his rights and responsibili- es with regard to his children. Any agree- ent, such as that made with Dr. Barnardo in he present case, is good and valid while it lasts, ut can be determined by the parent at any oment.

If the child Mary Ann Tye had been sent broad before the mother demanded her back, nd in accordance with the terms of the ritten agreement, no complaint could possibly ave been made. It was because this was done fter the mother had demanded her return that he present case was possible at all. Whether ur law does not require change in this respect is a grave question, but we incline to think that it does. If a parent is prepared to give over all his rights and responsibilities to another, we see no sufficient reason why he should be allowed at any moment to put an end to the arrangement. The person adopting the child has not voluntarily expended labour and money, thought and affection, without an object. That object may be the benefit of the child, and nothing else; it may be to bring up someone to comfort declining years, or to fill a vacant place in the heart.

But, whatever the motive of the adopted parent, when the natural parent has agreed, he should not be allowed to resume his rights unless the welfare of the child itself requires it. That would be a question of fact on which the Courts could well decide; but, as the law now stands, the benefit of the child can hardly be considered. It is true that, were the child's home shown to be grossly immoral at the time, the Court could and would decline to restore; but, in the absence of something very strong indeed, the claims of the parents are in all cases paramount. Our Courts have full powers, but they are slow to exercise them against the wishes of parents. A Bill on the subject, known as the Adoption of Children Bill, was introduced into the House of Lords, but after a short discussion on Tuesday it was withdrawn.

In delivering his judgment, Lord Esher stated his view that in all probability to remain with Dr. Barnardo would be the best thing for the child. None the less, Dr. Barnardo must now make every effort to bring her back to England, and the Court will then decide whether or not she is to be sent back to her mother. In the present case it appears that in no event is that likely to happen. It is understood that the girl's father was a Roman Catholic, and that in all probability it is to the care of a Roman Catholic sisterhood that the child will be entrusted. This prospect in no way affected the legal aspect or the issue of the case, but it necessarily adds to our feeling of sympathy with Dr. Barnardo's efforts to retain the child under his own influence. He took over the child with the full consent of her only surviving parent, under an express agreement in writing for two years certain at least. Can we wonder that he felt justified in doing—nay, felt it his bounden duty to do—all in his power to retain the influence given him?

REV. JACOB FRESHMAN, of the Hebrew Christian work, New York, preached on Sunday morning in the City-road Wesleyan Chapel, and in the evening at Highbury Park Presbyterian Church. Alike in stating Israel's sad need, and in appealing for warm Christian sympathy on their behalf, the preacher's words were felt to be as forcible as they were truly heart-breathed. Mr. Freshman intends to remain on this side a little longer, visiting Scotland and Ireland in the autumn, to preach and lecture. Communications to him may be addressed to our care.

THE METHODIST "TOYNBEE HALL."—At the Wesleyan Conference at Sheffield on Friday last, Rev. Dr. Moulton, of the Leys School, Cambridge, brought forward a project which has been elaborated by himself and Rev. J. Scott Lidgett for establishing a settlement in London for religious and social work, somewhat on the lines of Toynbee Hall. Dr. Moulton spoke of the great power for usefulness which the Wesleyans possess in the number of their young men in the public schools and universities, and said he believed that the Methodist Church would not be doing its duty to these young men if it did not provide means for their doing social and religious work among the poorer masses of their fellow countrymen. It is intended to build a house in South London which would serve as a reading-room, laboratory, workshops, gymnasium, and lecture hall. Recreative evening classes, university extension lectures, and the usual appliances of social work would be put in operation. There would also be a room or chapel for direct mission work. The cost would be about £10,000, and a guarantee fund of about £500 a year has been secured for the first three years. After being supported by Revs. Dr. Rigg and Dr. Bowman Stephenson, the proposal was unanimously accepted by the Conference.

"TO KNOW HIM."

How can I know the great Almighty God,
Enthroned in majesty beyond my ken;
So great, so wondrous grand, so glorious,
Centre of strength, of power, of law, of all?
I know He is. By Him all things do move—
This world with all its myriad mysteries
Is but the edge of mystery more profound,
Hid in his presence unapproachable.
I know Him. He is God, who rules the world,
Bestowing bliss on such as keep his laws;
But in his justice breaking forth in wrath
On such as heedless or unmindful are.
I know He rules in earth, and sky, and sea,
And sends alike the sunshine and the storm;
I know He giveth and sustaineth life;
And man in all his moods must bow to Him.
Reason cries out, I know that He is God;
But yet my soul deplores, I know Him not.
For fear of wrath the burden of my sin
Quite weighs me down, and keeps me back from Him.
Oh, it is agony to bear this load of guilt,
To live in terror of the pangs of law.
How shall I know Thee, God, that thought of Thee
May give me peace, and take away all fear?

Oh, happy day, when Jesus did reveal
Unto my longing soul the love of God
By sweet compassion and forgiving grace,
And taught me how to love, and thus to know.
I know Him now in resurrection power,
In his almightiness from sin to save,
His strength to keep life steadfast and secure,
His love unchanging in the midst of change.

Yes, now I know, Christ's life hath brought me near To God; in Him my Father I behold,
Robbed of the awful terror of the law,
Robed in the beauty of his boundless love.
What reason failed to grasp because of fear
I know; for faith and love have made it clear.

BILLINGSGATE CHRISTIAN MISSION.

On Tuesday last week, the Lord Mayor and Mrs. Bevan laid the foundation stones of the new premises for this Mission. At a meeting afterwards held in the Coal Exchange, the Lord Mayor received an address, which Mr. Bevan read. Therein was rendered an exhaustive account of the Mission, which has now been in existence for some fourteen years, having grown until special premises became absolutely necessary. Friends interested in the work have contributed £1500, which they will (so Mr. Vicary, the missionary, said) "please increase to £5000."

These interesting facts having been stated, Rev. Mark Guy Pearse gave the workers a few cheery words, being followed by Sir Henry Peek, who alluded to the great improvement that has been effected in Billingsgate during the last twenty-five years. He also said that the Mission could not have a better missionary than Mr. Vicary, who is, in fact, "the man for the work."

CORRECTION.—A correspondent writes us that the recent introduction of high Ritualism in Handsworth, Birmingham, is not at the Parish Church, but at one higher up the hill. The communication from which we quoted spoke of it as the Church at Handsworth which led to the mistake. Unhappily, the facts are not disputed.

THE CHRISTIAN VIGILANCE AND GIRLS' RESCUE ASSOCIATION carries on an increasingly important work. During the last three years, over 300 inmates have been received and helped in the Homes at Reading. Many girls have been rescued from the depths of misery; while others have been prevented from entering upon lives of sin and shame. The need for a commodious central Home has for some time been sadly felt, to enable the superintendents, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Day, to admit cases which in the past they have been painfully compelled to refuse. At last eligible premises have been secured between Reading and Swindon, the building being known as West Hendred Manor House, Steventon, Berks. Standing in its own grounds, and being quite private, the place is in every way admirably adapted for the important purpose for which it is now being used. Inmates are received into the Homes from all parts of the kiugdom, without vote or committee-meeting, as soon as vacancies arise.

A New House of Rest.

WILTON HOUSE, HASTINGS.

"Come ye yourselves apart and rest awhile" is an invitation of which Christian workers but too little avail themselves, especially those engaged in large cities where the hurry and bustle surrounding them seem to impel them to a like excess of activity. But a time comes when the overstrung nerves can no longer endure the strain; warnings have not been wanting of the need of rest; but, these being disregarded, a "breakdown" but too frequently ensues. A brief rest taken at the right time will avert, in many cases, a long-enforced absence from the happy scene of labour, and it is a truer economy to let the "stitch in time" save the "nine."

But there are many weary workers who would only too gladly avail themselves of a brief respite, did their means allow, or did they know of a suitable spot where they might enjoy quiet spiritual intercourse with other resting brethren, as well as change of air.

Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, the director of the Evangelistic Mission, having had this fact strongly laid upon him, four years ago took a house at 20, Devonshire-road, Hastings, for the purpose of supplying it. Through the liberality of a Christian lady, the house was furnished throughout as a memorial of her departed sister, for the purpose of a House of Rest for Christian workers, of both sexes and of all denominations, who, on payment of a moderate amount within their means, were to have the privilege of a brief rest and change, which otherwise they could not enjoy. A few were received free of charge, especially foreign missionaries.

The house, accommodating twelve visitors, was soon fully occupied, and has continued so for the greater part of the time since, the abundant sunshine and genial climate of Hastings rendering it so desirable for such a resting-place in summer and winter for worn and weary workers. The institution was made as homelike as possible, and many who heard the Master's call to "come apart and rest awhile" have here found renewed health of mind and body, in quiet rest and rambles by the sea, through the parks, and in neighbouring woodlands.

The accumulating number of testimonies received to this effect created the desire that a larger and more suitable house might be provided for the purpose, especially as the applications often greatly exceeded the possibility of accommodation; and it was much desired to obtain this along the sea-front, which would doubtless increase the benefit derived by visitors, whose stay, in most cases, is necessarily limited to two or three weeks (some to a few days). Nearly two years more, however, passed without any suitable premises being found, but latterly the way opened in a somewhat remarkable manner, indicating to Mr. Hurditch that he should go forward in building a house at West Marina, on a site admirably adapted for the purpose, situated near the new station. The premises form the two end houses (the internal plans of which were altered to suit the purpose) of a terrace in course of erection, forming the western boundary of the green and garden now being laid out close to the sea. Accommodation will be provided for thirty visitors, in addition to the usual staff, the rooms commanding bright and extensive views, while every possible convenience will be found for their comfort.

A confirmation of the Lord's guidance in this matter came in a legacy of £1000 to this part of the work, at the very time the decision had to be made as to the purchase.

The cost of this freehold building will be £3750. There will be required for additional furniture and necessary outlay, £750, bringing the total cost to £4500, toward which there has been received, including the above legacy, about £1300. It is hoped that the Lord's people will contribute the remaining sum required, in order to start this work afresh, free of debt or rent charge for mortgage, and to meet the deficit between the annual expenditure and payments by visitors.

It is intended to reserve a few rooms for those not wholly engaged in Christian work, and whose means will allow them to pay a higher rate, who would appreciate intercourse with those staying there from time to time. This will assist in diminishing the amount of expenses over ordinary receipts.

The house, bearing the old name, which has now become well known, of Wilton House, was opened yesterday (Thursday), when special meetings of considerable interest were held in the afternoon and evening.

It is hardly necessary for words of ours to commend so practical and important a scheme as this to the generous support of our readers, especially those whose circumstances enable them to enjoy change and rest each year, at home or abroad, and we hope that many will come forward to assist in providing similar benefit for those for whom this house is specially erected. Mr. Hurditch's address is 164, Alexandra-road, St. John's Wood, London, N.W.

THE STUDY OF INEBRIETY.—The President and Council of the Society for the Study of Inebriety gave a reception to Mr. Clark Bell, of the New York Bar, in the rooms of the Medical Society of London, on Friday last. The president, Dr. Norman Kerr, referred to Mr. Bell's advocacy of a more humane jurisprudence, and especially of a fairer judicial treatment of inebriates, who were diseased persons, requiring medical care, and not punishment. Mrs. Hind Smith told the story of a man who killed a beloved child in his first drunken fit, and was executed—an event which had left a lasting impression on her mind, and stimulated her to temperance and rescue work. Rev. Lewis Jones, of U.S.A., Rev. G. W. McCree, and others spoke. Mr. Bell, in replying, dwelt mainly on the gross injustice of punishing persons for acts committed when drunk, and utterly ignorant of evil design.

ANOTHER MISSIONARY MARTYR

REV. ALEXANDER BAIN, LIVINGSTONIA.

Tidings have come by telegraph of the dea of Rev. J. Alexander Bain, Free Church Scotland missionary at Bandawé, Lake Nyass East Central Africa, in May last. Mr. Bai who was seventh in descent of a line of Sco tish ministers, was ordained and sent out 1883, being then twenty-four years of age. H was a man full of promise, and his work Ukukwe (fifty miles up the Stevenson Roa connecting Nyassa and Tanganyika) was suc as to furnish high hopes of future service. H explored where the white man had never gon learned new languages and reduced them writing; erected mission buildings; taugh preached, and guided into the ways of peace warlike tribe.

Mr. Bain had, as everyone going there ha frequent fits of fever, and on one occasion h to rise from his sick-bed to dig the grave of companion; but he recovered, and went earnestly with his labour of love. In th beginning of 1888 Dr. Kerr Cross ordered hi home for the restoration of his health, and had put his luggage on board the Ilāla, a was just starting, when the natives among who he had laboured came and knelt on the shor entreating him to stay and save them from th Arabs; for it was just then that the disastrou attack of the manstealers began. Of course h stayed; few Christian men, and no Africa missionaries we know of, could have had th firmness to resist such an appeal. At firs vigour seemed to return and he worked hard but another year's toil and the fearful haras ment inflicted by the Arabs have made him a rea martyr at the age of thirty-one. His room wa ready for him at Aberdeen, his widowed moth and a sister were joyfully expecting him la week, and each ring at the bell was looked a as likely to bring a telegram announcing h arrival in London. The Master knows that w cannot see Himself in his glory, except wit eyes purged by such tears as they are now she ding. But He "puts them into his bottle an his book" (Ps. lvi. 8), to be brought forth e long as the new wine of the kingdom; an others will come forward to take up Mr. Bain work.

We subjoin a portion of his last letter: will now be read with a deepened interest, an we trust the facts recorded in it will lead man to labour and pray for the liberation of th poor Africans from such oppression:—

"Ukukwe, March 26, 1889.

"At daybreak, on Friday the 15th of th month, we were roused from our sleep by number of shots fired in rapid succession, an at no very great distance from us. We we told that it was merely Or-Kzukuru, as th natives call him, who had attacked Mwasyogh our nearest neighbour. Two large bands Arabs were with Merere. The surprise w complete. Upwards of thirty women with the babies, and several young girls were capture The men, scarcely awakened, tried to defe themselves and to save their wives and chi dren, but were driven back by the murdero fire of the Arab guns, and finally driven fro their villages. The miscreants, having secure intrenched themselves in a stockade of bambo and banana stems, settled down to enjoy ther selves in their own brutish way, gorging ther selves on the spoil, and glutting their sava lust by outraging the women and young girl Two children who disturbed their beastly revel were flung into the flames of some burnin houses. All next day and the next again we spent in plunder, destroying the food, an burning the villages of which they had mad themselves masters. Two poor women escap by night.

"The interest excited at home about this pa of Africa is no good if it ends in mere excit ment. I wish people could only know of an see, as we know and we see, the oppression an slavery and bloodshed of which these cru Arab invaders are the cause." A. M. S.
